> FATHER IN GOD:

Lord Bishop of LINCOLNE, Lord Keeper of the GREAT SEALE of

Right Reverend and Honourable:

Hefe PILGRIMS deliuering a Historic of the World in their owne Trauels by Sea and Land, not onely needed authoritie from the Admiraltie, but fearing suspition of Rict without warrantable assemblie, become humble Sutors for your Lordships fauour. So shall they in the approbation of both (to apply by a warrant of Ego dixi, dy eftis, the Patriarchs mysticall Dreame to our Historicall purpose) Gen. 28.12.

finde a Scala Cali to alcend from the ground where they are proftrate Petitioners, to the Princes Highnesse, whence authorised they may againe descend and become the Commons of Common Readers. Order requires a Medium betwixt Princely Height and his Lowlinesse, whose function is also tearmed Holy Orders, as further tying him to that equall inequalitie; wherein hee beseecheth your Lordship as by speciall Office and in Proprietie to owne that which hee hath presumed to offer to the Prince in Capite, Quemadmodum sub opiimo rege omnia. Rex imperio possidet , Domini dominio. Ad reges potestas

Sence Benefity. pertinet , ad fingulos proprietas. Many are the reasons which moued the Author to obtrude his PI L-GRIMS on your Lordship; because he is deeply obliged Yours for former fauours, euen then when you were initiated in the Mysteries of Honour (learning by feruice to Command) in the Discipline of that Honorable Worthy, Lord Chancellor E G E R TON! because some conceptions of this Worke were in your Honourable Iurisdiction of Westminster, whither lest some traduce Trauellers for Vagrants, they returne in hope of Santtuarie, not so much trusting to the ancient Liberties. as to your Lordships liberall respect to literate endeauours : because these Trauellers adventuring the world, seeke like Iacob at his going and returne, a Reuerend Fathers Blessing and Confirmation. The Author likewise being called on for his promised Europe, submits himfelfe to your Lordlhips Order, heere tendring of that debt, what hee is able, in readie payment. The worke it felfe also being a Librarie in this kind, presents it selfe to your Honour, the Founder of two famous Libraries, one in Westminster, (where the Stones & renued Fabrikes speake your Magnificence) the other in that famous Nurserie of Arts and Vertue Saint I OHN'S Colledge in Cambridge, which sometime knew you a hopefull Sonne, but now acknowledgeth your Lord(hip a happie Father, where also the Author first conceived with this Travelling Geniw, whereof (without trauelling) he hath trauelled euer fince. Learning. the Aduancer of your Honour, hath fecured her welwillers not to bee rejected in whatfoeuer indeauours (Scribimus indocti, doctiq.) to aduance Learning. The greatnesse of Nature to goodnesse of Nature, varietie of Estates to a prime Pillar of State, the Historie of Religions to a Religious Prelate, of Antiquities to an Antiquarie, cannot bee altogether

vnwelcome : that I mention not the dependance of London Ministers Liuings (fined by the Times iniquitie) on your Lordships equal Sentence. These Causes have moved; One hath inforced; these PIL-GRIMES are your Servants, fitly to called à Servando, faued by your Aug. & C.D. & Lordships hand when they were giving up the ghost, despairing through a fatall stroke of euer seeing light.

Most humbly therefore, sue vnto your Honour, these PILGRIMES for acknowledgement, efteeming your Lordships Name in fore-front a cognilance of bleft Libertie and best Seruice; Now when Janus sends many with gratefull emulations to present their acclamations of a New Yeere, presenting (a wordie rather then worthy Present) a World, yea, a New world, ingreat part one Age younger to mens knowledge then America, fometimes stilled by that Name. I had written other Causes of my addresse to your Honour, but dare not proceed to interrupt Others more weightie. In all humble earnestnesse beseecheth, now in this Festivall time, the Author with his PILGRIMES to finde HospiDEDICATORIE.

tall entertainment, not at your Honours table, where Great affaires of Church and State are feasted (except some recreation some times permit) but with Schollers and Gentlemen in the Hall, which will welcome fuch Guests as your Lordship shall Countenance. So thall you encourage euer to pray for the increase of your Lordships happinesse

Happie Seruice of his MAIESTIE.

The Iournall of Frier WILLIAM DERVERVQVIS. a French-man, of the Order of the Minorite Friers, Dnto the East parts of the World, Anno Dom. 1253.

flance betweene Synopolis and Cassaria. Infomuch that the distance from those points or places to Constantinople, in length and breadth is about feuen hundred miles : and feuen hundred miles also from thence to the East, namely, to the Countrey of Hiberia, which is a Province of Georgia. At the Province of Gafaria or Caffaria, wee arrived, which Province is in a man-G: Tria ner, three square, having a Citie on the West part thereof called Kersona, wherein Saint Clewent fuffered Martyrdome. And fayling before the faid Citie, wee faw an Iland, in which a Church is faid to be built by the hands of Angels. But about the midft of the faid Propince toward the South, as it were, vpon a sharpe Angle or Point, standeth a Citie called Soldaia, direct-Soldaia. ly against Synopolis. And there doe all the Turkie Merchants, which Traffique into the North Countries, in their Iourney outward, arrive, and as they returne home-ward also from Russia, 10 and the faid Northerne Regions, into Turkie. The forefaid Merchants transport thither Ermines and gray Furres, with other rich and coffly Skinnes. Others carrie Clothes made of Cotton or Bombaft, and Silke, and divers kinds of Spices. But vpon the East part of the faid Province ftandeth a Citie called Matriga, where the River Tanais dischargeth his ftreames into the Sea of Pontus, the mouth whereof is twelve miles in breadth. For this River, before it entreth into the Sea of Pontus, maketha little Sea, which bath in breadth and length feuen hundred miles, and it it is in no place thereof aboue fixe paces deepe, whereupon great Veffels cannot faile ouer it. Howbeit the Merchants of Conftantinople, arriving at the forelaid Citie of . Materta. fend their Barkes vuto the River of Tanais to buy dryed fiftes, Sturgeons, Thoffes, Barbils. and an infinite number of other fishes. The foresaid Province of Cassaria, is compassed in with 20 the Sea on three fides thereof : namely, on the Weit-fide , where Kerfona , the Citie of Saint Clement is situate : on the South-side the Citie of Soldaia, whereat we arrived : on the East-side Maricandis, and there stands the Citie of Matriga, vpon the mouth of the River Tanais. Beyond the faid mouth standeth Zikia, which is not in subjection vnto the Tartars: also the peo-Zika. ple called Suem and Hibers, towards the East, who likewise are not under the Tartars Dominion. Moreouer, towards the South, standeth the Citie of Tratefunda, which hatha Gouernour proper to it felfe, named Guydo, being of the Linage of the Emperours of Constantinople, and is Subject vnto the Tartars. Next vnto that is Synopolis, the Citie of the Soldan of Turkie, who likewise is in subjection vnto them. Next vnto these lyeth the Countrey of Vasacina, whose Sonne is called Aftar, of his Grand-father by the Mothers fide, who is not in subjection. All the 30 Land from the mouth of Tanais West-ward as farre as Danubius is under their Jurisdiction, Yea. beyond Danubins also, towards Constantinople, Valakia, which is the Land of Allanus, and Bulgaria minor, as farre as Solonia, doe all pay Tribute vnto them. And besides the Tribute impoled, they have also, of late yeares, exacted of every houshold an Axe, and all such Corne as they found lying on heapes. We arrived therefore at Soldaia, the twelfth of the Kalends of June. And divers Merchants of Constantinople, which were arrived there before vs, reported that certayne Messengers were comming thither from the Holy Land, who were desirous to trauell vnto Sartach. Notwithstanding, I my selfe had publikely given out vpon Palme Sunday within the Church of Santia Sophia, that I was not your nor any other mans Meffenger, but that I travelled unto these Infidels according to the Rule of our Order. And being arrived, the said Merchants 40 admonished me to take diligent heed what I spake : because they having reported mee to bee a Messenger, if I should say the contrary, that I were no Messenger, I could not have free passage granted vnto me. Then I spake after this manner vnto the Governours of the Citie, or rather vnto their Lieutenants, because the Gouernours themselues were gone to pay Tribute vnto Baatu, and were not as yet returned. We heard of your Lord Sartach (quoth 1) in the Holy Land, that he was become a Christian : and the Christians were exceeding glad thereof, and especially the most Christian King of France, who is there now in Pilgrimage, and fighteth against the Saracens, to redeeme the holy places out of their hands : wherefore I am determined to goe vnto Sartach, and to deliuer vnto him the Letters of my Lord the King, wherein hee admonisheth him concerning the good and commoditie of all Christendome. And they received vs with 50 gladnesse, and gaue se entertaynment in the Cathedrall Church. The Bishop of which Church was with Sartach, who told me many good things concerning the faid Sartach, which afterward I found to be nothing fo. Then put they vs to our choice, whether wee would have Carts and Oxen, or packe-horses to transport our Carriages. And the Merchants of Constantinople aduifed me, not to take Carts of the Citizens of Soldana, but to buy covered Carts of mine owne (fuch as the Ruffians carry their Skinnes in) and to put all our Carriages, which I would daily take out, into them : because, if I should vie Horses, I must be constrayed at every baite to take downe my Carriages, and to lift them vp againe on fundry Horses backes : and besides, that I should ride a more gentle pace by the Oxendrawing the Carts. Wherefore, contenting my selfe with their euill counfell, I was trauelling vnto Sartach two monethes, which I could have done 60 in one, if I had gone by Horfe. Ibrought with me from Conft antimople (being by the Merchants aduised so to doe) pleasant Fruits, Muskadell Wine, and delicate Bisket bread to present vnto

the Gouernours of Soldara, to the end I might obtayne free pallage : because they looke fauou-rably vpon no man which commeth with an empty hand. All which things I bestowed in one of my Carts (not finding the Gouernours of the Citie at home) for they told me, if I could carry them to Sarrach, that they would be most acceptable vnto him. Wee tooke our Journey therefore about the Kalends of June, with foure couered Carts of our owne, and with two other which we borrowed of them, wherein we carried our bedding to rest vpon in the night, and they allowed vs fine Horses to ride vpon. For there were just fine persons in our company : namely, I my f-life and mine affociate Friet Bartholomew of Cremona, and Gofer the Bearer of thele Prefenes, the man of God Turgemannus, and Nicolus my Scruant, whom I bought at Conftantinople, with some part of the Almes bestowed vpon me. Moreouer, they allowed vs two men, which draue our Carrs and gaue attendance vnto our Oxen and Horfes. There bee high Promontories Io on the Sea thour from Kerfona vivo the mouth of Tanais. Allo there are fortie Caft's between Kersona and Soldaia, every one of which almost have their proper Languages: amongst whom there were many Gother, who spake the Dutch Tongue. Beyond the faid Mountaynes towards the North, there is a most beautifull Wood growing on a Plaine full of Fountaynes and Freshets. And beyond the Wood there is a mightie plaine Champian, continuing fine dayes Iourney vnto the very extreamitie and borders of the laid Prouince North-ward, and there it is a narrow forcing Ishmus or neck Land, having Sea on the East and West fides thereof, infomuch that there is a Ditch made from one Sea vnto the other. In the fame Plaine (before the Tartars forang vo) were the Comanians wont to inhabit, who compelled the fore-taid Cities and Castles to pay Tribute vnto them. But when the Tarsars came vpon them, the multitude of the Comanians and entred into the fore-faid Prouince, and fiedall of them, even vnto the Sea shoare, beeing in such extreme Famine, that they which were aliue, were constrayned to eate vp those which were dead : and (as a Merchant reported vnto me who faw it with his owne eyes) that the liuing men deuoured and tore with their teeth, the raw flesh of the dead, as Dogges would gnaw vpon Carrion. Towardes the Borders of the faid Prouince there bee many great Lakes: vpon the Bankes whereof are Salt-pits or Fountaynes, the water of which io loone as it entreth into the Lake, becommeth hard Salt like vnto Ice. And out of those Salt-pits Baa's and Sartach haue great Reuenues: for they repayre thither out of all Ruffia, for Salt : and for each Cart loade they give two Webbes of Cotton, amounting to the value of halfe an Tperpera. There come by Sea also many Shippes for Sale, which 30 pay Tribute energy one of the maccording to their burthen. The third day after wee were entred, me thought I was come into a new World. Whose life and manners I will describe vn-

to come. They have divided all Seythia among themselves, which Aretcheth from the Ri- Of the Tartart, uer Danubius euen vnto the rifing of the Sunne. And euery of their Captaines, according to the and of their great or small number of his people, knoweth the bounds of his Pastures, and where hee ought houses. to feed his Cattell Winter and Summer, Spring and Autumne. For in the Winter they descend vnto the warme Regions South-ward. And in the Summer they afcend vnto the cold Regions North-ward. In Winter when Snow lyeth vpon the ground, they feed their Cattell vpon Paflures without water, because then they vie Snow in flead of water. Their houses wherein they fleepe, they ground voon a round foundation of Wickers artificially wrought and compacted together : the Roofe whereof confifteth (in like fort) of Wickers, meeting about into one little Roundell, out of which Roundell ascendeth vpward a necke like vnto a Chimney, which they court with white Felt, and oftentimes they lay Morter or white Earth vpon the faid Felt, with the powder of bones, that it may thine white. And fometimes also they couer it with blacke Felt. The faid Felt on the necke of their house, they doe garnish over with beautifull varietie of Pictures. Before the doore likewise they hang a Felt curiously painted ouer. For they 50 spend all their coloured Felt, in painting Vines, Trees, Birds, and Beafts thereupon. The faid houses they make solarge, that they contayne thirtie foot in breadth. For measuring once the breadth betweene the wheele-ruts of one of their Carts , I found it to bee twentie feet ouer : and when the house was upon the Cart, it stretched ouer the wheeles on each fide five feet at the least. I told two and twent ie Oxen in one Teame, drawing an house vpon a Cart, eleuen in one order according to the breadth of the Cart, and eleuen more before them: the Axletree of the Cart was of an huge bigneffe like vnto the Malt of a Ship. And a fellow itood in the doore of the house, upon the forc-stall of the Cart driving forth the Oxen. Moreover, they make certayne foure fquare Baskets of imall flender Wickersas bigge as great Chefts: and afterward, from one lide to another, they frame an hollow lidde or couer of fuch like Wickers, 60 and make a doore in the fore-fide thereof. And then they couer the faid Chest or little House with black Felt, ubbelouer with Tallow or Sheeps Milke to keep the rain from foking through,

take downe their dwelling houses, they turne the doores alwayes to the South; and next of all they place the Carts laden with their Chefts, here and there, within halfe a frones cast of the House : insomuch that the House standeth betweene two rankes of Carts. as it were, betweene two Walles. The Matrones make for themselues most beautiful Carts. The benefit of which I am not able to describe vnto your Maiefly but by Pictures only : for I would right wila Painter in lingly haue painted all things for you, had my Skill beene ought in that Art. One rich Moal or firange Coun- Tariar hath two hundred, or one hundred fuch Carts with Chefts. Duke Baain hath fixteene Wives, every one of which hath one great house, besides other little houses, which they place behind the great one, being as it were Chambers for their Maidens to dwell in. And vnto energy of the faid houses doe belong two hundred Carts. When they take their houses from off the IQ Carts, the principall Wife placeth her Court on the West Frontier, and so all the rest in their order : fo that the last Wife dwelleth vpon the East Frontier : and one of the faid Ladies Courte is distant from another about a stones cast. Whereupon the Court of one rich Moal or Tartar will appeare like vnto a great Village, very few men abiding in the fame. One woman will guide twenty or thirty Carts at once, for their Countries are very plaine, and they binde the Carts with Camels or Oxen, one behind another. And there fits a Wench in the fore-most Cart driuing the Oxen, and all the refidue follow on a like pace. When they chance to come at any had passage, they let them loose, and guide them ouer one by one : for they goe a slow pace, as fait as a Lambe or an Oxe can walke.

Chap. 3. Haung taken downe their houses from off their Carts, and turning the doores South-ward, Of their Beds, they place the bed of the Master of the house, at the North part thereof. The womens Puppers, Ima- place is always on the East-side, namely, on the left hand of the good man of the house sitting vpon his bed with his face South-wards: but the mens place is vpon the West-side, namely, at the right hand of their Master. Men when they enter into the house, will not in any case hang their Quivers on the womens side. Ouer the Masters head there is alwayes an Image, like a Puppet, made of Fealt, which they call the Masters Brother : and another ouer the head of the good Wife or Miftris, which they call her Brother, being fastened to the wall : and aboue betweene both of them, there is a little leane one, which is, as it were the keeper of the whole house. The good Wife or Mistris of the house placeth aloft at her beds feet, on the right hand, the 30 Skinne of a Kid Auffed with Wooll or some other matter, and neere vnto that a little Image or Pupper looking towards the Maidens and women. Next vnto the doore also on the womens fide, there is another Image with a Cowes Vdder, for the women that milke the Kine. For it is the dutie of their women to milke Kine. On the other fide of the doore next vnto the men. there is another Image with the Vdder of a Mare, for the men which milke Mares. And when they come together to drinke and make merrie, they iprinkle part of their Drinke vpon the Image which is about the Mafters head : afterward vpon other Images in order : then goetha Seruant out of the house with a cup full of Drinke sprinkling it thrise towards the South, and bowing his knee at every time : and this is done for the honour of the Fire. Then performeth he the like Superstitious Idolatry towards the East, for the honour of the Ayre: and then to the West for the honour of the water; and lastly, to the North in the behalfe of the Dead. When the Master holdeth a cup in his hand to drinke, before hee tasteth thereof, hee powreth his part voon the ground. If he drinketh fitting on Horse-backe, he powreth out part thereof voon the necke or mane of his Horse before he himselfe drinketh. After the Servant aforesaid hath so discharged his cups to the foure quarters of the World, hee returneth into the house : and two other Servants stand ready with two cups, and two basons, to carrie Drinke vnto their Master and his Wife, fitting together vpon a bed. And if hee hath more Wines then one, shee with whom he slept the night before, fitteth by his side the day following : and all his other Wives must that day resort vnto the same house to drinke : and there is the Court holden for that day : the gifts also which are presented that day, are layd up in the Chests of the said Wife. And upon 50 a bench stands a Vessell of Milke, or of other Drinke and drinking cups.

IN Winter time they make excellent drinke of Rice, of Mill, and of Honey, being well and high coloured like Wine. Also they have Wine brought vnto them from farre Countries. In dinkes, and Summer time they care not for any drinke, but Cosmos. And it standeth alwayes within the how they pro- entrance of his doore, and next vnto it flands a Minstrell with his Fiddle. I saw there no such uoko one ano- Citernes and Vials as ours commonly bee, but many other Musicall Instruments which are not vied among vs. And when the Mafter of the houle begins to drinke, one of his feruants crieth out with a loude voyce, Ha, and the Minstrell playes vpon his Fiddle. And when they make any great solemne feast, they all of them clap their hands , and dance to the noyse of Mulicke, 60 the men before their Master, and the women before their Mistris. And when the Master hath like custome in drunke, then cryes out his feruant as before, and the Minstrell stayeth his Mulicke. Then drinke they all round both men and women, : and sometimes they carowse for the victorie very filthily and drunkenly. Also when they will prouoke any man, they pull him by the Eares to the drinke, and so lug and draw him strongly to stretch out his throat clapping their hands, and dancing before him. Moreouer, when some of them will make great feasting and rejoycing, one of the companie takes a full Cup, and two other fland, one on his right hand, and another on his left, and so they three come tinging to the man who is to have the Cup reached wnto him, fill linging and dancing before him: and when he stretcheth forth his hand to receive the Cup. they leape fuddenly backe, returning againe as they did before, and fo having deluded him thrice or four times by drawing backe the Cup, vntill he be merrie, and hath gotten a good appetite, then they give him the Cup, finging and dancing, and stamping with their feet, vntill he hath done drinking.

Oncerning their food and victuals, be it knowne vnto your Highnede, that they doe, with- Chap. e. Jour all difference or conception, care all their dead Carions. And amongst formany droues Of their food it cannot be, but some Cattell must needs die. Howbeit in Summer, so long as their Cosmos, and victuals. that is, their Mares milke lasteth, they care not for any food. And if they chance to have an Oxe or an Horse die, they drie the fleth thereof: for cutting it into thinne slices, and hanging Dryingof fleth it up against the Sunne and the wind, it is presently dried without Salt, and also without stench in the wind. or corruption. They make better Puddings of their Hories then of their Hogs, which they eate being new made : the reft of the flesh they reserve vntill Winter. They make of their Oxe skins great bladders or bags, which they doe wonderfully drie in the smoake. Of the hinder part of their Horsehides, they make very fine Sandals and Pantofles. They give voto fiftie of 20 an hundred men, the fielh of one Ramme to eate. For they mince it in a bowle with Salt and an manere men, un men ou our ramme to take the state of the same that a bowle with sale which Water (other Sauce they have none) and then with the point of a Knife or a little Forke which they make for the same purpose (such as we vie to take roafted Peares and Apples out of Wine they make for the same purpose). withall) they reach vato euery one of the companie a mortell or twains, according to the mul-titude of Guefts. The Matter of the house, before the Rams flesh be distributed, first of all himfelfe taketh thereof, what he pleafeth. Alfo, if he giveth vnto any of the companie a speciall part, the receiver thereof mult eate it alone, and mult not impart ought thereof vnto any other. Not being able to eate it up all, hee carries it with him, and deliners it unto his boy, if hee be present, to keepe it: if not, hee puts it vp into his Saptargat, that is to say, his foure square Budget, which they vie to carrie about with them, for the fauing of all fuch prouision, & wherein they lay up their bones, when they have not time to gnaw them throughly, that they may burnish them afterward, to the end that no white of their food may come to nought.

I faften a long line vnto two posts standing frestly in the ground, and vnto the same line they How they the the young Foales of those Mares, which they meane to milke. Then come the Dammes make their to fland by their Foales gently fuffering themselves to be milked. And if any of them be too drinke, called varuly, then one takes her Foale, and puts it under her, letting it fucke a while, and prefently carrying it away againe, there comes another man to milke the faid Mare. And having gotten a good quantitie of this Milke together (being as fweet as Cowes milke) while it is new they power into a great bladder or bag, and they beat the faid bag with a piece of wood made for the purpose, having a Club at the lower end like a mans head, which is hollow within : and fo soone as they beat upon it, it begins to boyle like new Wine, and to be sowre and sharpe of taste, and they beate it in that manner till Butter come thereof. Then tafte they thereof, and being indifferently sharpethey drinke it : for it biteth a mans tongue like the Wine of Raspes, when it is drunke. After a man hath taken a draught thereof, it leaveth behind it a tafte like the tafte of Almond-milke, and goeth downe very pleasantly, intoxicating weake braynes: also it caufeth vrine to be anoyded in great measure. Likewise Caracosmos, that is to say, Blacke Cosmos, Caracosmos for great Lords to drinke, they make on this manner. First, they beat the faid Milke solong till the thickest partithereof descend right downe to the bottome like the lees of white Wine, and that which is thinne and pure remayneth aboue, being like vnto Whay or white Mul. The faid lees and dregs being very white, are given to feruants, and will cause them to sleepe exceedingly. That which is thinne and cleere their Mafters drinke : and in very deede it is maruellous sweet and wholsome liquor. Duke Bastu hath thirtie Cottages or Granges, within a Duke Bastu, dayes journey of his abiding place : euery one of which serueth him daily with the Caracofmos of an hundred Mares milke, and so all of them together every day with the Milke of three Store of shoufand Mares, befides white Milke which other of his Subjects bring. For even as the Huf. Mares, and bandmen of Spria bestow the third part of their fruits, and carrie it vnto the Courts of their Marts mike. Lords, even so doe they their Mares milke every third day. Out of their Cowes milke they first churne Butter, boyling the which Butter vnto a perfect decoction, they put it into Rams skins, 60 which they reserve for the same purpose. Neither doe they sale their Butter : and yet by reafon of the long feething, it putrifieth not: and they keepe it in flore for Winter. The churn-milke which remayneth of the Butter, they let alone till it be as fowre as possibly it may be, then they boyle it, and in boyling it is turned all into Curds, which Curds they drie in the Sun, making them as hard as the droffe of Iron: and this kind of food also they store vp in Sachels against Winter. In the Winter season when Milke fayleth them, they put the foresaid Cords (which they call Gry-ve) into a bladder, and powring hot water thereinto, they beat it luftly till they have resolved it into the said Water, which is thereby made exceedingly sowre, and that they drinke in flead of Milke. They are very forupulous, and take diligent heed that they drinke not faire Water by it felte. Reat Lords have Cottages or Granges towards the South, from whence their Tenants bring tayles, nor any kind by Mife with short tayles. They have also certaine little beafis, called by with thicke water, and are therewithall contented. They will neither eate Mile with long 10

them, Sogur, which he in a Caue twentie or thirtie of them together, all the whole Winter fleeping there for the space of fixe moneths; and these they take in great abundance. There are alloa kind of Conies having long tayles like vnto Cats: and on the outfide of their tayles grow blacke and white haires. They have many other small beast's good to eat, which they know and differne right well. I saw no Deere there, and but a few Hares, but a great number of Roes. I faw wild Alles in great abundance, which be like vnto Mules. Alfo I faw another kind of beaft. called Areak, having in all refemblance the bodie of a Ram, and crooked hornes, which are of fuch bignesse, that I could scarce lift up a paire of them with one hand and of these hornes they make great drinking cups. They have Eaulcons, Girfaulcons, and other Hawkes in great plenticall which they carrie upon their right hands and they put alwaies about their Faulcons. neckes a ftring of Leather, which hangeth downe to the midft of their gorges, by the which firing, when they cast them off the fift at the game, with their left hand they bow downe the heads and breasts of the faid Hawkes, left they should be toffed up and downe, and beaten with the wind, or left they should foare too high. Wherefore they get a great part of their victuals by hunting and hawking. Concerning their garments and attire, be it knowne vnto your Maiestie, that out of Cataya, and other Regions of the East, out of Persia also, and other Countries of to South, there are brought vnto them Stuffes of filke, Cloth of gold, and Cotton clothwhich they weare in time of Summer. But out of Ruffia, Movell , Bulgaria the greater , and Palcatir, that is, Hungaria the greater, and out of Kersis (all which are Northerne Regions, and 10 full of Woods) and alto out of many other Countries of the North, which are subject vinto them, the Inhabitants bring them rich and coffly skins of divers forts (which I never faw in our Countries) wherewithall they are clad in Winter. And alwaies against Winter they make themselves two Gownes, one with the surre inward to their skinne, and another with the surre outward, to defend them from wind and phow, which for the most part are made of Wolves skins, or Poxe skins, or elfe of Papions. And when they fit within the house, they have a finer Gowne to weare. The poorer fort make their upper Gowne of Dogs or of Goats skins, When they goe to hunt for wild beafts, there meets a great companie of them together, and emironing the place round about, where they are fire to find fome game, by little and little they are proach on all files, till they have gotten the wild beafts into the midit, as it were into a circle, 49 and then they discharge their Arrowes at them. Also they make themselves Breeches of skins. The rich Tartars sometimes fure their Gownes with pelluce or filkeshae, which is exceeding foft, light, and warme. The poorer fort doe line their clothes with Cotton cloth.

Chap.8. Of the fashion which the Tartars vie in cutting their haire, and of the attire of their women.

He men shaue a plot foure square upon the crownes of their heads, and from the two formost corners they share, as it were, two scames downe to their temples : they share also their temples, and the hinder part of their head; energinto the mape of the necke: likewife they shaue the fore-part of their scalpe downe to their foreheads, and vpon their foreheads they leave a locke of haire reaching downe vnto their eye-browes : vpon the two hindermost corners of their heads, they have two lockes also, which they twine and braid into knots and fo bind and knit them under each care one. Moreover their womens garments differ not from their mens, fauing that they are somewhat longer. But on the morrow after one of their women is married, finee shares her scalpe from the middest of her head downe to her forebead, and weares a wide garment like vnto the hood of a Nunne, yealarger and longer in all parts then 60 a Nunnes hood, beeing open before, and gire unto them under the right fide. For hetrein doe the Tartare differ from the Turkes: because the Turkes fasten their garments to their bodies on the left fide : but the Tartare alwaies on the right fide. They have allo an ornament for their heads, which they call, Betta, beeing made of the barke of a Tree, or of some such other lighter matter as they can finde, which by teafon of the thicknesse and roundnesse thereof cannot he holden but in both hands together : and it hath a fquare sharpe spite rising from the too thereof, being more then a cubite in length, and fashioned like vnto a Pinacle. The faid Botta they couer all ouer with a piece of rich Silke, and it is hollow within : and vpon the midft of the faid spire or square top, they put a bunch of Quils, or of slender Canes a cubite lone and more and the faid bunch on the top thereof, they beautifie with Peacockes Feathers, and round about all the length thereof, with the Feathers of a Malards taile, and with precious thones alto. Great Ladies weare this kind of ornament vpon their heads, binding it from ly with a certaine Hat or Coyfe, which harh a hole in the crowne, fit for the foire so come through Io it and under the forefaid ornament they court the faires of their heads, which they gather up round together from the hinder part chereof to the crowne; and fo lap them vp in a knot or hundell within the faid Boisa; which afterward they bind ftrongly vader their throats. Hereupon when a great company of such Gentlewomen ride together, and are beheld a farre off, they feeme to be Souldiers with Helmets on their heads, carrying their Lances veright: for the faid Botts appeareth like an Helmet wieles Lance ouer it. All their Women fit on horfe-backe, befinding their Horfes like men : and they binde their hoods or gownes about their waftes with a sky-coloured Silke Skarfe, and with another Skarfe they gird it about their breafts : and they hinde also a piece of white Silke like a Mutter or Maske under their eyes, reaching downer vntotheir breaits. Their Gentlewomen are exceeding fat, and the leffer their nofes be, the faior rer they are elleemed : they dambe ouer their freet faces with greafe too fhamefully : and they neuer lyein bed for their trauell of child-birth.

He duties of Women are to drive Cares : to lay their houles voon Cares, and to take them Chap. o. downe sgaine; to milke Kine; to make Butter and Gry-or, to dreffe skinnes, and to few Of the duties them, which they vitually few with thread made of finewes, for they divide linewes in flender injoyned vate them, which they visually new with appear many or mewors, provery under minors in motion the Tartaina-threads, and then twine them into one long thread. They make Sandals and Socks, and other words, and Garments. Howbeit they never wash any apparell: for they say, that God's then angry, and of the labors, that dreadfull thunder will enfue, if washed garments be hanged forth to dry; yea, they beate and also of fuch as walh, and take their garments from them. They are wonderfully afraid of thunder : for their marri-30 in the time of thunder they thrust all thrangers out of their houses, and then wrapping them? ages. feliges in blacke Felt; they lye hidden therein, till the thunder be ouer-paft. They neuer wash their dilhes or bowles : yea, when their fielh is fodden, they wall the platter wherein it mift

he put, with fealding hot broath out of the pot, and then powre the faid broath into the por a gaine. They make Felt also, and couer their houses therewith. The duties of the Men are, to make Bowes and Arrowes, Stirrops, Bridles and Saddles : to build Houles and Carts, to keepe Horses, to milke Mares, to churne Colmos and Mares Milke, and to make bags wherein to put it : they keepe Camels also, and lay burtlens upon the n. As for Sheepe and Goats, they rend and milke them, as well the Men as the Women. With Sheeps Milke thicked and falted, they dreffeand tan their Hides. When they will wash their hands or their heads, they fill their 40 mouthes full of Water, and spowting it into their hands by little and little, they firinkle their haire, and wash their heads therewith. As touching marriages, your Highnesse is to understand. that no man can have a Wife among them till he hath bought her : whereupon fometimes their Maids are very stale before they be married , for their Parents alwaies keepe them till they can fell them. They keepe the first and second degrees of Confanguinitie inuiclable, as wee doe; but they have no regard of the degrees of Affinitie for they will marrie together, or by freceffion, two Sifters. Their Widowes martie not at all, for this reason; because they believe that all who have ferred them in this life, shall doe them ferrice in the life to come also. Whereupon they are perfwaded, that every Widow after death shall returne voto her owne Husband. And here-hence arifeth an abominable and filthy custome among them; namely, that the Sonne mar-

50 Father or Mother, falleth by inheritance alwaies to the younger Sonne. Whereupon he is to provide for all his Fathers Wives, because they are part of his Inheritance as well as his Fathers polleffions. And then it he will, he vieth them for his owne Wives : for he thinkes it no infurie or difparagement vnto himfelie, although they returne vnto his Father after death. Therfore when any man hath bargained with another for a Maid, the Father of the faid Damofell makes him a feast : in the meane while she fleeth vnto some of her Kinstolkes to hide her lelfe. Then faith her Father vitto the Bridegroome: Loe, my Daughter is yours, take her where sound you can finde ber. Then he and his friends feeke for her till they can find her, and having found her, he must take her by force and carry her (as it were) violently vnto his owne house.

But being accused by the multitude, they put him vnto extreame torture, to make him confesse the truth. They punish murther with death, and Carnall copulation also with any other belides his owne. By his owne, I meane his Wife or his Maid Servant, for he may vie his Slaue as hee lifteth himselfe. Hainous theft also or felony they punish with death. For a light theft, as namely, for stealing of a Ram, the partie (not being apprehended in the deed doing, but otherwise detected) is cruelly beaten. And if the Executioner layes on an hundred strokes, hee must have an hundred staves; namely, for such as are beaten upon sentencequen in the Court. Also counterfeit Messengers, because they feine themselues to be Mes- 10 fengers, when as indeed they are none at all, they punish with death. Sacrilegious persons they vie in like manner (of which kind of Malefactors your Maieftie shall vinderstand more fully hereafter) because they esteeme such to bee Witches. When any man dyeth, they lament and howle most pittifully for him: and the faid Mourners are free from paying any tribute for one whole yeare after. Also, whosoeuer is present at the house where any one growne to mans estate lyeth dead, he must not enter into the Court of Mangu-Con, till one whole yeare be expired. If it were a child deceased, hee must not enter into the faid Court till the next moneth after. Neere vnto the graue of the partie deceased, they alwaies leaue one Cottage. If any of their Nobles (being of the flocke of Chingis, who was their first Lord and Father) deceaseth, his Sepulchre is vnknowne. And alwaies about those places where they interre their Nobles, there is 20 one house of men to keepe the Sepulchres. I could not learne that they vie to hide Treasures in the graves of their dead. The Comanians build a great Toombe over their dead, and erect the Image of the dead partie thereupon, with his face towards the East, holding a drinking Cup in his hand before his Nauell. They erect also voon the Monuments of rich men, Pyramides, that is to fay; little starpe houses or pinacles: and in some places I saw mightie Towers made of Bricke, in other places Pyramides made of stones, albeit there are no stones to be found thereabout. I saw one newly buried, in whose behalfe they hanged vp sixteene Horse-hides, vnto each quarter of the world foure, betweene certaine high poits : and they fet besides his Graue Cosmos for him to drinke, and slesh to eate: and yet they laid that he was baptized. I beheld other kinds of Sepulchres also towards the East: namely, large floores or pauements made of stone, some round, and some square; and then source long stones pitched vpright, about the said 30 pauement towards the foure Regions of the world. When any man is ficke, he lyeth in his bed. and causeth a signe to be set voon his house, to signifie that there lyeth a sicke person there . to the end that no man may enter into the faid house: whereupon none at all wifit any ficke partie but his servant onely. Moreover, when any one is sicke in their great Courts, they appoint Watch-men to ftand round about the faid Court, who will not fuffer any person to enter within the Precincts thereof. For they feare leaft euill spirits or winds should come together with the parties that enter in. They efteeme of Soothfayers, as of their Priefts.

Aentred into a new world: for they came flocking about vs on horse-backe, after they had made vs a long time to awaite for them fitting in the shadow, under their blacke carts. The first question which they demanded, was, whether we had ever beene with them heretofore, or no? And giving them answere that we had not, they began impudently to beg our victuals from vs. And we gaue them some of our Bisket and Wine, which wee had brought with vs from the Towns of Soldais. And having drunke off one Flagon of our Wine, they demanded another; faying, That a man goeth not into the house with one foote. Howbeit we gape them no more, excusing our selves that we had but a little. Then they asked vs, whence we came, and whither we were bound! I answered them with the words about mentioned: that wee had heard concerning Duke Sartach, that hee was become a Christian, and that vnto him our determination 50 was to travell, having your Maiesties Letters to deliver vnto him. They were very inquificine to know whether I came of mine owne accord, or whither I were lent ! I answered, that no man compelled me to come, neither had I come, vnlesse I my selfe had beene willing : and that therefore I was come according to mine owne will, and to the will of my Superior, I tooke diligent heed neuer to say that I was your Maiesties Embassadour. Then they asked what I had in my Carts; whether it were Gold or Silver, or rich Garments to carrie vnto Sartach? I anfwered, that Sarrach should see what we had brought, when we were once come vnto him, and that they had nothing to doe to aske such questions, but rather ought to conduct me vnto their Captaine, and that he, if he thought good, should cause me to be directed vnto Sartach : if not, that I would returne. For there was in the same Province one of Baats his Kinsmen, called Sca- 60 cati, vnto whom my Lord the Emperour of Constantinople had written Letters of request, to fuffer me to paffe through his Territorie. With this answere of ours they were fatisfied, giving vs Horses and Oxen, and two men to conduct vs. Howbeit, before they would allow vs the forefaid necessaries for our journey, they made vs to awaite a long while, begging our bread for their young Brats, wondring at all things which they faw about our Servants, as their Kniues, Gloues, Purles and Points, and defiring to haue them. I excused my selfe that wee had a long way to trauell, and that we must in no wife so some depriue our selues of things necessary. to finish so long a journey. Then they faid, that I was a very variet. True it is, that they tooke nothing by force from me : howbeit they will beg that which they fee very importunatly and shamelesty. And if a man bestow ought vpon them, it is but cost lost, for they are thanklesse wretches. They esteeme themselves Lords, and thinke that nothing should be denyed them by any man. If a man gives them nought, and afterwards stands in need of their service, they will do right nought for him. They gave vs of their Cowes Milke to drink, after the Butter was chur-To ned out of it, being very fowre, which they call Apram. And fo we departed from them. And in very deed it feemed to me that we were escaped out of the hands of Diuels. On the morrow we were come vnto the Captaine. From the time wherein we departed from Soldaia, till wee arrived at the Court of Sartach, which was the space of two moneths, we never lay in House or Tent, but alwaies under the starry Canopie, and in the open Aire, or under our Carts. Neither yet faw we any Village, nor any mention of building where a Village had beene, but the graues of the Comanians, in great abundance. The fame evening our guide which had conducted vs.gaue vs some Cosmos. After I had drunke thereof, I sweat most extreamely for the noueltie and strangenesse, because I neuer dranke of it before. Notwithstanding, me thought it was very sauory, as indeed it was.

Droues of Oxen, and Horles, and at the Flockes of Sheepe. I could lee but a rew men that guid how the Christella ded all these matters: whereupon I inquired how many men hee had vnder him, and they told frant drinke me that he had not aboue five hundred in all, the one halfe of which number we were come patt, no Colmos. as they lay in another Lodging. Then the Servant which was our Guide told mee, that I must present somewhat vnto Scacatai: and so he caused vs to stay, going himselfe before to give notice of our comming. By this time it was pall three of the clocke, and they vnladed their houfes neere vnto a certayne water: And there came vnto vs his Interpreter, who being aductifed 30 by ve that we were never there before, demanded some of our victuals, and wee yeelded vnto his request. Also hee required of vs some garment for a Reward, because hee was to interpret our Savings vnto his Maiter. Howbeit, we excused our selues as well as we could. Then hee asked vs, what we would prefent vnto his Lord : And we tooke a flagon of Wine, and filled a Maund with Bisket, and a Platter with Apples and other Fruits. But he was not contented therewith, because we brought him not some rich garment. Notwithstanding, wee entred so into his presence with feare and bashfulnesse. Hee sate upon his bed holding a Citron in his hand, and his Wife fate by him: who (as I verily thinke) had cut and pared her Nofe betweene the Eves that the might feeme to be more flat and faddle-nofed : for the had left her felfe no Nofe at all in that place, having anounted the very fame place with a blacke Oyntment, and her Eye-browes also: 40 which fight feemed most vgly in our Eyes. Then I rehearfed vnto him the fame words, which I had spoken in other places before. For it stood ws in hand to vie one and the same speech in all places. For we were well fore-warned of this circumstance by some which had been amongst A caucat right the Tartars, that we should never vary in our Tale. Then I belought him, that he would vouch- worthy the nofafe to accept that small gift at our hands, excusing my selfe that I was a Monke, and that it was tingagainst our profession to possesse Gold, or Silver, or precious Garments, and therefore that I had not any fuch thing to give him, howbeit he should receive some part of our victuals in stead of a bleffing. Hereupon he caused our Present to be received, and immediately distributed the same among his men, who were met together for the same purpose, to drinke and make merry. I deliuered also vnto him the Emperour of Constantinople his Letters (this was eight dayes after the 50 Feaft of Ascension) who sent them forth- with to Soldaia, to have them interpreted there: for they were written in Greeke, and he had none about him that was skilfull in the Greeke Tongue. He asked vs also whether we would drinke any Cosmos, that is to say, Mares Milke: (For those that are Christians among them, as namely, the Ruffians, Grecians, and Alamans, who keepe Superstition, their owne Law very strictly, will in no case drinke thereof, yea, they account themselues no the Kingdome Christians after they have once drunke of it, and their Priests reconcile them vnto the Church, as meate and if they had renounced the Christian Faith.) I gaue him answere, that wee had as yet sufficient of drinke. our owne to drinke, and that when our drinke fayled vs, we must be constrayned to drinke such as should bee given vnto vs. Hee enquired also what was contayned in our Letters, which your Maiestie sent vnto Sartach? I answered : that they were sealed up , and that there was nothing

60 contayned in them, but good and friendly words. And he asked what words wee would deliuer

vnto Sariach? I answered: the words of Christian Faith. Hee asked againe what these words were? For he was very defirous to heare them. Then I expounded vnto him as well as I could, by mine Interpreter, (who had no wit nor any vtterance of speech) the Apostles Creed. Which after hee had heard, holding his peace, he shooke his head. Then hee assigned vnto vs two men,

On the morrow after we met with the Carts of Scacettail laden with houses, and me thought (Bap. 12, that a mightie Citic came to meete me. I wondred also at the great multitude of huge Otthe Court Droues of Oxen, and Horses, and at the Flockes of Sheepe. I could see but a few men that gui- of Scacatai. & who should give attendance upon our felues, upon our Horses, and upon our Oxen. And hee caused vs to ride in his company, till the Messenger whom he had fent for the Interpretation of the Baperours Letters, was returned. And so wee trauelled in his company till the morrow atter Pentecost.

Chap. 13. tecoft or Whitfon Ecue. " Oi, Akes.

Pon the E-uen of Pentecost, there came vnto vs certayne Alanians, who are there called Aciss, being Christians after the manner of the Grecians , ving Greeke Bookes and Grenion came var cian Priefts : howbeit, they are not Schismatikes as the Grecians are, but without acception of persons, they honour all Christians. And they brought vnto vs sodden flesh, requesting vs to eat of their meate, and to pray for one of their company beeing dead. Then I faid, because it was 10 the Eeuen of fo great and to folemne a Feast Day, that wee would not eate any flesh for that sime. And I expounded vnto them the Solemnitie of the faid Feaft, whereat they greatly rejoyced : for they were ignorant of all things appertaying to Christian Religion , except only the Name of Christ. They and many other Christians, both Ruffians, and Hungarians demanded of ys, whether they might be faued or no, because they were constrayned to drinke Cosmos, and to eate the dead carkalles of fuch things, as were flaine by the Saracens, and other Infidels! Which even the Greeke and Russian Priests themselves also esteeme as things strangled or effered vnto Idols : because they were ignorant of the times of Fasting, neither could they have obserued them albeit they had knowne them. Then instructed I them aswell as I could and strengthened them in the Faith. As for the flesh which they had brought, wee referred it vntill the 20 feast day. For there was nothing to be fold among the Tartars for Gold and Silver, but onely for Cloath and Garments, of the which kind of Merchandize wee had none at all. When our Seruants offered them any Coyne, called Tperpera, they rubbed it with their fingers, and put it vnto their nofes, to try by the smell whether it were Copper or no. Neither did they allow vs any food but Cowes Milke onely, which was very fowre and filthy. There was one thing most necellary greatly wanting vnto vs. For the water was fo foule and muddy, by reason of their Horfes, that it was not meete to be drunke. And but for certaine Bisket, which was by the goodnesse of God remaining vnto vs, we had vndoubtedly perished.

Cloth is the chiefe Merchandile in Tarrete.

7 Pon the day of Pentecost there came unto vs a certaine Saracen, unto whom, as he talked with vs, we expounded the Christian Faith. Who (hearing of Gods benefits exhibited which find that vinto mankind, by the Incarnation of our Saujour Christ, and the Resurrection of the dead, and he wouldbe the Hidgement to come, and that in Baptisme was a washing away of sinnes) said, that hee would be baptized. But when wee prepared our felues to the baptizing of him, hee fuddenly or cereane mounted on horfe-back, laying, that he would go home and confult with his wife what were best med to bee L:- to be done. And on the morrow after he told vs, that he durft in no case receive Baptisme, because then he should drinke no more Cosmos. For the Christians of that place affirme, that no true Christians ought to drinke thereof : and that without the faid liquor hee could not liue in that Defart. From which opinion, I could not for my liferemoue him. Wherefore be it knowne of a certaintie vinto your Highnesse, that they are much estranged from the Christian Faith, by 40 reason of that opinion which hath beene broached and confirmed among them by the Russians. of whom there is a great multitude in that place. The fame day Scacatai the Captaine aforefaid gaue vs one man to conduct vs to Sarrach, and two other to guide vs vnto the next Lodging, which was distant from that place five dayes Iourney for Oxen to travell. They gave vnto vs alioa Goate for victuals, and a great many Bladders of Cowes Milke, and but a little Colmos, because it is of so great estimation among them. And so taking our Journey directly toward the North, mee thought that wee had pasted through one of Hell gates. The Servants which conducted vs began to play the bold Theeues with vs , feeing vs take folittle heed vnto our felues. At length having loft much by there Theeuery, harme taught vs wildome. And then wee came vnto the extremitie of that Province, which is fortified with a Ditch from one Sea vnto ano- 10 ther : without the bounds whereof their Lodging was fituate. Into the which, fo foone as wee had entred, all the Inhabitants there feemed vnto vs to be infected with Leprofie : for certayne base fellowes were placed there to receive Tribute of all fuch as tooke Sale out of the S.l.-pits aforesaid. From that place they told vs that we must trauell fifteene dayes Journey, before we should find any other people. With them we dranke Cosmos, and gaue vnto them a basket full of Fruits and of Bisket. And they gave vnto vs eight Oxen and one Goate, to sustayne vs in fo great a Icurney, and I know not how many bladders of Milke. And fo changing our Oxen, we tooke our Journey which wee finished in tenne dayes, arriving at another Lodging : neither found weany water all that way, but onely in certayne Ditches made in the Valleyes, except two Rivers. And from the time wherein wee departed out of the forefaid Province of Gafaria, 60 we travelled directly East-ward, having a Sea on the South-side of vs , and a waste Defart on the North, which Detart, in some places, reacheth twentiedayes Journey in breadth, and there is neither Tree, Mountayne, nor Stone therein. And it is most excellent Pasture. Here the Comanians, which were called Capthac, were wont to feed their Cattell. Howbeit by the Datch-

But Isidore calleth all that tract Valani. of Land Aretching from the River of Tanais to the Lake of Maois, and so along as farre as Danabus, the Countrey of Alama. And the fame land continueth in length from Dambius vito Tanais (which divideth Asia from Europe) for the space of two moneths journey, albeit a man Tanais (Which diminering ages to ride; and it was all ouer inhabited by the Commitons, Thelength of thould ride post as fast as the Tartars vie to ride; and it was all ouer inhabited by the Commitons, Thelength of thould rue poit as tale as the Auras as farre as the River of Edil, or Volga: the space betweene Commia. the two which Riuers is a great and long journey to bee travelled in ten daies. Io as yet is daily wasted by them. Hey preferre the Saracens before the Ruffians, because they are Christians, and when they Chap. 15. are able to give them no more gold nortifuer, they drive them and their Children like flocks Of our afficial. of Sheepe into the wildernesse, constraining them to keepe their Cattell there. Beyond Rassia ons which wee of Sheepe into the wildermene, constraining them to keepe their Latentheir. that the great Priest, that is to say, the Pope did cause the Ensigne of the Crosse to be displaied Pissifia, against them, they would flie all into their Desart and solitarie places. Wee therefore went on 20 towards the East, seeing nothing but Heauen and Earth, and sometimes the Sea on our right hand, called the Sea of Tanais, and the Sepulchres of the Comanians, which appeared vnto vs two leagues off, in which places they were wont to burie their kindred altogether, So long as we were trauelling through the Defart, it went reasonably well with vs. For I cannot sufficiently expresse in words the irkesome and tedious troubles which I sustained, when I came at any of their places of abode. For our Guide would have vs goe in vnto every Captaine with a preor their places of about the form of their places would not extend fo farre. For we were every day eight persons of vs farreame feending our wayfaring prouision, for the Tartars servants would all of them eate of our victue beare in Sumi als. We our felues were fine in number, and the fernants our Guides were three, two to drive mere our Carts, and one to conduct vs vnto Sartach. The flesh which they gaue vs was not sufficient 30 for vs; neither could we find any thing to be bought for our money. And as we fate vnder our

Carts in the coole shadow, by reason of the extreame and vehement heate which was there at that time, they did fo importunately and shamelessy intrude themselues into our company, that they would even tread vpon vs, to see whatfoever things we had. Having lift at any time to ease themselues, the filthie Lozels had not the manners to withdraw themselues farther from vs, then a Beane can be cast. Yea, like vile slovens they would lay their tailes in our presence, while they were vet talking with vs: many other things they committed, which were most tedious and loathfome vnto vs. But aboue all things it grieued me to the very heart, that when I would vt. ter ought vnto them, which might tend to their edification, my foolish interpreter would say: vou should not make me become a Preacher now; I tell you, I cannot nor I will not rehearse 40 any fuch words. And true it was which he faid, for I perceived afterward, when I began to have a little smattering in the language, that when I spake one thing, hee would say quite another. whatfoeuer came next vnto his witleffe tongues end. Then feeing the danger I might incurre in speaking by such an Interpreter, I resoluted much rather to hold my peace, and thus we trauelled with great toile from lodging to lodging, till at the length, a few daies before the Feast of Saint Marie Magdalene, we arrived at the banke of the mightie River Tanais, which divideth Alia from Europa, euen as the River Nilus of Agypt difioyneth Afia from Africa. At the same place where we arrived, Baatu and Sartach did cause a certaine Cottage to be built vpon the Easterne banke of the River, for a companie of Russians to dwell in, to the end, they might transport Ambaffadours and Merchants in Ferrie-boates ouer that part of the Riuer. First, they ferried 50 vs ouer, and then our Carts, putting one wheele into one Liter, and the other wheele into another

Liter, having bound both the Liters together, and so they rowed them ouer. In this place our Guide played the foole most extreamely. For he imagining that the said Russians, dwelling in the Cottage, should have provided vs Horses, sent home the Beasts which wee brought with vs, in another Cart, that they might returne vnto their owne Masters. And when we demanded to haue fome beasts of them, they answered, that they had a priviledge from Baatu, whereby they were bound to none other service, but onely to ferrie over Goers and Commers : and that they received great tribute of Merchants in regard thereof. Wee staied therefore by the said Rivers fide three daies. The first day they gaue vnto vs a great fresh Turbut : the second day they be-Howed Rye bread, and a little flesh voon vs, which the Purueyer of the Village had taken vp at 60 every house for vs : and the third day dryed Fishes , which they have there in great aboundance. The faid River was even as broade in that place, as the River of Sein is at Paris. And before wee The breading came there, wee passed over many goodly waters, and full of Fish: howbeit the barbarous and Tenin. rude Tartars know not how to take them : neither doe they make any reckoning of any Fish. except it bee fo great, that they may prey vpon the flesh thereof, as vpon the flesh of a Ram.

He is much de-

This River is the limit of the East part of Ruffia, and it springeth out of the Fonnes of Meetis, which Fennes fretch vnto the North Ocean. And it runneth Southward into a certaine great Sea leuen hundred miles about, before it falleth into the Sea called Pontus Euxinus. And all the Rivers which we passed ouer, ran with full streame into those quarters. The foreskid River hath great store of wood also growing vpon the West side thereof. Beyond this place the Tartars einning of Au alcend no farther vnto the North : for at that feafon of the yeere, about the first of August. they guft, the Ta- begin to returne backe vnto the South. And therefore there is another Cottage somewhat lower where Passengers are ferried ouer in Winter time, and in this place we were driven to great extremitie, by reason that we could get neither Horses, nor Oxen for any money. At length, afcer I had declared vnto them, that my comming was to labour for the common good of all ro Christians, they sent vs Oxen and Men; howbest wee our selues were faine to trauell on foot, At this time they were reaping their Rye. Wheate prospereth not well in that soile. They have the feed of Millium in great abundance. The Russian women attire their heads like vnto our women. They embroider their Safegards or Gownes on the outfide, from their feet vnto their knees with partie-coloured or grey stuffe. The Russian men weare Caps like vnto the Dutch men. Also they weare voon their heads certaine sharpe and high-crowned Hats made of Felt, much like vnto a Sugar-loafe. Then trauailed we three daies together, not finding any people. And when our felues and our Oxen were exceeding wearie and faint, not knowing how farre off we should find any Tartar, on the sudden there came two Horses running towards vs. which we tooke with great joy, and our Guide and Interpreter mounted vpon their backs, to fee how farre off they could descrie any people. At length, vpon the fourth day of our journey, having 20 found some Inhabitants, we reioyced like Sea faring men, which had escaped out of a dangerous Tempest, and had newly recoursed the Hauen. Then having taken fresh Horses, and Oxen, we paffed on from lodging to lodging, till at the last, vpon the second of the Kalends of August, we arrived at the habitation of Duke Sartach him felfe.

Chap. 17. Of the Court A Nd wee found Sartach lying within three daies iourney of the River Etilia: whose Court feemed vnto vs to be very great. For he himselfe had fix wives, and his eldeft ionne also of Satathand had three wives : every one of which women hath a great houle, and they have each one of them has three writes federy one or which women man a great room arm of Coiat, who is a man about two hundred Carts. Our guide went vinco a certaine Nefferion named Coiat, who is a man of the control of the ficence thereof great authoritie in Sartachs Court. He made vs to goe very farre vnto the Lorisgate. For to Colar, the Nello- they call him who hath the Oifce of entertayning Ambaffadours. In the evening, Colar commanded vs to come vnto him. Then our Guide began to enquire what wee would prefent him withall, and was exceedingly offended, when hee faw that wee had nothing ready to prefent.

He Region lying beyond Tanais, is a very goodly Countrey, having store of Rivers and Woods toward the North part thereof. There are mightie huge Woods which two forts of people doe inhabit. One of them is called Moxel, being meere Pagans, and without Law. They tach, and of his haue neither Townes nor Cities, but onely Cottages in the Woods. Their Lord and a great part 30 of themselues were put to the Sword in high Germanie. Whereupon they highly commend the Subjects, of themiciaes were put to the award in high garmann, the top of the bondage of the Tariars, The people of braue courage of the Almans, hoping as yet to be delinered out of the bondage of the Tariars, by their meanes. If any Merchant come vnto them, hee must prouide things necessary for him, with whom hee is first of all entertained, all the time of his abode among them. If any lyeth with another mans wife, her husband, valeffe he be an eye-witneffe thereof, regardeth it not: for they are not icalous ouer their wives. They have abundance of Hogs, and great store of Honie and Waxe, and divers forts of rich and coffly Skins, and plentie of Faulcons. Next vnto them are other people called Merclas, which the Latines call Merdus, and they are Saracens. Beyond called Alerdai them is the River of Etilia, or Volga, which is the mightiest River that ever I faw. And it isfubeing Santenne eth from the North part of Bulgaria the greater, and fo trending along Southward, disimboqueth 40 into a certaine Lake, containing in circuit the space of foure moneths trauell, whereof I will speake hereafter. The two foresaid Rivers, namely, Tanais and Etilia, otherwise called Volca. towards the Northerne Regions, through the which we travailed, are not diffant afunder about ten daies journey, but Southward they are divided a great space one from another. For Tanais descendeth into the Sea of Pontus : Etilia maketh the forefaid Sea or Lake, with the helpe of many other Rivers, which fall thereinto out of Persia. And wee had to the South of vs huge high Mountaines, vpon the fides thereof towards the faid Defart, doe the people called Copys, and the Alani or Acas inhabit, who areas yet Christians, and wage warre against the Tartars. Beyond them, next vnto the Sea or Lake of Etilia, there are certaine Saracens called Lefgi, who are in f. biection vnto the Tartars. Beyond thefe is Porta ferrea, or the Iron gate, now called 50 Derbene, which Alexander built to exclude the barbarous Nations out of Persia. Concerning the fituation whereof, your Maiestie shall understand more about the end of this Treatile: for I trauailed in my returne by the very same place. Betweene the two foresaid Rivers, in the Regions through the which we passed, did the Comanians of old time inhabit, before they were outrun by the Tartars.

We stood before him, and he sate maiestically, having mutick and dancing in his presence. Then Hinake vato him in the words before recited, telling him for what purpole I was some vato his Lord, and requesting to much fauour at his hands, as to bring our Letters vnto the fight of his Lord, I excuted my felfe also, that I was a Monke, not having, nor receiving, nor ving any gold. or filter, or any other precious thing, faue onely our Bookes, and the Veitments wherein wee ferried God; and that this was the cause why I brought no present vnto him, nor vnto his Lord. For I that had abandoned mine owne goods, could not be a transporter of things for other men. Then he answered very courteously, that being a Monke, and so doing, I did well; for so I should observemy yow : neither did himselfe stand in need of bught that we had , but rather was ready To to bestow your vs such things as we our selves stood in need of ; and hee caused vs to sit downer and to drinke of his Milke. And prefently after, hee requested vs to fay our denotions for him : and wee did fo. Hee enquired also who was the greatest Prince among the Francks? And I faid. the Emperour, if he could enjoy his owne Dominions in quiet. No (quoth hee) but the King of France. For hee had heard of your Hignesse by Lord Baldwine of Henault. I found there also one of the Knights of the Temple who had beene in Cypran, and had made report of all things which he faw there. Then returned we vinco our Lodging. And on the morrowaiwe fent him a flaggon of Muscadell Wine (which had lasted verie well in so long a lourney) and a boxe full of Bisket, which was most acceptable vnto him. And hee kept our Seruants with him for that Euening. The next morning hee commanded mee to come vnto the Court, and to bring the Kings Letters and my Vestments, and Bookes with mee: because his Lord was desirous to fee them. Which we did accordingly, lading one Cart with our Bookes and Veftments, and another with Bisket. Wine, and Fruits. Then hee caufed all our Bookes and Veftments to bee land forth. And there flood round about vs many Tartars, Christians, and Saracens on Horsebacke. At the fight whereof, hee demanded whether I would befrow all those things voon his Lord or no : Which faying made mee to tremble, and grieued mee full fore. Howbert, diffembling our griefe as well as we could, we shaped him this Answere : Sir, our humble request is that our Lord your Maiter would vouchfafe to accept our Bread, Wine, and Fruits, not as a Prefent because it is too meane, but as a Benediction, least we should come with an emptie hand before bim. And hee fiell fee the Letters of my Souereigne Lord the King; and by them hee shall vn-30 derstand for what cause we are come vnto him , and then both our selves, and all that wee have, shall stand to his courtesse: for our Vestments bee holy, and it is valawfull for any but Priess to touch them. Then he commanded vs to inueft our felues in the faid Garments, that we might goe before his Lord; and we did fo. Then I my felfe putting on our most precious Ornaments. tooke in mine armes a very faire Cushion, and the Bible which your Maiestie gave mee, and a most beautifull Pfalter, which the Queenes Grace bestowed upon mee, wherein there were goodly Pictures. Mine Affociate tooke a Miffall and a Croffe : and the Clerke having put on his Surplice, tooke a Cenfer in his hand. And so we came vnto the presence of his Lord; and they lifted up the Felt hanging before his doore, that hee might behold us. Then they caused the Clerke and the Interpreter thrice to bow the knee : but of vs they required no fuch fubmission. And they diligently admonished vs to take heed, that in going in, and in comming out. wee touched not the threshold of the house, and requested vs to sing a Benediction for him. Then we entred in, finging Salue Regina, And within the entrance of the doore flood a bench with Colmos, and drinking cups thereupon. And all his Wives were there affembled. Also the Moals or rich Tartars thrusting in with vs pressed vs fore. Then Coiat carryed vnto his Lord the Cenfer with Incenfe, which hee beheld very diligently, holding it in his hand, Afterward he carryed the Pfalter vnto him, which he looked earneftly vpon, and his Wife also that fate beside him. After that he carryed the Bible : then Sartach asked if the Gospell were contayned therein ! Yea (faid I) and all the holy Scriptures befides. He tooke the Croffe also in his hand, and demanded concerning the Image, whether it were the Image of Christ or no. I faid it was.

The Nestorians and the Armenians doe neuer make the figure of Christ vpon their Crosses. No good con-50 Wherefore either they feeme not to thinke well of his Paffion, or elfe they are ashamed of it. sequence. Then hee caused them that stood about vs, to stand aside, that hee might more fully behold our Ornaments. Afterward I deliuered vnto him your Maiesties Letters, with the Translation thereof into the Arabicke and Spriacke Languages. For I caused them to bee translated at Acon, into the Character and Dialect of both the faid Tongues. And there were certayne Armenian Priests, which had skill in the Turkish and Arabian Languages. The aforesaid Knight also of the Order of the Temple had knowledge in the Syriake, Turkish, and Arabian Tongues. Then wee departed forth , and put off our Vestments, and there came vnto vs certayne Scribes together with the forefaid Coiat, and caused our Letters to bee interpreted. Which Letters be-

60 ing heard, hee caused our Bread, Wine and Fruits to bee received. And hee permitted vs also to carrie our Vestments and Bookes vnto our owne Lodging. This was done vpon the Feast of S. Peter ad vincula.

Ch.1p.18. How they were giuen in

He next morning betimes came vnto vsa certayne Priest, who was brother vnto Coiat. I requelling to have our boxe of Chrisme, becaule Sarrach (as he faid) was detirous to fee it: and fo we gaue it him. About Euentyde Coint fent for vs, faying : My Lord your King wrote good words vate my Lord and Matter Sartach. Howbeit there are certayne matters of difficultie in Fasher of Sar- them, concerning which he dare not determine ought, without the adulte and counfell of his Father. And therefore of accessitie you must depart voto his Father, leaving behind you the two Carts, which you brough bither yesterday with Vestments and Bookes, in my custodie: because my Lord is defirous to take more diligent view thereof. I presently suspecting what mischiefe might enfue by his courtoufnesse, fail vnto him : Sir, we will not onely leave those with you, but the two other Cartsalio, which we have in our possession, will wee commit vine your 10 cultodie. You shall not (quoth he) leave those behind you, but for the other two Carts first named, wee will faishe your request. I faid that this could not conveniently bee done : but needs we must leave all with him. Then he asked, whether we meant to tarrie in the Land lanswered : If you throughly understand the Letters of my Lord the King, you know that we'are even so determined. Then he replyed, that we ought to bee patient and lowly : and so wee departed from him that Euening. On the morrow after he fent a Nefferian Prieft for the Carts, and wee caufed all the foure Cares to be delinered. Then came the forefaid brother of Coint to meetvs. and separated all those things, which we had brought the day before vnto the Court, from the reft, nassely, the Bookes and Vertments, and tooke them away with him. Howbeit Coist had commanded, that we should carrie those Vestments wish vs, which we were in the presence of 20 Sartach, that we might put them on before Baatu, if need should require : but the said Priest tooks them from vs by violence, saying : thou haft brought them vnto Sartach, and wouldest thou carrie them vito Baatus? And when I would have rendred a reason, hee answered : bee not too talkatine, but goe your wayes. Then I faw that there was no remedie but patience : for wee could have no accesse vinto Sartach himfelfe, neither was there any other, that would doe vs Luftice. I was afraid alto in regard of the Interpreter, leaft he had spoken other things then I faid vnto him : for his will was good, that wee should have given away all that we had. There was yet one comfort remayning vnto mee : for when I once perceived their covetous intent, I conserved from among our Bookes the Bible, and the Sentences, and certayne other Bookes which I made speciall account of. Howbeit, I durft not take away the Psalter of my Souereigne 20 Ladie the Queene, because it.was too well knowne, by reason of the Golden Pictures therein. And so we returned with the two other Carts vnto our Lodging. Then came hee that was anpointed to be our Guide vinto the Court of Baars, willing vs to take our Tourney in all postehafte: voto whom I faid, that I would in no case haue the Carts to goe with me. Which thing he declared unto Coias. Then Coias commanded, that wee should leave them and our Servant with him. And we did as he commandeed. And so travelling directly East-ward towards Baathe third day we came to Etilia or Volga: the fireames whereof when I beheld , I wondred from what Regions of the North fuch huge and mightie waters should descend, Before we were devarted from Sartach, the forelaid Coist, with many other Scribes of the Court laid vnto vs: do: not make report that our Lord is a Christian, but a Moal. Because the name of a Christian 40 feemeth vinto them to be the name of fome Nation. So great is their ptide, that albeit they beleeue perhaps some things concerning Christ, yet will they not be called Christians, being defirous that their owne name, that is to fay, Moal should be exalted aboue all other names. Neither will they be called by the name of Tartars. For the Tartars were another Nation, as I was informed by them.

They are come as farre 25 Tog4.

The Tarters will be called

A T the same time when the Fronchmon tooke Anioch, a certayne man named Con Con, had Dominion outer the Northerne Regions, lying the teabouts. Con is a proper name: [an is a name of authoritie or dignitie, which fignifieth a Diviner or Sooth-sayer. All Diviners are called Can among them. Whereupon their Princes are called Can, because that vnto them be- 50 longeth the gouernment of the people by Divination. We doe read also in the Hillorie of Antiochia, that the Turkes lent for ayde against the Frenchmen, vnto the Kingdome of Con Can. For out of those parts the whole Nation of the Turkes first came. The said Con was of the Nation of Kara-Catay. Kara fignifieth blacke, and Catay is the name of a Countrey. So that Kara-Catay fignifieth the blacke Catsy. This name was given to make a difference betweene the foresaid people, and the people of Cates inhabiting Eath-ward over against the Ocean Sea: concerning whom your Maiestie shall vnderstand more hereafter. These Catayans dwelt vpon certayne Alpes, by the which I trauelled. And in a certaine plaine Countrey within those Alpes, there inhabited a Nestorian shepheard, being a mightie Gouernour ouer the people called Tay-From whence. man, which were Christians, following the Sect of Nefforms. After the death of Con Can, 60 the Turies first the faid Naftorson exalted himselfe to the Kingdome, and they called him King John, reporting ten times more of him then was true. For io the Nestorians which come out of those parts, vie to doe. For they blaze abroad great rumours, and reports vpon iust nothing. Whereupon they gave out concerning Sartach, that he was become a Christian, and the like also they reported concerning Manga Can, and Ken Can : namely, because these Tartars make more account of Christians, then they doe of other people, and yet in very deed, themselues are no Christians. So likewife there went forth a great report concerning the faid King lohn. Howbeit, when I travelled along by his Territories, there was no man that knew any thing of him. but onely a few Nestorians. In his Pastures or Territories dwelleth Ken Can, at whose Court Frier The place of Andrew was. And I my felte passed by it at my returne. This lobn had a Brother, being a Ken Kan his mightieman also, and a Shepheard like himselfe, called Unt, and he inhabited beyond the aboad, mightic man also, and a Shepheard Fixe himtere, cance om, and he himsolited beyond the Vatem, or Alpes of Gara Caray, being distant from his Brother lobn, the space of three weekes journey. CHAP.I. Ken Can bis abode. Worthippers of Deuils. Cyngis, a Black-Imith.

He was Lord oner a certaine Village, called Cara Garam, having people also for his Subjects, The Village of To named Crit, or Merkin, who were Christians of the Sect of Nestorius. But their Lord abando- Cara Carana ning the worship of Christ, following after Idols, recaining with him Priests of the faid Idols, crit & Merkit. who all of them are Worshippers of Deuils and Sorcerers. Beyond his Pastures, some tenne or fifteene dayes journey, were the Pattures of Moal, who were a poore and beggerly Nation; Moel in old without Gouernor, and without Law, except their Sooth-fayings, and their Davinations, vnto times beager. the which detestable studies , all in those parts doe apply their minds. Neere vato Moal were ly people. other poore people, called Tartars. The forefaid King John dyed without Iffue Male, and thereupon his Brother Une was greatly inriched, and caused himselfe to be named gan : and his Droues and Flockes raunged even vnto the Borders of Moal. About the fame time there was one Cyngis, a Blacke. Smith, among the people of Moal. This Cyngis stole as many Cartell from Cyngis. 20 Vut Can, as he could possibly get : infomuch, that the Shepheards of Vut complained vnto their Lord. Then prouided he an Armie, and marched vp into the Countrey of Moal, to feeke for the faid Crugis. But Crugis fled among the Tarears, and hid himselve among it them. And Was having taken some spoiles both from Moul, and also from the Tartars, returned home. Then ipake Comess vnto the Tarters, and vnto the people of Most, faying : Sirs, because we are diffitute of a Gouernor and Captaine, you fee how our Neighbours doe oppresse vs. And the Tartars fame time was the Daughter of Vas taken, which Gagis married vnto one of his Sonnes, by whom the conceined, and brought forth the great Can, which now reigneth, called Mangu-Can. Mangu-Can. 30 Then Cyagis fent the Tartars before him in all places where he came and thereupon was their name published and spread abroad : for in all places, the people would cry out : Lee, the Tartars come, the Tartars come. Howbeit, through continuall warras, they are now, all of them in a manner, confumed and brought to nought. Whereupon the Made indeuour what they can, to extinguish the name of the Tartars, that they may exalt their owne name. The Countre's wherein they first inhabited, and where the Court of Cyngis Comas yet remaineth, is called Mancherule. But because Tartaria is the Region, about which they have obtained their Conqueffs, they effeeme that as their royall and chiefe Citie, and there for the most part doe they elect their great Can.

Now, as concerning Sartach, whether hee believes in Christ or no, I know not. This I Chap. 20. am fure of, that he will not be called a Christian. Yea, nother he seemeth vnto mee to Of the Rufderide and skoffe at Christians. He lyeth in the way of the Christians, as namely, of the Rufa fians, Hungari fians, the Valachians, the Bulgarmus of Bulgaria the leffe, the Soldainnes, the Kerkis, and the Alanians: who all of them passe by him, as they are going to the Court of his Father Baats, to Castian Sez. carrie gifts; whereupon he is more in league with them. Howbeit, if the Saracens come, and bring greater gifts then they, they are dispatched sooner. He lath about him certaine Nestan rian Priefts, who pray voon their Beades, and fing their deuotions. Also, there is another vitder Baatu, called Berta, who feedeth his Cattell toward Porta Ferrea, or Derbent, where lyeth Or Borto.

And he professeth himselfe to be a Saracen, and will not permit Swines flesh to be eater in his Dominions. Howbeit, at the time of our returne, Balus commanded him to remooue himselfe from that place, and to inhabite vpon the East side of Volga: for he was vnwilling that the Saragens Messengers should passe by the faid Berta, because he saw it was not for his profit. For the space of soure daies while wee remained in the Court of Sartach, wee had not any victuals at all allowed vs. but once onely a little Cosmos. And in our journey betweene him and his Father, wee travelled in great fearer For certaine Russians, Hungarians, and Alanians, being Servants vnto the Tartars, (of whom they have great multitudes among them) affemble themselves twentie or thirtie in a company, and to fecretly in the night conveying themselves from home, they take Bowes and Ar-

60 rowes with them, and whomforger they finde in the night feafon, they put him to death, hiding themselves in the day time. And having tyred their Horses, they goe in the night vato a company of other Horses feeding in some Patture, and change them for new, taking with them allo one or two Horses besides, to eate them when they stand in neede. Qurguide therefore was fore atraid, leaft we should have met with such companions.

and Mosts appointed him to be their Chieftaine. Then having fectetly gathered together an Armie, bee brake in fuddenly vpon Unt, and ouercame him, and Out fled into Catana. At the

In this Journey we had dyed for Famine, had wee not carryed fome of our Bisket withvs. At length we came vnto the mightie Riuer of E-ha, or Volga. For it is foure times greater, then the River of Sein, and of a wonderfull depth : and issuing forth of Bulgaria the greater, it runneth into a certayne Lake or Sea, which of late they call the Hirean Sea, according to the name of a certaine Citie in Persa, standing vpon the shoare thereof. Howbeit Isidare calleth it the Cafison Sea. For it hath the Cafpion Mountaynes and the Land of Perfia fituate on the South-fide shereof: and the Mountaynes of Musiber, that is to lay, of the people called Assalini towards the East, which Mountaynes are conjoyned vnto the Caspian Mountaynes: But on the North-fide thereof lyeth the same Defart, wherein the Tartars doe now inhabit. Howbeit heretofore there dwelt certayne people called Changla. And on that fide it receiueth the ffreames 10 of Etilia, which River increaseth in Summer time, like vnto the River Nilus in Egypt. Vpon the West part thereof, it hath the Mountaynes of Alani, and Lessi, and Porta ferrea, or Derbent, and the Mountaynes of Georgia. This Sea therefore is compafied in on three fides with the Mountaynes, but on the North-fide with plaine ground. Frier Andrew in his Journey travelled round about two fides thereof, namely, the South and the East-lides : and I my felse about other two, that is to fay, the North-fide in going from Baatu to Mangu-Can, and in returning likewife 1 and the West-fide in comming home from Beats into Syria. A man may trauell round about it in foure moneths. And it is not true which Isidore reporteth, namely, that this Sea is a Bay or Gulfe comming forth of the Ocean : for it doth, in no part thereof, ioyne with the Ocean, but is enuironed on all fides with Land. A Lebe Region extending from the West shoare of the foresaid Sea, where Alexanders Iron gate, otherwise castled the Citie of Derbent, is situate, and from the Mountaynes of Alaria, all along by the Fennes of Maoiis, whereinto the River of Tanais falleth, and fo forth, to the North Ocean, was wont to be called Albania. Of which Countrey Isidore reporteth, that there bee Dogges of such an huge stature, and so fierce, that they are able in fight to match Bitls, and to mafter Lions. Which is true, as I vnderstand by diuers, who told me, that there towards the North Ocean, they make their Dogges to draw in Carts like Oxen, by reason of their bignelle and itrength. Moreouer, vpon that part of Etilia where we arrived, there is a new Cottage built, wherein they have placed Tartars and Ruffians both together, to ferrie ouer, and transport Mellengers going and comming, to and fro the Court of Basts. For Basts remayneth vpon the farther fide towards the East. Neither ascendeth hee in Summer time more Northward then the foresaid place where we arrived, but was even then descending to the South. From Ianuary vntill August, both he and all other Tartair ascend by the banks of Rivers, towards cold He descended and Northerly Regions, and in August they begin to returne backe againe. Wee passed downer downe the Riunto the Villages of Bulgaria the greater, standing toward the North, it is size dayes lourney, which what Deuill carried the Religion of Mahomet thither. For, from Derhent, which is vpon the extreme borders of Persia, it is aboue thirtie dayes sourney to passe ouerthwart the Defart, and so to ascend by the banke of Etilia, into the foresaid Countrey of Bulgaria. All 40 which way there is no Citie, but onely certayne Cottages neere unto that place where Etilia falleth into the Sea. Those Bulgarians are most wicked Saracens, more earnestly professing the dam-The description hable Religion of Mabones, then any other Nation what seems, more cornettuy protesting the damthe Court of Baats, I was aftonied at the fightethereof: for his Houles or Tents leemed as though they had beene some huge and mightie Citie, stretching out a great way in length, the people ranging vp and downe about it for the space of some three or source leagues. And even as the people of Ifrael knew every man, on which fide of the Tabernacle to pitch his Tent : even so every one of them knoweth right well, towards what fide of the Court hee ought to place his house Horda fignia one or them knowed light the Cart. Whereupon the Court is called in their Language Horda, fith the midft, when he takes it from off the Cart. Whereupon the Court is called in their Language Horda, which fignifieth, the midft : because the Gouernour or Chieftaine among them dwels alwayes 50 in the middeft of his people: except onely that directly towards the South no subject or interiour person placeth himselfe, because towards that Region the Court gates are set open ; but vnto the right hand, and the left hand they extend themselues as farre as they will, according to the conveniencie of places, to that they place not their houses directly opposite against the Court, At our arrivall wee were conducted vnto a Saracen, who provided not for vs any victuals at all. The day following, we were brought vnto the Court : and Baats had caused a large Tent to bee erected, because his house or ordinary Tent could not contayine so many men and women as were assembled. Our Guide admonished vs not to speake, till Baats had given vs commandement so to doe, and that then we should speake our minds briefly. Then Baats demanded whether your Maieltie had lent Ambassadors vnto him or no ? I answered, that your Maiestie had sent Messen 60 gers to Ken-Can: and that you would not have fent Mellengers vnto him, or Letters vnto Sartach, had not your Highnesse beene perswaded that they were become Christians : because you fent not vnto them for any feare, but onely for congratulation, and courtefies fake, in regard that you heard they were connerted to Christianitie. Then led he vs vnto his Paullion : and we were charged not to touch the cords of the Tent, which they account in flead of the threshold of the house. There we stood in our habit bare-footed, and bare-headed, and were a great and strange foectacle in their eyes. For indeed Frier lobn de Plano Carpini, had beene there before my com- 100m de Plane ming: howbeit, because he was the Popes Messenger, he changed his habit that hee might not Carp.ni. be contemned. Then wee were brought into the very midft of the Tent, neither required they of vs to doe any reuerence by bowing our knees, as they vie to doe of other Messengers. Wee ftood therefore before him for the space wherein a man might have rehearled the Plalme, Milereremei Dem : and there was great filence kept of all men. Baatn himselfe sate vpon a seat long and broad like vnto a Bed, gilt all ouer, with three flaires to afcend thereunto, and one of his In Ladies fate beside him. The men there assembled, fate downe scattering, some on the right hand of the faid Lady, and some on the left. Those places on the one side which the women filled not up (for there were only the Wives of Baata) were supplyed by the men. Also, at the very entrance of the Tent, flood a bench furnished with Cosmos, and with flately great cups of Silner and Gold, being richly fet with Precious Stones. Bann beheld vs earneftly, and wee him: and he feemed to me to resemble in personage, Monsieur Iohn de Beaumont, whose soule resteth in peace. And he had a fresh ruddie colour in his countenance. At length hee commanded vs to

vpon I bowed one knee as vnto a man : then he fignified that I should kneele vpon both knees: and I did to, being loth to contend about fuch circumstances. And againe, hee commanded me to 20 speake. Then I thinking of Prayer vnto God, because I kneeled on both my knees, beganne to pray on this wife : Sir, we befeech the Lord, from whom all good things doe proceed, and who harly given you thele earthly benefits, that it would pleafe him hereafter to make you partaker of his heavenly bleffings: because the former without these are but vaine and improfitable. And Ladded further. Be it knowne vnto you of a certaintie, that you shall not obtayne the joyes of Heauen, vnleffe you become a Christian : for God faith, Whofoener beleeueth and is baptized. Shalbe (aued : but be that beleeneth not, Shalbe condemmed. At this word he modeftly smiled ; but the other Moals began to clap their hands, and to decide vs. And of my filly Interpreter, of whom especially I should have received comfort in time of need, was himselfe abashed and veterly dashe out of countenance. Then, after filence made, I said vnto him, I came vnto your Sonne, because we Sourreigne Lord the King of France: and your Sonne fent me hither vnto you. The cause of my

And he en- The Leiters of quired your Maiesties Name, and my name, and the name of mine Associate and Interpreter, the Frank and caused them all to be put downe in writing. He demanded likewise (because hee had beene informed, that you were departed out of your owne Countries with an Armie) against whom you waged warre ? I answered : against the Saracens, who had defiled the House of God at Ierusalem. He asked also, whether your Highnesse had euer before that time sent any Messengers vnto him, or no ? To you Sir? (faid I) neuer. Then caused he vs to sit downe, and gaue vs of his Milke to drinke, which they account to be a great fauour, especially when any man is admitted

4 0 to drinke Colmos with him in his owne house. And as I fate looking downe vpon the ground. he commanded me to lift vp my countenance, being delirous as yet to take more diligent view of vs. or elfe perhaps for a kind of Superstitious observation. For they, esteeme it a figure of ill lucke, or a prognottication of euill vnto them, when any man fits in their prefence. holding downe his head, as if he were fad : especially, when hee leanes his cheeke or chin voon his hand. Then we departed forth, and immediately after came our Guide vnto vs, and conducting vs vnto our Lodging, faid vnto mee : Your Mafter the King requesteth that you may remayne in this Land, which request Baats cannot fatisfie without the knowledge and confent of Manou-Can. Wherefore you, and your Interpreter must of necessitie goe vnto Mangu-Can. Howbeit your alfociate, and the other man shall returne vnto the Court of Sartach, staying there for you, till you 50 come backe. Then began the man of God mine Interpreter to lament, esteeming himselse but a dead man. Mine Affociate also protested, that they should sooner chop off his head, then withdraw him out of my company. Moreover, I my felfe faid, that without mine Affociate I could not goe; and that we flood in need of two Semants at the least, to attend upon vs. because, it one should chance to fall fick, we could not be without another. Then returning vnto the Court, he told these Savings vnto Baatu. And Baatu commanded, saving : let the two Priests and the Interpreter goe together, but let the Clerke returne vnto Sartach. And comming againe vnto vs, hee told vs even fo. And when I would have spoken for the Clerke to have had him with vs, he faid : No more words : for Bastu hath refolued, that fo it shall bee , and therefore I dare not goe vnto the Court any more. Gofer the Clerke had remayning of the Almes money be-6c flowed vpon him, twentie fixe Tperperas, and no more; ten whereof he kept for himselfe and for the Lad, and fixteene hee gaue vnto the man of God for vs. And thus were we parted a funder with teares: he returning vnto the Court of Sartash, and our felues remayning still in the same

ter, the Neltonian Priests were adorned with our Vestments in the presence of the faid Seriach. Then were our felues were conducted vnto another Hoft, who was appointed to prouide vs house-roome, victuals, and Hories. But because wee had not ought to bestow vpon him, hee did all things untowardly for vs. Then wee rode on forward with Baats, defcending along by the bancke of Etiles, for the space of five weekes together: Somefue weekes by times mine Affociate was so extreamly hungry, that hee would tell mee in a manner weeping, that it fared with him as though hee had neuer eaten any thing in all his life before. There is a Faire or Market following the Court of Bastu at all times : but it was fo farre diflant from vs, that wee could not have recourse thereunto. For wee were constrained to 10 walke on foote for want of Horses. At length certaine Hungarians (who had sometime beene after a fort Clergie men) found vs out; and one of them could as yet fing many Songs without booke, and was accounted of other Hungarians as a Prieft, and was fent for vnto the Funerals of his deceated Countrey-men. There was another of them also pretily well instructed in his Grammar: for he could understand the meaning of any thing that we spake, but could not anfwere vs. Thefe Hungarians were a great comfort vnto vs, bringing vs Cosmos to drinke, vez. and iometimes fielh for to eate also : who, when they requested to have some Bookes of vs. and I had not any to give them (for indeed we had none but onely a Bible, and a Breuiary) it grieued me exceedingly. And I faid vnto them : Bring me some Inke and Paper, and I will write for you fo long as we shall remaine here : and they did so. And I copied out for them Horas bea- 20 ta Virginis, and Officium defunctorum. Moreouer, vpon a certaine day, there was a Comanian that accompanied vs. faluting vs in Latine, and faying: Saluete Domini. Wondering thereat. and faluting him againe, I demanded of him, who had taught him that kind of falutation! He faid, that he was baptized in Hungaria by our Friers, and that of them he learned it. Hee faid moreover, that Basis had enquired many things of him concerning vs, and that he rold him the effate of our Order. Afterward I faw Bantu riding with his company, and all his Subjects that were housholders or Masters of families riding with him, and (in mine estimation) they were not five hundred persons in all. At length about the end of Holy-rood, there came a certaine rich Most vnto vs (whole Father was a Millenary, which is a great Office among them) fay-Aiourney of ing, I am the man that must conduct you vnto Mangu-Can, and we have thither a journey of 30 fouremoneths fouremoneths long to travell, and there is such extreame cold in those parts, that stones and trees doe even rive afunder in regard thereof. Therefore I would wish you throughly to aduise your felues, whether you be able to indure it or no. Vnto whom I answered : I hope by Gods helpe, that we shall be able to brooke that which other men can indure. Then hee faid : if you cannot indure it, I will forfake you by the way. And I answered him: it were not inst dealing for you fo to do, for we go not thither vpon any bufineffe of our owne, but by reason that we are fent by our Lord. Wherefore, fithence we are committed vnto your charge, you ought in no wife to forfake vs. Then he faid; all shall be well. Afterward he caused vs to shew him all our garments : and whatfoeuer he deemed to bee leffe needfull for vs, he willed vs to leaue it behind in the custodie of our Hoth. On the morrow they brought vnto each of vs a furred Gowne, 40 made all of Rams skinnes, with the Wooll still vpon them, and breeches of the same, and boots also or buskins according to their fathion, and shooes made of felt, and hoods also made of skins The fixeenth, after their manner. The fecond day after Holy-rood, we began to fet forward on our journey, having three guides to direct vs : and we rode continually East-ward, till the feast of All-Saints. Throughout all that Region, and beyond also did the people of Changle inhabite, who were by Forty fix daics parentage discended from the Romans. Vpon the North fide of vs wee had Bulgaria the greater, and on the South, the forefaid Caft ian Sea.

Auing trauelled twelue daies iourney from Etilia, we found a mightie River called Iaoae: which River issuing out of the North, from the land of Pascatir, descended into the fore- 50 faid Sea. The language of Pascatir, and of the Hungarians is all one, and they are all of them Shepheards, not having any Cities. And their Countrey bordereth vpon Bulgaria the greater, on the West frontier. From the North-East part of the said Countrey, there is no Citie at all. Out of the faid fore-named Region of Pascatir, proceeded the Hunnes of old time, who afterward were called Hungarians. Next with it is Bulgaria the greater. Isidore reporteth, concerning the people of this Nation, that with fwift Hories they trauerfed the impregnable walls and bounds of Alex under, (which, together with the Rockes of Caucasus, served to restraine those barbarous and blood-thirstie people from inuading the Regions of the South) infomuch that they had tribute paid vnto them, as farre as Agypt. Likewise they wasted all Countries even vnto France. Whereupon they were more mightie then the Tartars as yet are. And vnto 60 them the Blacians, the Bulgarians, and the Vandals inyned themselves. For out of Bulgaria the greater, came thole Bulgarians. Moreouer, they which inhabite beyond Dambius, neere vnto Constantinople, and not farre from Palcatir, are called Ilac, which (fauing the pronunciation) is all one with Blac, (for the Tartars cannot pronounce the Letter B) from whom also discended

the people which inhabite the Land of Affani. For they are both of them called Ilac, (both thele and the other) in the languages of the Ruffians, the Polonians, and the Bohemans. The Sclauonians speake all one language with the Vandals, all which banded themselves with the Hunnes : and now for the most part, they write themselves vnto the Tartars: whom God hath raised up fro the vermoit parts of the earth, according to that which the Lord faith: I will prouble Deut, 32.v. 21. them to every framely such as keepe nothis Law) by a people, which is no people, and by a foolsh Nation well anger thim. This prophecy is fulfilled, according to the literall fense thereof, upon all Nations which observe not the Law of God. All this which I have written concerning the Land of Pafcair, was told me by certaine Friers Pradicants, which travelled thither before e-10 uer the Tartars came abroad. And from that time they were subdued vnto their neighbours the Bulgarians being Saracens, whereupon many of them proued Saracens alfo. Other matters concenting this people, may be knowne out of Chronicles. For it is manifest, that those Prouinces beyond Confiantinople, which are now called Bulgaria, Valachia, and Sclauonia, were of old time Provinces belonging to the Greeker. Alfo Hungaria was heretofore called Pannonia. And wee camlean huse were riding ouer the Land of Changle, from the feast of Holy-rood, vntill the feast of All-Saints: plane Countravelling almost ruery day (according to mine estimation) as farre, as from Paris to Orleans, trey. and foretimes farther, as we were trouided of Post-horses; for some dates we had change of horfes twice or thrice maday. Sometimes we trauefled two or three daies together, not finding any people, and then we were conftrained not to ride to faft. Of twentie or thirtie Horles we 20 had glwaies the worft, because we were Strangers. For enery one tooke their choice of the best Horfes before vs. They promided me alwaies of a ffrong Horfe, because I was very corpulent and heavy : but whether he ambled a gentle pale or no, I durft not make my question. Neither yet durit I complaine, although he trotted full fore. But every man must bee contented with his lot as it fell. Whereupon we were exceedingly troubled; for often rimes our Horles were tyred before we could come at any people. And then we were confirmined to beate and whip on our Horfes, and to lay our Garmenes voon other emptie Horfes : yea, and fometimes two of vs to ride vpon one Horie.

F honger and thirft, cold and wearineffe; there was no end. For they gaue vs no victuals, Chap. 24. 30 Obus onely in the successing. In the morning they vied to give vs a little drinke, or some fod. Of the hunger den Millet to tip off. In the evening they bestowed fiesh vpon vs, as namely, a shoulder and and thirst, and breast of Rams Mucton, and energy man a measured quantitie of broath to drinke. When wee had fufficient of the fleih-broath, we wete maruelloutly well refreshed. And it feemed to mee flained in our most elessant, and most nourishing drinke. Every Saturday I remained fasting vntill night, journed. without eating or drinking of ought. And when might came, I was constrained, to my great griefe and forrow, to cate fiesh. Sometimes we were faine to eate fiesh halfe fodden, or almost raw, and all for want of Fewell to feethe it withall; especially, when we lay in the fields, or were benighted before we came at our journeys end : because we could not then conveniently gather rogether the dung of Horses or Oxen: for other fewell we found but seldome, except 40 perhaps a few thornes in some places. Likewise vpon the banckes of some Rivers, there are woods growing here and there. Howbeit they are very rare. In the beginning our guide highly distained vs, and it was tedious vnto him to conduct such base fellowes. Atterward, when he began to know vs somewhat better, he directed vs on our way by the Courts of rich Moals. uers. and we were requested to pray for them. Wherefore, had I carried a good Interpreter with me. I should have had opportunitie to have done much good. The forefaid Chingis, who was the first great Can or Emperour of the Tartars, had foure Sonnes, of whom proceeded by naturall difcent many children, every one of which doeth at this day enion great possessions : and they are daily multiplyed and dispersed over that huge and vast Desart, which is in dimensions, like vnto the Ocean Sea. Our guide therefore directed vs. as we were going on our journey, vnto 50 many of their habitations. And they maruelled exceedingly, that wee would receive neither Gold nor Silver, nor precious and costly garments at their hands. They inquired also, concerning the great Pope, whether he was of fo lasting an age as they had heard? For there had gone a report among them, that hee was fine hundred yeares old. They inquired likewise of our Countries, whether there were abundance of Sheepe, Oxen, and Horses, or no? Concerning the Ocean Sea, they could not conceine of it, because it was without limits or bankes. Vpon Eight daies the Euen of the feath of All-Saints, wee for looke the way leading towards the East, (because journy Souththe people were now descended very much South) and wee went on our journey by certaine ward Aless, or Mountaines directly South-ward, for the space of eight daies together. In the forefaid Defart I faw many Affes (which they call Colan) being rather like vnto Mules: thefe did High Moun-60 our guide and his companions chafe very eagerly : howbeit, they did but lofe their labour, for taines. the beafts were two swift for them. Vpon the feuenth day there appeared to the South of vs Manured huge high Mountaynes, and we entred into a place which was well watered, and fresh as a Gar-grounds.

Ar the same time of the yeere, they went upon the Ice in that Countrey. And before the feaft of Saint Michael, we had frost in the Defart. I enquired the name of that Province : but being now in a strange Territorie, they could not tell mee the name thereof, but onely the name of a very fmall Citie in the same Prouince. And there descended a great River downe from the Moun-A great River, taynes, which watered the whole Region, according as the Inhabitants would give it passage, by making divers Chanels and Sluces : neither did this River exonerate it felfe into any Sea, but was swallowed vp by an hideous Gulfe into the bowels of the earth, and it caused many Fennes or Lakes. Also I saw many Vines, and dranke of the Wine thereof.

THe day following, we came vnto another Cottage neere vnto the Mountaynes. And I enquired what Mountaynes they were, which I vnderstood to bee the Mountaines of Caucafur. which are stretched forth, and continued on both parts to the Sea, from the West vnto the East : and on the West part they are conjoyned vnto the foresaid Caspian Sea, where into the River of Volga dischargeth his itreames. I enquired also of the Citie of Talas, wherein were certaine Duich men, servants vnto one Buri, of whom Frier Andrew made mention, Concerning whom also I enquired very diligently in the Courts of Sartach and Baats. Howbeit I could have no intelligence of them, but onely that their Lord and Maiter Ban was put to death your the occasion following: This Ban was not placed in good and fertile Pastures. And vpon a certaine day being drunken, hee spake on this wise vnto his men. Am not I of the stocke and kindred of Chingis Can, as well as Baatu? (for in very deede he was brother or Nephew vnto Base tu.) Why then doe I not passe and repasse vpon the banke of Etilia, to feede my Cattell there. as freely as Baats himfelfe doth : Which speeches of his were reported vnto Baats, Whereupon Baats wrote vnto his feruants to bring their Lord bound vnto him. And they did fo. Then Baatu demanded of him whether he had spoken any such words ! And he confessed that he had. Howbeit (because it is the Tarsars manner to pardon drunken men) he excused himselfe that he was drunken at the fame time. How durst thou (quoth Baats) once name mee in thy drunkennesse: And with that hee caused his head to be chopt off. Concerning the foresaid Dutch men. I could not understand ought, till I was come unto the Court of Mangu-Can. And there I was 30 informed that Mangu-Can had removed them out of the jurisdiction of Baatn, for the space The Village of of a moneths journey from Talas Eastward, vnto a certaine Village, called Bolac: where they are fet to dig gold, and to make armour. Whereupon I could neither goe nor come by them. I passed very neere the said Citie in going forth, as namely, within three daies iourney thereof; but I was ignorant that I did io : neither could I have turned out of my way, albeit I had knowne so much. From the foresaid Cottage we went directly Eastward, by the Mountaines aforesaid. And from that time we transiled among the people of Mangu-Can, who in all places fang and danced before our Guide, because he was the messenger of Baats. For this curtesie they doe afford each to other : namely , the people of Mangu-Can receiving the messengers of Baatu in He entreth in- manner aforesaid : and so likewise the people of Basin entertaining the messengers of Mangu- 40 to the Territo- Can. Notwithstanding, the people of Baatuare more surly and stout, and shew not so much ries of Manga- curtesie vnto the subjects of Manga-Can, as they doe vnto them. A few daies after we entered upon those Alpes where the Cara Catayans were wont to inhabit. And there we found a mightie Riuer : insomuch that we were constrained to imbarke our selues, and to faile ouer it. Afterward we came into a certaine Valley, where I faw a Castle destroyed, the walls whereof were onely of mulde : and in that place the ground was tilled also. And there wee found a certaine Village, named Equius, wherein were Saracens, speaking the Persian language: howbeit they dwelt an huge distance from Persta. The day following, having passed over the foresaid Alper, which descended from the great Mountaynes Southward, wee entred into a most beautifull Plaine, having high Mountaynes on our right hand, and on the left hand of vs a certaine Sea or 50 Lake, which containeth fitteene daies journey in circuit. All the foresaid Plaine is most commodiously watered with certaine Freshets, distilling from the said Mountaynes, all which doe fall into the Lake. In Summer time we returned by the North shoare of the faid Lake, and there were great Mountaines on that fide alfo. Vpon the fore-named Plaine there were wont to bee great store of Villages : but for the most part they were all wasted, in regard of the fertile Pathures, that the Tartars might feede their Cattell there. We found one great Citie there, named Coilae, wherein was a Mart, and great store of Merchants frequenting it. In this Citie wee remained fifteene daies, staying for a certaine Scribe or Secretarie of Baats, who ought to have of Merchants, accompanied our Guide for the dispatching of certaine affaires in the Court of Manen, All this Countrey was wont to bee called Organism: and the people thereof had their proper language, 60 and their peculiar kind of writing. But it was altogether inhabited of the people, called Contomanni. The Neftorians likewise in those parts vie the very same kind of language and writing. They are called Organa, because they were wont to bee most skilfull in playing vponthe Organs or Citherne, as it was reported vnto mee. Here first did I see worshippers of Idols, concerning whom, bee it knowne vnto your Maiestie, that there bee many sects of them in the East Countries.

He first fort of these Idolaters are called Ingures : whose Land bordereth vpon the foresaid Chap. 26. Land of Organum, within the faid Mountaines Eastward : and in all their Cities Nessorians How the Nessodoe inhabit together, and they are dispetied likewise towards Perfia, in the Cities of the Sara-rians, 8 ratens, cens. The Citizens of the forefaid Citie of Cailac had three Idol-temples; and I entred into and idolates two of them, to behold their foolish superfictions. In the first of which, I found a man hauing a are toyned totwo of them, to behold their roomin inperintions. In the mittor which, I found a man nating a gether.

Croffe painted with Inke vpon his hand, whereupon I supposed him to be a Christian; for he anfor (wered like a Christian vnto all questions which I demanded of him. And I asked him, Why called legace therefore haue you not the Croffe with the Image of lefu Christ thereupon ? And he antivered, Idolaters, We have no fuch custome. Whereupon I coniectured that they were indeed Christians a but, that for lacke of inftruction they omitted the foresaid ceremonic. For I saw there behind a certaine Cheft (which was vnto them in stead of an Altar, whereupon they set Candles and Oblations) an Image having wings, like vnto the Image of Saint Michael, and other Images allo, holding procedure their fingers, as if they would bleffe fome body. That evening I could not find any thing elfe. could not find any thing elfe. For the Saracens doe onely inuite men thither, but they will not have them speake of their Religion. And cherefore, when I enquired of the Saracens concerning fuch Ceremonies, they were offended thereat. On the morrow after were the Kalends, and the Saracens feast of Pasteo-20 uer. And changing mine Inne or lodging the fame day, I tooke vp mine aboade neere vinto another Idol-Temple. For the Citizens of the faid Citie of Cailac doe curreously inuite, and los singly entercaine all messengers, every man of them according to his abilitie and portion. And entring into the foresaid Idol-temple, I found the Priests of the faid Idols there. For alwaies at the Kalends they fet open their Temples, and the Priests adorne themselues, and offer vo the peoples Oblations of Bread and Fruits. First therefore, I will describe vnto you those rices and erremonies which are common vnto all their Idol-temples and then the superstitions of the forchid legares, which be, as it were, a fest diftinguished from the rest. They doe all of them worship towards the North, clapping their hands together, and proftrating themselves on their knees you the earth, helding allo their foreheads in their hands. Whereupon the Nefferians of 30 those parts will in no case toyne their hands together in time of prayer : but they pray difplaying their hands before their breafts. They excend their Temples in length East and West; and yon the North fide they build a Chamber, in manner of a Vestrie, for themselves to goe forth into. Or tometimes it is otherwise. If it be a foure square Temple, in the midft of the Temple towards the North fide thereof, they take in one Chamber in that place where the Quire should stand. And within the said Chamber, they place a Chest long and broade like vnto a Table, and behind the faid Cheft towards the South, itands their principall Idoll: which I faw at Caratarum, and it was as big as the Idoll of Saint Christopher. Also a certaine Nestorian Privit, which Frier William had beene in Catay, faid that in that Countrey there is an Idoll of fo huge a bigneffe, that it may was at Caract be feenetwo daies journey before a man come at it. And fo they place other Idols round about "". 40 the forelaid principall Idoll, being all of them finely gilt ouer with pure gold : and vpon the faid Cheft, which is in manner of a Table, they fer Candles and Oblations. The doores of their Temples are alwaies open + wards the South, contrary to the customes of the Saracene. They have alfo great Bels like vinto vs. And that is the cause (as I thinke) why the Christians of the Bast will in no case viegreat Bells. Notwithstanding, they are common among the Russians, and Greeians of Gafaria.

A LI their Priests had their heads and heards shauen quite ouer : and they are clad in Saffron Chap. 27. Acoloured garments: and being once shauen, they leade an vnmarried life from that time Of their Tem-Lacoloured garments: and being once induen, they reduce an infinitely the front state with plet and Idols, forward: and they line an hundred or two hundred of them together in one Closter or Couent, and how they 50 Vpon those daies when they enter into their Temples, they place two long Formes therein: and how they behave themand so fitting voon the faid Formes like Singing men in a Quire, namely, the one halfe of them felues in wotdirectly over against the other, they have certaine bookes in their hands, which sometimes they thisping their lay downe by them vpon the Formes : and their heads are bare follong as they remaine in the talle good, Temple. And there they reade loftly vnto themselues, not vttering any voice at all. Whereupon comming in amongst them, at the time of their superstitious denotions, and finding them all fitting mute, in manner aforesaid, I attempted divers waies to provoke them vnto speech, and yet could not by any meanes possible. They have with them also whithersoever they goe, a certaine ftring, with an hundred or two hundred Nut-fiels thereupon, much like to our bead-roll which wee carrie about with vs. And they doe alwaies vtter thele words: On mam Hact ani ; 60 God thou knowest : as one of them expounded it voto me. And so often doe they expect a reward at Gods hands, as they pronounce these words in remembrance of God. Round about their Temple they doe alwaies make a faire Court, like vnto a Church-yard, which they enuiron with a good wall: and upon the South part thereof, they build a great Portall, wherein they fit and conferre together. And vpon the top of the faid Portall, they pitch a long Pole right vp, exalting it, if they can, about all the whole Towne befides. And by the fame Pole all men may know that there stands the Temple of their Idols. These rites and ceremonies aforesaid, be common vnto all Idolaters in those parts. Going vpon a time towards the foresaid Idoll-temple, I found certaine Priests fitting in the outward Portall. And those which I faw, feemed vato mee, by their shauen beards, as if they had beene French men. They wore certaine ornaments upon their heads, made of Paper; The Priests of the foresaid Ingures doe vie such attire whithersoener they goe. They are alwaies in their Saffron coloured lackets, which bee very flraight, being laced or buttened from the bosome right downe, after the French fashion, and they have a Cloake your their left shoulder, descending before and behind under their right arme, like unto a Deacon care rying the houssel-box in time of Lent. Their letters or kind of writing the Tartars did receive: 10 So doe the . They begin to write at the top of their paper, drawing their lines right downer and so they people of this reade and multiply their lines from the left hand to the right. They doe vie certaine papers and navieto write, characters in their Magicall practices. Whereupon their Temples arefull of fuch thort ferolls drawing their hanged round about them. Also Mangu-Can hath sent letters vnto your Maiestie, written in the lines perpendicularly downe language of the Moals or Tartars, and in the foresaid hand or letter of the Ingures. They burne ward, and not their dead according to the ancient custome, and lay vp the ashes in the top of a Pyramis, Now. as we doe, from after I had fate a while by the forelaid Priests, and entred into their Temple, and seene many of the right hand their Images, both great and small, I demanded of them what they believed concerning God ? And they answered : Wee beleeve that the e is onely one God. And I demanded farther : Whether doe you beleeue that he is a Spirit, or some bodily substance ? They faid : Wee beleeue that bee is a 20 Spirit. Then faid 1 : Doe you beleeue that God euer tooke mans nature vpon him : Then they answered; No. And againe I said: Sithence yee beleeue that hee is a Spirit, to what end doe you make so many bodily Images to represent him : Sithence also you beleeve not that hee was made man : why doe you refemble him rather vnto the Image of a man then of any other creature? Then they answered, saying : we frame not those Images whereby to represent God. But when any rich man amongst vs, or his sonne, or his wife, or any of his friends deceaseth he caufeth the Image of the dead partie to be made, and to be placed here : and we in remembrance of him doe reverence thereunto. Then I replyed . You doe thefe things onely for the friendship and flatterie of men. No (faid they) but for their memorie. Then they demanded of mee. as it were in fcotting wife : Where is God? To whom I answered : Where is your foule ! they faid. In 30 our bodies. Then faid I, Is it not in every part of your bodie, ruling and guiding the whole bodie, and yet notwithstanding is not seene or percejued ! Euen so God is euery where, and ruleth all things, and yet is he inuitible, being understanding and wisedome it selfe. Then being designation rous to hade had some more conference with them, by reason that mine Interpreter was wearie. and notable to expresse my meaning, I was constrained to keepe silence. The Moals or Tartars are in this regard of their fect : namely, they believe that there is but one God : howbeit, they make Images of felt, in remembrance of their deceased friends, couring them with five most rich and coftly garments, and putting them into one or two Carts, which Carts no man dare once touch; and they are in the custodie of their Sooth-fayers, who are their Priests, concerning whom, I will give your Highnesse more at large to viderstand hereafter. These Sooth-savers or 40 Dinners, doealwaiesattend vponthe Court of Mangu, and of other great personages. As for the poorer or meaner fort, they have them not, but fuch onely as are of the stocke and kindred of Chingis. And when they are to remoue or to take any journey, the faid Dininers goe before them, euen as the cloudie Pillar went before the Children of Ifrael. And they appoint ground where the Tents must be pitched, and first of all they take downe their owne houses: and after them the whole Court doth the like. Also vpon their festivall daies or Kalends, they take forth the foresaid Images, and place them in order, round or circle wife within the house. Then come the Moals or Tastars, and enter into the same house, bowing themselves before the said Images and worthin them. Moreouer, it is not lawfull for any stranger to enter into that house. For vpon a certaine time I my selfe would have gone in, but I was chidden full well for my labour. 50

They haue alfo-the qualities of a Buffe : for if they fee a man cloathed in red, they runne vpon him immediately to kill him. Next vnto them are the people of Teber, men which were wont to eate the carkalles of their decealed parents : that for pities lake , they might make no other Sepulchre for them, then their owne bowels. And when the 30 wind toffed them vo and downe too much, they tie them over the middeft of their Miter, from

Moreouer, their principall mellenger comming vnto the Tarters Court, had a table of Elephants toothabout him, of a cubit in length, and a handfull in breadth, being very smoothe. And whensoeuer he spake vnto A table of Elethe Emperor himselte, or vnto any other great personage, he alwaies beheld that table, as if hee phans sooth, had found therein those things which hee spake : neither did hee cast his eyes to the right hand, nor to the lett, nor voon his face with whom he talked. Chap. 26. Of fuch things Nouemb. 30.

WE departed from the forestaid Citie of Cailac on Saint Andrewes day. And there wee found almost within three leagues, a whole Castle or Village of Nestorians. Entring as befell them, into their Church, we fang, Salne Regina, &c. with ioy, as loud as we could, because it was long departingfrom fince we had seene a Church. Departing thence, in three daies we came to the entrance of that Country of the Prouince, in the head of the foresaid Sea, which seemed to vs as tempethous as the Ocean and we faw a great Hand therein. My Companions drew neere the shoare, and wet a Linnen cloath therein, to taste the Water, which was somewhat salt, but might bee drunke. There went a certaine Valley ouer against it, from betweene the great Mountaines, betweene South and East: and betweene the hils, was another certaine great Sea; and there ranne a River through that 40 Valley, from the other Sea into this. Where came fuch a continuall winde through the Valley. that men paffe with great danger, least the wind carrie them into the Sea. Therefore wee left the Valley and went towards the North, to the great hilly Countries, couered with deepe Snow, which then lay vpon the Earth : fo that vpon Saint Nicholas day we beganne now to haften our journy much, and (because we found no people, but the land themselves (to wit) men appointed from daies journey to daies journey together, the Messengers together. Because in many places in the hilly Countries) the way is narrow, and there are but few fields, fo that betweene day and night we met with two Iani, whereupon of two daics journeys we made one. Extreme cold, and travelled more by night then by day. It was extreame cold there, fo that they lent vs their Goats skins, turning the haire outward.

The second Sunday of Aduent in the evening, we passed by a certaine place betweene very terrible Rockes : and our Guide fent vnto me, intreating me to speake some good words, wherewith the Deuils might be driven away; because in that passage, the Deuils themselves were wont fuddenly to carrie men away, so that it was not knowne what became of them. Sometimes they violently fnatched a Horse and left the man : sometimes they drew out a mans bowels, and left the emptie carkaffe vpon the Horse. And many such things did often fall out there. Then we lang with a loud voyce, Credo in Deum, &c. And by the Grace of God, wee palled through (with all our company) vinhurt. After that, they beganne to intreat me, that I would write them Papers to carrie on their heads : and I told them, I would teach them a word which they should carrie in their hearts, whereby their soules and bodies should be saued ener- 60 laitingly. But alwaies when I would teach them, I wanted an Interpreter : Yet I wrote them the Creede and the Lords Prayer; faying, Heere it is written whatloeuer a man ought to beleeue concerning God. Here also is that prayer, wherein we begge of God whatsoeuer is needfull for a man. Whereupon beleeue firmely that which is written here, although you cannot understand it, and aske of God that he do that for you which is contained in this written Praver : because with his owne mouth he taught it his friends, and I hope he will saue you. I could not doe any thing elle, because it was very dangerous to speake the words of doctrine by such an Interpreter, nav almost impossible, because he was ignorant.

A Free this, wee entred into that plaine where the Court of Ken-Cham was, which was Chap. 27.

Wont to be the Countrey of the Naymans, who were the peculiar Subjects of Prefiguer Of the Country. Tobn : but at that time I faw not that Court , but in my returne, Yet heere I declare vnto you try of the Noga what befell his Ancestry, his Soone and Wives. Ken-Cham being dead, Baata defired that Man-befell he stock 10 en should be Chan. But I could vinderstand in certaintie of the death of Ken. Frier Andrew of Ken-chan his faid, that he dyed by a certaine medicine given him : and it was ful pected that Bantu caused it sonne & wives. tobe made. Yet I heard otherwise, for he summoned Baats, to come and doe him homage. And B. au. Bastu tooke his journey speedily with great preparation; but he and his Seruants were much afraid, and fent one of his Brothers before, called Stiebin: who when he came to Ken, and should Stiebin and Ken waite you his Cup, contention arifing betweene them, they flue one another. The Widow killone anoof Stichin kept vs a whole day, to goe into her house and bleffe her, that is, pray for her. There-thet. fore Ken being dead, Manon was chosen by the consent of Baatn. And was then chosen when Frier Andrew was there. Ken had a certaine Brother, called Siremon, who by the counfell of Kens Wife and her Vallals, went with great preparation towards Mangu, as if he meant to doe 20 him homage, and yet in truth he purposed to kill him, and destroy his whole Court. And when he was neere Mangu, within one or two daies journey, one of his Wagons remained broken in the way. While the Wagoner laboured to mend it, in the meane space came one of the Seruants of Manen, who kelped him : he was so inquisitive of their journey, that the Wagoner reuealed vnto him what Siremon purposed to doe. Then turning out of the way, as if hee little regarding it, went vnto the herd of Horses, and tooke the best Horse hee could choose, and pofting night and day, came speedily to the Court of Manga, reporting vnto him what he had heard. Then Mangu quickly affembling all his subjects, caused foure rings of Armed men to compasse his Court, that none might goe in or out : the rest he sent against Siremon, who tooke him, (not suspecting his purpose had beene discourred) and brought him to the Court with

Then he and his eldeft Sonne Ken Chan were flaine, and three hundred of the Nobilitie of the Tarters with them. The Noble Women also were fent for, who were all beaten with burning fire brands to make them confesse : and having confessed, were put to death. His youngest sonne Ken, who could not be capable or guiltie of the conspiracy, was left aliue : And his Fathers Palace was left vnto him, with all belonging vnto it, as well Men as Chattels: and we paffed by it in our returne. Nor durft my Guides turne in vnto it, heither going nor comming: For the Lady of the Nations fate there in heavineffe, and there was none to comfort her.

Hen went wee vp againe into the high Countries, going alwaies towards the North. At Chap. 28. 40 I length on Saint Stephens day we entred into a great Plaine like the Sea, where there was not Of their comfo much as a Mole-hill. And the next day, on the feast of S. John the Euangelist, we came vato ming to the the Palace of that great Lord. But when we were neere it, within fine daies journey, our Hoft Court of Manwhere we lay, would have directed vs a way farre about, fo that wee should yet travaile more 2" chan. then fifteene daies. And this was the reason (as I vinderstood) that wee might goe by Orah Kerule Onam Kerule their proper Countrey, where the Court of Chingis-Cham is. Others faith that he the preper did it for this purpose, that he might make the way longer, and might shew his power the more. Country of For so they are wont to deale with men comming from Countries not subject to them. And our the Tation. Guide obtained with great difficultie, that we might go the right way. For they held vs vpon this from the morning till three of the clocke. In that way also, the Secretarie(whom we expe-

50 cted at Cailar) told me, that it was contained in the Letters which Bautn fent to Mangu-Chan, that wee required an Army and ayde of Sartach against the Saracens. Then I began to wonder much, and to be greatly troubled: for I knew the Tenor of the Letters, and that no mention therof was made therein : faue that yee aduifed him to be a friend to all Christians, and should exalt the Crosse, and be an enemy to all the enemies of the Crosse and because also the Interpreters were Armenians, of the greater Armenia, who greatly hated the Saracens; left perhaps they had interpreted any thing in cuill part to make the Saracens more odious and hatefull at their pleafure, I therefore held my peace, not speaking a word with them, or against them; for I feared to gainfay the words of Baatu, least I should incurre some false accusation without reasonable cause. We came therefore the foreland day vinto the faid Court. Our Guide had a great house appointed

60 him, and we three a little Cottage, wherein wee could scarfe lay our stuffe, make our beds, and haue a little fire. Many came to visit our Guide, and brought him drinke made of Rice, in long itrait mouthed bottles, in the which I could discerne no difference from the best Antifiodorensian Wine, faue that it had not the fent of Wine. We were called, and straightly examined upon what businesse we came. I answered, that we heard of Sartach that he was a Christian : we came therefore vnto him; the French King fent him a Packet by vs, he fent vs to Bastu his Father: & his Father hath fent vs hither, hee should have written the cause, wherevon they demanded whether we would make peace with them? I answered, he hath sent Letters vnto Sariach as a Christian : and if he had knowne, he were not a Christian, hee would neuer haue fent him Letters, to treate of peace: I fay, he hath done you no wrong: if he had done any, why should you warre vpon him, or his people, he, willingly (as a just man) would reforme himselfe, and defire peace. If yee without cause will make warre with him, or his Nation, we hope that God (who is inft) will helpe them. And they wondred, alwayes repeating, why came yee, feeing yee came not to make peace. For they are now so puffed up with pride, that they thinke the whole World should delire to make peace with them. And truly, if I might bee suffered, I would preach to Warre against them to the vttermost of my power) throughout the whole World. But I would not plainly deliuer the cause of my comming, lest I should speake any thing against that which Bastu commanded. I told them therefore the whole cause of my comming thither. was

The day following we were brought vnto the Court, and I thought I could goe bare-foot, as I did in our Countrey : whereupon, I layd afide my shooes. But such as come to the Court. alish farre from the house where the Great Chan is, as it were a Bow-shot off: where the Horses abide, and a Boy to keepe them. Whereupon, when wee alighted there, and our Guide went with vs to the house of the Great Chan, a Hungarian Boy was present there, who knew vs fto wit) our Order. And when the men came about vs, and beheld vs as Monsters, especially be- 20 cause we were bare-footed, and demanded whether we did not lacke our feet, because they supposed we should strait-way have lost them, that Hangarian told them the reason, shewing them the condition of our Order. Then the chiefe Secretary (who was a Nestorian and a Christian, by whose counsell and aduice almost all is done) came vnto vs, to see vs , and looked earneftly vnon vs. and called the Hungarian vnto him, of whom he demanded many Questions. Then we were willed to returne vato our Lodging.

Chap. 29. Ot a Christian and continuance of the Winter.

An Armenian Their confe-Armenian Monke.

Monkish Re-(ue)lation.

And when we returned, at the end of the Court towards the East, farre from the Court, as much as a Crosse-bow could shoot at twice, I saw a house, vpon the which there was a little Croffe, then I reloyced much, supposing there was some Christianitie there. I went in boldly ot the conte-rence with 50- and found an Altar very well furnished, for there in a Golden cloth were the Images of Christ gias the coun- and the bleffed Virgin, and Saint Lohn Baptiff, and two Angels, the lineaments of their bodies and terfeit Armeni- garments diftinguished with Pearle, and a great filter Croffe having precious stones in the corners, and the middle thereof, and many other Embroyderings and a Candle burning with Oyle before the Altar, having eight Lights. And there fate an Armenian Monke, forme-what blacke and leane, clad with a rough hairen Coate to the middle legge, having vpon it a blacke Cloke of brittles, furred with spotted Skinnes, girt with Iron under his haire-cloth. Presently after wee entred in, before we faluted the Monke, falling flat vpon the ground, we fang, Aue Regina Calorum, &c. and he rising, prayed with vs. Then faluting him, we fate by him having a little fire rence with the vs much, faying, that we should boldly speake, because we were the Messengers of God, who is greater then all men. Afterwards he told vs of his comming, faying, he came thither a moneth before vs, and that he was a Heremite of the Territorie of Hiernfalem, and that the Lord appeared to him three times, commanding him to goe to the Prince of the Tartars : And when he deferred to goe, the third time God threatned him, and ouerthrew him vpon the ground, saying, he should dye, vnleffe he went; and that he told Mangu Chan, that if he would become a Chriftian, the whole World should be obedient vnto him; and the French and the Great Pope should obay him : and he aduised me to say the like vnto him. Then I answered, brother, I will willingly perswade him to become a Christian: (For I came for this purpose, to preach thus vnto him for a brother and a friend : but I will never promife, that they shall become his Servants, and pay him Tribute, as these other Nations; because in so doing I should speake against my conscience, then he held his peace. We went therefore together to our Lodging, which I found a cold Harbour ; and we had eaten nothing that day, fo we boyled a little flesh and Millet in the broth of flesh to sup. Our Guide and his companions were drunken at the Court: and little care was had of vs. At that time the Messengers of Vastace were there hard by vs, which weeknew not: And the men of the Court made vs rife in great haste, at the dawning of the day. And I went bare-foot with them a little way, vnto the house of the faid Messengers. And they demanded of them, whether they knew vs. Then that Grecian Souldier calling our Order and my companion S. Francis Dr. nilter, and all his fellowes, gaue great testimony of vs. Then they demanded whether wee had peace or war with Vaftace? we have (faid I) nor war nor peace. And they demanded, how that might be! Because (faid I) their Countries are far removed one from the others, and meddle not together. Then the Messenger of Vastace said wee had peace, giving mee a caueat : so I held my

And he began to comfort 40 all) I will promife him alfo, that the French, and the Pope will much rejoyce thereat, and account 50 to remembrance, because he had feene him in the Court of Vastace, with Frier Thomas, our Mi- 60 tongue. That morning, my toes ends were frozen, to that I could no longer goe bare-foot : for in those Countreyes the cold is extreame sharpe: and from the time when it beginneth to freeze it neuer ceafeth vntill May : nay, in the moneth of May it freezed euery morning; Froft vntill the but in the day time it thawed through the heate of the Sunne : but in the Winter it monethof neuer thawes, but the Ice continues with every winde. And if there were any winde May. there in the Winter, as it is with vs, nothing could live there, but it is alwaics milde weather vntill Aprill, and then the winds arife, and at that time when wee were there (about Weather vinin riping and with the winde killed infinite creatures. In the Winter little frow Easter in the fell there: but about Easter, which was in the latter end of Aprill , there fell so great a snow, end of the end that all the streets of Caracarum were full; that they were fayne to carrie it out with their of Aprill, And that all the streets of Caracarum were run; once they or the Carts, and Breeches of the same, see Snew in 10 Carts. Then they first brought vs (from the Court) Ramskin Coats, and Breeches of the same, the end of and Shooes, which my Companion and Interpreter received. But I thought I had no need of Aprill, them, because I supposed my Pelt-garment (which I brought from Basin) was sufficient for me.

Then the fift of Januarie we were brought vnto the Court : and there came Nefforian Priefts vato me, (I not knowing they were Christians) demanding which way we worshipped ? I faid, onto the East. And this they demanded because wee had shauen our beards by the aduice Shauing. of our Guide, that wee might appears before Chan according to the fashion of our Countrey: whereupon, they thought wee had beene Tunians (to wit) Idolaters. They made vsalio expound out of the Bible. Then they demanded what reuerence wee would doe to Chan, whether after our owne fashion, or theirs? To whom I made answere. Then they entring into the house, delivered what wee had faid. So their Lord was contented. And they fet vs before the gate of the house, lifting vp the Felt which hung before the gate. And because it was Christmas wee began to fing, From the first Easterne Land,

For that was the house of a certaine Christian Ladie, whom he dearely loued, by whom he had the forefail daughter : and hee married that young wife befide : but yet the daughter was Mistresse of all that Court , which was her Mothers. Then he they vie these foure kinds of Drinkes in the Winter. Then I answered, Sir, wee are not men who take pleasure in drinke. What pleaseth you shall contene vs. Then he commanded drinke Drinke of Rice who take pleature in drinke. Wee have neither Gold nor Silver, nor precious stones to present unto you, but our selnes, whom we present to serve, and pray unto God for you. At the least, give vi leave to continue while the cold be past. My Companion is so weake, that hee cannot by any meanes transile on Horse-backe without bazzard of his life. For my Companion willed The univer of me, and adjured me, to craue leave to stay. For we supposed we must returne to Bastu, unlesse of Manue Chan, bis speciall Grace he gave us leave to stay. Then he began to answer: Even as the Sunne spread: Many claim. Hitherto I vinderstood my Interpreter: but further, 1 could not 10 perceine any perfect sentence. Whereby I casily found hee was drunke, and Maneu Chan drunken Inter-himselte was drunke also, as I thought. Yet with this, (as it seemed to mee, hee ended his speach) that he was displeased that we came first to Sartach, before wee came to him. Then feeing the defect of my Interpreter, I held my peace, this onely excepted, that I intreated his Highnesse hee would not be displeased, for that which I spoke of Gold and Silver : because I spoke it not that he had need of such things, or defired them, but because we would willingly honour him with temporall and spirituall things.

Then he made vs rife, and fit downe againe; and after some few words, doing our dutie to him. we went out, and his Secretaries, and that Interpreter of his (who had the bringing up of one of his Daughters) went together with vs. And they began to bee very inquifitine of the 20 Kingdome of France, whether there were many Rams, Oxen and Horses there, as if presently they should enter and take all. And oftentimes I was faine to bridle my felfe much, in dissembling anger and indignation. And I answered, There are many good things there which yee shall see, if yee happen to come thither. Then they appointed vs one, who should have care of vs. And we went wnto the Monke : and when we came out againe, ready to goe to our lodging, the foresaid Interpreter came vnto vs; saying, Mangu Chan hath compassion on you, and gives you two moneths time to flay. Then the extreame cold will be past, and he fends to you : Here within ten daies iourney there is a good Citie, called Caracarum, if yee will go thither, he will cause necessarie things to be given you: but if yee will abide heere, yee may, and yee shall have necessaries : yet it will be a troublesome thing for you to follow the Court. And I answered : 30 The Lord preserve Mangu Chan, and grant him a good and long life. We have found this Monk heere, whom we thinke to be an holy man, and that by the good pleasure of God he came into peareth ch.36. these parts, wherefore we would willingly stay with him, because wee are Monkes, and wee would pray together for the life of Chan. Then he held his peace and departed. And we went vnto our house, which we found very cold, and without any Fuell, as yet failing, and it was night. Then he, to whom we were recommended, prouided vs Fuell, and a little meate. Our Guide was now to returne to Baatu, who defired a Carpet of vs, which (by his Commandement) we left in the Court of Baatn : which we gave him, and he peaceably departed fo, kiffing our right hand, and confessing his fault, if he suffered vs to indure hunger and thirst voon the way. We pardoned him, crauing pardon of him and his whole Family, if we had given them 40 any euill example.

Moreover, she told vs, that at Caracarum, there was a certaine Goldfmith, a Parif- fmith, called William, borne at Paris; whose surname was Bouchier, and his Fathers name Lamrence Bouchier, and the thinketh he hath a Brother yet vpon the Great Bridge, called Roger Bon- 50 chier. And the told me, that he had a certaine young man which he brought vp, whom hee accounted as his Son, who was an excellent Interpreter. But Mange Chan delivered to the forefaid Gold-smith, three hundred Iascots, that is, three thousand Markes, and fiftie Worke-men to make a piece of worke, so that she feared he could not send his Sonne vnto me. For she heard some say vnto her in the Court, The men which came from your Countrey are good men, and Mangu Chan would willingly fpeak vnto them, but their Interpreter is nothing worth : therefore the was carefull for an Interpreter. We stayed therefore with other Messengers. 60 And it is otherwise with Messengers in Baatu's Court, then in the Court of Mangu Chan. For in the Court of Baats, there is one Iani on the East fide, who receive thall such as come from the West, and so of other Countries of the world : But in the Court of Mangu, they are all together under one Iani, and they may fee and visit one another. In Baain's Court they know not one another, and know not one of another, whether hee be a Messenger or no; because they know not one anothers lodging, nor fee one another but in the Court : and when one is called, Crasis a front perchance another is not called. Whereupon he told him of Damascus, and Maiter William, who was Clerke of the Lord Legat. Then Chan demanded in whole Kingdome it was ! To whom he made answer, That it was vinder a certaine King of the Frankes, called Moles : (for he had heard of that which happened at Mallora; and he would have faid, that they were of your Servants) moreover, hee told Chan that the Saracens were betweene the Frankes and him, who hindred his way. But if the way had beene open, he would have fent Mellengers, and willingly have made peace with him. Then Mangu Chan asked him, If hee would bring his Meffengers to that King, and that Bishop? He told him he would, and also to the Pope. Then Mangu caused an exceeding strong Bow to bee made, which two men could ac scarle bend, and two Arrowes, whose heads were of Silver, full of holes, which sing when they are shot like a whittle. And he mioyned Moal whom hee should fend with the faid Theodolus; Thou shalt goe to that King of the Franker, to whom this man shall bring thee, and thou shalt present him with these in my behalfe, And if he will have peace with vs, we will win ie the Countrey vpon the Saracens, even home to him, and will grant him the rest of the Countrey vnto the West : If otherwise, bring backethe Bow and Arrowes vnto vs, and tell him we shoot farre, and fmite strongly with such Bowes. Such Coiners runne through the world, whom the Moallians kill when Sergius an Arthey can take them. Now the Epiphany was at hand, and that Armenian Monke, Sergins by menian Monke, name, told me. That he should baptize Mangu Can vpon the Holy-day. I intreated him to labour by all meanes that I might be prefent, that I might beare withede that I faw it : and hee promifed he would.

And he giveth vnto all, and all men thinke they are his Familiars; and all prophesie prosperitie vnto him. Then wee sate before the Court a long space, and they brought vs fiesh to eate. To whom I made answere, that we would not eate there, but if they would prouide vs meate, they should prouide it for vs at our house. Then they faid, get yee home to your house; because you were inuited for no other cause but to eate. Therefore we returned by the Monkes, who blushed at the Lye bee told me, wherefore I would not speake a word of that matter. Yet some of the Nesterians would affirme vnto mee. that he was baptized : to whom I faid, that I would never believe it, nor report icto others, fee-We came to our cold and emptie house, they prouided vs bedding and Couerlets, they brought vs also fuell, and gaue vs three the carkasse of one little leane Ramme, meate for sixe dayes; and euery day a little Platter full of Millet, and lent vs a Caldron and a Triuet to boyle our flesh: which being fodden, we fod our Millet in the broath of the fielh. This was our meate, and it had well sufficed vs, if they had suffered vs to eate in peace. But there are so many hunger-starued, who are not prouided of meate : that, as foone as they faw vs dreffe meate, they thrust in voon vs. and must eate with vs. There I found by experience, how great a Martyrdome liberalitie is in pouertie. Then the cold began much to prevaile: and Mangu (ban fent vs three Pek-coates of the Skinnes of Papions (Papionum), whole haire they turne outward; which we thankfully receined. They demanded also, how we were prouided of necessary food ? To whom I answered, 20 that little meate sufficed vs, but we have not an house wherein to pray for Mangu Chan. For our Cottage was so little, that we could scarce stand vpright in it, nor open our Bookes, as soone as wee made fire. Then they brought him word: and hee fent vnto the Monke to know, if hee would have our company : who gladly answered, that hee would. From that time wee were prouided of a better house : and we went downe with the Monke before the Court. where none lodged but we, and their Sooth-fayers : but they lodged neever, before the Palace of the greatest Lady : and wee in the furthest end towards the East, before the Palace of the last Lady. And while they stayed wayting thus, behold, in the morning, the principall Wife Cotota Caten by name, (Caten is as much as Ladie, and Cotota her proper name) came into the Chappell with many other Ladies, and with her eldeft Sonne, called Baltu, and other little ones of here: And they cast themselves downe vpon the Earth, ducking after the manner of the Nesterians. of Mangu Chas. and after this, they touched all the Images with their right hands, alwayes kiffing their hands after they had touched, and after that, they gave their right hands to all that flood about them in the Church. For this is the custome of the Nestorians when they come into the Church. Then the Priests sang many things, giving the Lady Incense in her hand, and she put it voon the fire: then they perfumed her. After this, when the day was cleere, shee began to put off the Orna- 40 ment of her head, which is called Baccha: and I faw her bare foull, then fhee commanded vs to goe forth, and as I went out, I faw a filuer Baion brought : whether they baptized her or no . I know'not : but I know, they celebrate not Maffe in a Tent, but in a standing Church. And in the Easter I faw them baptize, and hallow Fount with great Solemnitie, which now they

And while we went into our house, Mangu Chan himselfe came, and went into the Church, or Oratory, and a Golden Bed was brought, on which hee fate by his Queene, ouer against the Altar. Then were we fent for, not knowing that Mangu was come. And the Doore-keepers fearched vs, left we should have Knives about vs. But comming into the Oratory, having a Bible, and a Breuiary in my bosome, I first bowed downe vnto the Altar, and after to Mangu Chan: 50 and so passing by, we stood betweene the Monke and the Altar. Then they made vs sing a Psalme after our manner, and chaunt it. But we fang of that profe, Veni Santte Spiritus, Grc. And Cham caused our Bookes to be brought vnto him, the Bible, and the Breuiarie : and diligently inquired concerning the Images, what they fignified. The Neftorians answered him at their pleasure, becaule our Interpreter came not in with vs. And when I was first before him, I had the Bible in my bosome, which he commanded to be brought vnto him, who looked earnestly vpon it. Then he departed, and his Ladie remayned there, and distributed gifts to all the Christians there, shee gaue the Monke a Jafeet, and to the Archdeacon of the Priests another : she caused a Nasse to be spread before vs (to wit) a piece of Cloth, as broad as a Couerlet of a Bed, very large, and a * Buckeram, which when I would not receive, they fent them to my Interpreter, who had them 60 to himselfe. He brought the Nassic to Cyprus, which he sold for eightie Sultanines of Cyprus; but it was much the worle for the carriage. Then drinke was brought (to wit) drinke made of Rice and red Wine, like Wine of Rochell, and Cosmos. * Then the Ladie holding the cup full in her hand, defired bleifing vpon her knees, and all the Priefts fing with a loud voyce, and shee drunke

Another time, when all of them were almost drunke, then meate was brought (to wit) the carkaffe of one Ramme which was prefently denoured: and after that, great files, which are called Carpes, without Salt; or Bread : whereof I eate a little, so they passed the day, vntill the Eneming. And when the Lady her selfe was drunke, she tooke her Chariot (the Priests finging) and went her way. The next Sunday, when (There was Inneary 20, a Mariage in Cana of Galily) is read for the Goipell; Chans Some came (whole Mother was a Christian) and did the like, but not with so great Solemnitie. For he gaue no gifts, but made the Priests drinke, till they were drinke, and gaue them parched Millet to eate.

Before the first Sunday in Lent, the Nestorians fast three dayes, which they call the Fast of Io- Of the Fast of 10 nas, which he preached to the Niniuites. And the Armenians fall fine dayes , which they call the the Nestrians, and of their The Nestronans beginne their Fast upon Tuesday, and end it upon Thursday; fo that upon Processions Friday they eate fielh. And all that time I faw the Chancelor (to wit, the great Secretarie of vito the Court State called Bulgai) make them a pittance of flesh voon the Friday; and they blessed the flesh of Mangu chan with great Solemnitie, as the Patchall Lambe is bleffed : but he eate none with them; and this Directed Son, Vienged of Willielman Parisiensis, who was his very familiar friend. The Monke lent to Man-Saint Saint Saint ou to fail that weeke, which (as I heard) hee did : fo that on the Sabbath of Septnagefima (at Leut. which time it is as it were Eafter to the Armenians) wee went on Procession to the house of Manua Chins Mangu: and the Monke, and we two (being first searched whether wee had Knines) went in Courtvilled 20 with the Priefts, before him. And while we went in, one of the Senants went forth, carrying out the shoulder bones of Rammes, burnt to the blacknesse of Coales. Whereupon 1 manuelled greatly, what it should meane, whereof after I had inquired, I vnderstood, that hee neuer doth any thing, before he haue confulted with thole bones. Whereupon hee doth not fo much as fuf-

When therefore wee went in before him (aduised before, that wee should not touch the threshold) the Neffortan Priests brought him Incenses, and he put it vpon the Censor, Threshold-Suand they cenfed him. Then they fung, blefing his cup, and after them the Monke pronounced perficion. his bleffing, and we must bleffe last. And when he saw vs holding the Bible before our breft, he Theydoc the caused it to be brought vnto him, that he might fee it, which hee diligently looked vpon. Then like in Florida. 40 after he had drunke, and the chiefe Priest had wayted on his Cup, they gaue the Priests drinke: After that, we went forth, and my companion stayed last. And when wee were without, my companion (when hee should have gone out after vs) turned his face to Chan, bowing himselfe vnto him : and then, haiftly following vs, he flumbled at the threshold of the house.

And when we went in halte toward the house of Baltu his eldest Sonne, they that observed the threshold, layd hands on my companion, and made him stay, that hee should not follow vs, calling one, and commanding him to carrie him to Bulgai, who is the great Secretary of the Court, and judgeth those that are arraigned of life and death. But I knew it not, yet when I looked backe, and faw him not comming, I thought they detayned him, to give him some lighter garments: For he was weake, and so laden with Pelt-garments that he could scarce goe. Then 50 they called our Interpreter, and made him fit with him : but wee went to Chans eldeft Sonnes Balues Court house, who had two Wives, and was lodged at the right fide of his Fathers Court: who as who was eldest foone as he faw vs comming, leaping from his bed whereon he fate, cast himselfe vpon the earth, chan. fmiting his fore-head against the ground, worshipping the Crosse, and arising, caused it to be set vpon a new cloth, in an high place by him, very honourably. He hath a Schoolemaster, a Nestorian Priest called Danid, a very Drunkard, who teacheth him. Then he made vs sit, and give the Priests drinke, and hee also dranke, receiving the blething from them. Then wee went voto the Court of the fecond Lady, which was called Cota, who followed Idolaters : whom wee found lying ficke a bed. Then the Monke made her rife out of her bed, and worthip the Croffe, bowing her knees thrice, and ducking toward the ground : he standing with the Crosse at the West-

60 fide of the house, and she on the East: this being done, they changed places, and the Monke went with the Crosse vnto the East, and shee vnto the West. And hee boldly commanded her (although the were so weake, that the could scarce stand upon her feet) that shee should cast hertelfe downe thrice againe, and worship the Crosse, toward the East after the manner of the Christians : which she did, and he taught her to make the signe of the Crosse vpon her forehead.

After the lay downe upon her bed, and praying for her, we went unto the third house, where a Christian Lady vied to be: who being dead, a young woman succeeded her, who together with the Daughter of her Lord, joyfully received vs : and all that whole house reverently worthinped the Croile. And the fet it vpon a Velnet cloth in an high place, and thee caused meate to bee brought (to wit) the carkaffe of one Ramme, which being fet before the Lade, flee caused it to be distributed to the Priests, But I and the Monke were very warie of the meate and drinke. for the meate being eaten, and much drinke drunke, wee were to goe to the Damofell Cerina. who lodged behind that great house, which was her Mothers : who at the comming in of the Croffe, cast her felte upon the Earth, and worthipped it very demoutly, because shee had beene well taught to to doe, and thee let it in a high place, vpon a piece of tilke. And all those clothes 10 whereon the Croffe was fet, were the Monkes. ... A certaine Armenian brought this Croffe who came with the Monk (as he faid) from Hierufalem; and it was of filter, weighing about some foure markes; and it had foure Precious Stones in the corners, and one in the middle. It had not the Image of our Sauiour (because the Armeni-The Gourt of ans and the Nefforians are alhamed, that Christ should appeare nayled to the Crosse) and hee had the third Lady, presented it (by the Monke) to Mangu Chan. And Mangu demanded of him what hee defired? The Armenians to whom he answered, That he was the Sonne of an Armenian Pricft, whose Church the Saracens had destroyed, and craued his helpe for the building agains of that Church. Then hee afare shaned to ked him, for how much it might be built againe; he answered, for two hundred Jalcots (that is) for two thousand markes : and he commanded Letters to be given him, to him who received the 20 fastaed to the Tribute in Perfis, and Armenia the greater, that they should pay him the faid summe of silver. Mangu built a This Croffe the Monke carried with him every where. And the Priefts feeing the gaine thereof. began to enuie him. Wee were therefore in the house of the faid Damosell, and shee gave the The Court of Priests much drinke. From hence wee went vnto the fourth house, which was the last in number and honour. For he vied not to come often to that Ladie, and her house was very old, and her felfe nothing gracious. But after Easter Chan made her a new house, and new Chariots. She likewife as the fecond knew little or nothing of Christianitie, but followed Soothfayers, and Idolaters. Yet at our comming in, thee worthipped the Croffe, as the Monke and the Priefts taught her. There also the Priests dranke againe. And from that place wee returned to our Oratorie, which was neere thereabouts: the Priests accompanying vs with great howling and out-cryes in their drunkennesse, which there is reprehensible neither in man nor woman. Drunkennede. Then my fellow was brought home, and the Monke sharply rebuked him because he touched

TT happened afterwards, that the fame Ladie Cota, which was ficke about Septuagefing. was How Ledy Cota I ficke almost vinto death : and distination by Lots of the Idolaters could profit her nothing, Then Mangu fent vnto the Monke, demanding of him, what might bee done for her. And the 30 Monke indifcreetly answered, that it shee were not cured, hee should cut off his head, having made that antwere, the Monke called vs, declaring the matter vnto vs with teares, intreating to watch with him that night in Prayer: which we did. And he had a certayne Roote which is called Rubarbe; and hie cut it almost to powder, and put it in water, with a little Crucifixe which he had, wherein the Image of our Saujour was advanced: whereof he reported, that by it he knew, when the ficke should recouer or dye. For it they should escape, it stucke to the breft of the ficke, as if it were gladd, it otherwife it flucke not at all. And I flill thought that Rubarbe had beene some holy Relike, which he had brought from the Holy Land of Hierusalem. And he gaue all ficke persons of that water odrinke : fo that it could not bee, but their bowels racie-workers should be griped with so bitter a Potion: which alteration in their bodies they accounted a Miracle. Then I told him (when he was about to make fuch a water) that hee should prepare some of that Holy water, which is made in the Church of Rome, which hath great vertue to expell Deuils : because I vinderstood thee was vexed of a Deuill. And at his intreatie, wee made him some Holy water, and he mingled Rubarbe, and put his Crucifixe all the whole night in the water to temper it. I said moreouer, that if hee were a Priest, that the Order of Priest hood hath great power to expell Deuils. And he faid it was very true, and yet hee lyed, because hee had no order nor knew any one Letter : but was a Weauer, as I vnderstood after, in his Countrey, when I returned. On the morrow therefore I, and the Monke, and two Nefforian Priests went unto the forelaid Ladie. And fhee was in a little house, behind her greater house. When wee came in, thee fate in her bed, and worthipped the Croffe, and fet it honourably by her young 60 cloth of Silke, and drunke of the blefled water with Rubarbe, and washed her broft. And the Monke requested me to reade a Gospell ouer her, so I read the P. show of our Lord according vinto Ioha. At length the was cheered, and felt her felfe better : and thee caused foure lateots to bee brought, which she first layd at the feet of the Crosle, and after gaue me to the Monke, and reached me one, which I would not receive. Then the Monke Aretching forth his hand, tooke it, and gaue either of the Priefts one : fo that, at that time fhee gaue fortie Markes. Then fhee cauled Wine to be brought, and gaue it the Priests to drinke; and I must drinke thrice from her hand, in honour of the Trinitie. Shee began also to teach mee the Language, jesting with mee, because I was dumbe, not having any Interpreter. On the morrow we returned to her againe. And Mangu Chan hearing that we came that way.

made vs come in vnto him, because hee vnderstood that the Lady was somewhat better, and we found him with a few ieruants, supping liquid Tam, to wit, meat made of paste, for comforting the head : and the burnt shoulder-blades of a Ram lay before him : and he tooke the Crosse Io in his hand, but that hee kiffed or worthipped it, I faw not : but looked vpon it, and asked some questions, I know not what. Then the Monke craued leave to carry the Crosse alost vpona Lance: because I had spoken to the Monke before concerning this. And Mangu answered, Carry it as you thinke best to doe it. Then doing our duty to him, wee went to the foresaid Ladie, and we found her lutie and cheerfull; and the still drunke of the bleffed Water, and wee read the Paffion ouer her. And those miserable Priests neuer taught her the Faith, nor aduised her to bee baptifed. But I fate there mute, not able to speake any thing, but shee still taught me the Langrage : and the Priefts neuer find fault with any kind of Sorcerie. For there I law foure fwords Sorcerie of halfe drawne out of the sheath, one at the head of the Ladies bed, another at the feet, and two foure words. other, on either fide of the doore one. I saw also there one filuer Chalice, of our Chalices, which 20 peraduenture was taken or stolne out of some Church of Hangary; and it hung against the walls full of ashes, and vpon those ashes there was a blacke stone. And concerning such things, the

We visited her three daies, so that shee was restored to perfect health. After that, the Monke made a Banner full of Croffes, and got a Cane as long as a Lance, and we carried the Croffe aloft. I honored him as my Bishop, because hee could speake the Language; yet hee did many things The Crosse which pleased me not: for he caused a Chaire which may be folded to bee made for him, such as carried about. And many other vanities appeared in him, which displeased me. Yet wee ioyned our selves to his societie for the honor of the Crosse. For we carried the Croffe advanced through all the Tents finging : Vexilla Regis prodeunt, &c. Wherevpon the Saracens were much dismaied. Which wee did, though it much of writing in grieued my Companion, by reason of his weakenesse: wherefore our foode was Millet and Butter, or Patte folden in water with Butter, or fowre Milke, and vnleauened bread baked in Oxe-The money of dung, or Horse-dung.

Of Manageness and the Cotota with all her company, fasted that weeke, who came enery day to our 30 faft of the peo-Oratorie, and gaue meate vnto the Priests, and other Christians, whereof a great multitude flocked thither the first weeke, to heare their dutie. And she gaue to me and my Companion, to in Lent. The each a Coate and Breeches of gray Samit (Samito) furred with course haire (Stuppa letz) beproued for the cause my companion complained much of the weight of his Skinnes, which I received for my fellowes comfort, excusing my felfe neuerthelesse, that I would not weare such clothes. I gaue to my Interpreter what belonged to me. Then the Porters of the Court feeing that fo great a multitude came daily to the Church, which was within the bounds of the keepers of the Court. they fent one of their fellowes vnto the Monke, declaring vnto him , that they would not have fo great a multitule come together within the precincts of the Court. then the Monke roughly answered, that he would know whether they commanded this from Mangu Chan? hee added 40 moreouer certaine threatning speeches, as if he would accuse them to Mangu Chan. Then they preuenting him, accused him before Mangu; That he was too full of words, and that he gathered together too great a multitude to heare him speake. Afterward, the first Sunday in Lent, being called to the Court (and the Monke being shamefully demanded whether hee had a Knife. infomuch that he put off his shooes) wee came in before Chan himselfe, who having the burnt shoulder-blade of a Ramme in his hand, looked upon it, and (as it were) reading in it, began to reproue the Monke, demanding, that feeing he was a man that should pray vnto God, why hee Spoke so much with men ! but I stood behind with my head bare : and Chan saying vinto him, Why dost thou not put off thy Cap, when thou commest before me, as that Francke doth and commanded me to be called neerer. Then the Monke being much abashed, put off his Cap, con- 52 trary to the custome of the Greekes and Armenians. And when Chan himfelfe had spoken many things sharply vnto him, wee went out. Then the Monke deliuered me the Crosse to beate to the Oratorie, because he could not carry it for shame.

> After a few daies he was reconciled vnto him, promiting that he would goe to the Pope, and that he would bring all the Nations of the West to his obedience. Whereupon, he returning to the Oratorie after that conference had with Chan, began to enquire of mee touching the Pope, if I beleeved he would fee him if he came vnto him in the behalfe of Mangu, and it hee would furnish him with Horses vnto Saint lames? He demanded also of you, if I thought you would fend your sonne vnto Mangu? Then I countailed him, that he should take heede that hee did not promise lyes to Mangu, because the last errour should bee worse then the first; and that God 60 needeth not our lyes, that we should speake deceitfully for him.

At that time there arose a certaine question betweene the Monke and a Priest called longs , a Learned man, whose father was an Archdeacon, and the other Priests accounted him for a Mafter and an Archdeacon. For the Monke faid, That man was created before Paradife, and that

But I being 1910rent that they contended about this, answered, that Paradise was made upon Tuesday, when the other Trees were made, and that Man was made the fixt day. Then the Monke began to lay, Monkes, Ma-Did not the Deuill bring earth the first day from the foure parts of the world, and making clay sichaen blif. Dut not the Deuni Dring care the hind and God infpired his fould? Then hearing this Harrelie of phemie of the made the bodie of man therewith, and God infpired his fould. I departed therefore from him, going to our houle. It fell out te firewards, that he and the Priess went on Proceffion to the Court, without calling mee; because the Monke spake not to me for the foresaid reproofe, nor would be carrie me with him, as he was wont. When therefore they came before Mangu, (I being not feene among them) hee earneitly demanded where I was, and why I came not with them? The Priests fearing, excufed themselves. But returning, they told me the words of Mangu, and murmured at the Monke. After this, the Monke was reconciled to me, and I to him, intreating him, that he would helpe me with his Language, and I would helpe him in the holy Scripture. For a brother that is holpen of a brother, is as a frong Citie. After the first weeke of falting, the Ladie ceased to come vnto the Oratorie, and to give meat, and drinke, which wee were wont to have, for the Monke fuffered it not to be brought, flying, that Mutton far or Suet was put in the confection thereof: 20 and thee gaue no Oyle, but very feldome: fo that we had nothing but browne Bread, and paft boyling in water, that we might suppe broath; because we had no water, but of dislocad Snow, Snow water, or of ke, which was exceeding nought. Then my Companion began to be much grieued: fo or water office, Jacquainted Danid (the Schoole-mafter of Chant eldeft fonne) with our necessities, who made exceeding 1 acq cainted Dana (the Schoole-matter of Coan Charles Wine, Flowre, and Oyle. Wee are once a day, and that in great affliction: for as soone as they knew, that Mangu Chan had given vs Wine, most impudently they came in vpon vs like 30 Dogs, both the Nefforian Priefts, who were drunke all the day in the Court, and the Moallians also, and the feruants of the Monke. The Monke also, when any came vnto him, to whom he would gine drinke; he sent to vs for Wine. So that, the Wine caused our greater affliction

The same young man also declared to Mangu Chan, that the worke the Palace of which he commanded to be made, was finished, which worke I described vnto you. Mangu Mangu Chan at hath at Caracarum a great Court, hard by the walls of the Citie, enclosed with a bricke-wall; Caracarum,into as the Priories of Monkes are enclosed with vs. In that place, there is a great Palace, wherein which Chie he holdeth his drinkings twice a yeere: once in Easter, when hee passeth that way, and once in Palm funday. In the entrance 50 of that great Palace (because it was vnseemely to bring in bottles of Milke, and other drinkes) Master William Parifiensis made him a great filuer Tree, arthe root whereof were foure filuet The Descrip-Lions, having one Pipe lending forth pure Cowes milke, and the foure Pipes were consayed tion of a most within the Tree, vn:o the top thereof: whole tops spread backe againe downward: and your artificiall succ

And Char himselfe sitteth in the North front, in an high place, that hee may bee seene of all. And there are two degrees of steps afcending vnto him, by the one, he that carryeth his cup commeth vp vnto him, and by the other he descendeth. That space which is in the middle, be- to tweene the tree and the fleps whereby they afcend vnto him, is voyde. One only woman fitteth there about by him, but not so high as hee. When therefore hee had heard, that the Worke was finished, hee commanded the chiefe Workeman to set it in his place, and make it fit. And about Passion Sunday, hee went before with small houses, leaving his greater houses be-

Then the Monke fent him Incense, requiring him to put it on the coales and offer it to God : which, whether he did, I know not. But the Tempest They enter Car cealed, which had now continued two dayes, and now the third day drew neere. On Palme Sunday we were neere Caracarana: In the dawning of the day we bleffed the Willow boughes. whereon as yet there appeared no bud, and about nine of the clocke we entred the Citie. carrying the Crossealoft with the Banner, passing through the middle of the street of the Saracens, 30 where the Market and Faires are vnto the Church : and the Nestorians met vs on Procession. And entring into the Church, we found them prepared to celebrate the Maffe : which beeing celebrated, they all communicated, and they asked mee, whether I would communicate: I anfwered that I had drunke before, and the Sacrament should not be received but falling. Maffe being faid, it was now Euening. Mafter William brought vs with great ioy to his Inne to fup with him : who had a Wife, the Daughter of a Lotharingian, borne in Hungarie, who could speake the French and the Language of Comania. We found also there a certayne other man called Basilius, the Sonne of an Englishman, borne in Hanigarie, who also was skilfull in the foresaid Languages. Supper being ended, they brought vs to our Cottage, which the Tarters had appointed vs, in a certayne plat of ground neere the Church, with the Oratory of the Monke. On the 40 morrow Chan himselfe entred into his Palace. And the Monke and L, and the Priests went vnto him. They suffered not my companion to goe, because he stumbled at the threshold. I much deliberated with my selfe what I should doe, whether I should goe or no. And fearing offence, if I should depart from other Christians, and because it pleased him : and fearing left that good might be hindred, which I hoped to obtaine, I chose rather to go, although I saw their actions ful of Sorcery and Idolatrie : nor did I any other thing there, but pray for the whole Church with a loud voyce, and also for Chan himselfe, that God would direct him to the way of eternall falnation. We therefore went into that Court which was sufficiently ordered. And in the Summer Rivers are conveyed into every place, whereby it is watered. After this we entred into the Palace, full of men and women, and stood before Chan, having the foresaid Tree at our backs, which 50 with the Vessels thereof tooke vp a great part of the Palace. The Priests brought two little Loques, and fruit in a Platter, which they prefented vnto him , bleffing them, And the Butler brought them wato him fitting aloft in a very high place, much raised. And hee presently began to eate one of the Loanes, and ient another to his Sonne, and to a certayne yonger Brother of his. who was brought vp by a certayne Nesterian, and knew the Gospell, who also sent for my Bi-

Then he promised, that the next day he would come vnto the Church, which is great enough, and faire, and all the feeling about was coursed with filke wrought with Gold. The next day he went his way, willing the Priefts to excuse him, that he durit not come to the Church, be-

They Frier william fay, they have of that Oyntment, wherewith Mary Magdalene anounted the feet of our in the dayes of Lord, and they power in as much of that Oyle, with that which they lay alide, and kneade their the Lords Sup bread therewith. For all those people of the East put fat in their bread , in stead of Leuen or Per, and Easter Butter, or Suet of a sheepes tayle, or Oyle.

They fay also that they have of the flowre, whereof the bread was made, which the Lord confecrated; and alwayes powre out so much Oyle with it, as the flowre they lay aside. And they haue a Chamber hard by their Quire, and an Ouen, where they bake the bread, which they must conferrate with great reverence. They therefore make one Loafe of an hand breadth, with the forefaid Oyle, which they first breake into twelve pieces, according to the number of the Apo-20 files : and after divide those pieces, according to the multitude of the people : and the Priest gives the bodie of Christ to every one in his hand. And then every man taketh it out of the Palme of his hand with reuerence, and stretcheth his hand to the top of his head.

The forefaid Christians, and the Monke himselfe were very earnest, intreating vs for Gods TheChristians fake, that wee would celebrate. Then I made them bee confessed, by an Interpreter, as I desire the Sacould, reckoning up the tenne Commandements, and the feuen deadly Sinnes, and other Confession. things, for the which a man ought to bee grieued, and confessed. Some of them also were Souldiers, who excused themselves, that they must needs goe rersminde, to the Warres, or else they should bee flaine; I firmely forbad them to goe against the Chri- which thought ftians, and that they should not hurt them , they should rather suffer themselves to bee K-Hemy had flaine. for so they should become Martyrs. And I said, that if any would accuse mee of Decalogue. this Doctrine before Mangu Chan, I would bee readie to preach the same in his hearing. For the Neftorians themselves of the Court were present, when I taught this; of whom I was fuspitions, least they should report ill of vs. Then Master William caused an Iron to bee made 40 for vs,, to make Hofts, and hee had certayne Veilments which hee had made for himselfe :

for he had some knowledge in Learning, and behaued himselfe as a Clerke. Hee caused the Image of the bleffed Virgin Marie to bee graven after the French fashion, and ingraved the History of the Gospell (in the Casements) very faire, and made a certayne filter Boxe, to lay vp the bodie of Christ therein, and the Relikes, in certayne little holes cunningly made in the fides of the Boxe.

Hee made alto a certayne Oratorie vpon a Chariot, very fairely painted with holy Histories. I therefore tooke his Vestments and blessed them , and wee made Hosts , after our manner, very faire; and the Neftonians affigued mee their Font for Baptisme, wherein The Partiarch there was an Altar. And their Patriarch fent them from Baldach, a square Hide like a por- of the Nestoritable Altar, made with Chrisme, which they vie in stead of confecrated Stone. There- ans remayneth 50 fore I celebrated on the Day of the Lords Supper, in their filuer Chalice and Diffi, which at Ealdach were very great Veffels; I did the like also on Easter day. And wee communicated the people with the blefling of God, as I hope. But they baptized in the Vigill of Eafter more then threefcore persons very orderly. There was great toy generally among all Christians.

THen it hapned that Master William was grieuously sicke, and when hee was vpon reco- Chap.40. uerie, the Monke viliting him, gaue him Rubarbe to drinke, so that hee had almost William Boukilled him. Then vifiting him, when I found him foill at eafe, I asked him, what hee had chirris ficke, eaten or drunke? And hee told mee, the Monke had given him the forefaid Potion, and hee weth him Rudrunke two little Dishes full, thinking it had beene Holy Water. Then I went to the Monke, barbe; the and find voto him, Either goe as an Apostle doing Miracles indeed, by vertue of Prayer, and Priest Ionas is the Holy Ghoft, or doe as a Physician according to the arte of Medicine. It happeth at that time, that that Priest was sicke, who was, as it were, the Archdeacon of nus s ficke and the relt and his frien Is lent for a certayne Saracen, which was a Sooth-faver. Who faid vnto them, A certagne leane man, who neyther easeth, nor drinketh, nor fleepes in a Bed, is anory with him: of bee can obtaine his bleffing hee may recover. Then they understood it was the Monke. And about mid-night, the Priests Wife, his Sister, and his Sonne came, intreating that hee would come, and bleffe him. They also raised vs vp, to intreate the Monke. Then he said vnto vs , intreating him : Let him alone, because hee with three others, who likewise tooke enil courses, 10 confulted to goe vnto the Court, to procure Mangu Chan, that I and you should bee expelled from these parts.

For there arose a contention among them, because Mangu and his Wiues sent source Iascots and certayne Silkes upon Eafter Eeuen to the Monke and Priests, to distribute among them. And the Monke had kept vnto himfelie one Iafcot for his part, and of the other three, one was counterfeit, for it was Copper. Where pon it fremed to the Priests, that the Monke had kept too great a portron to himselfe. Whence (it might bee) that they had some words among themselfus, which were reported to the Monke. When day came I went vnto words among themselfus, which were reported to the Monke. When day came I went vnto the Prieit, hauing an extreme griere in his fide, and spitting bloud : whereupon I thought it was an Impostume. Then I counselled him (if he had any thing that was an others) to restore 20 The Nellarians 1t. He faid, hee had nothing. I spoke vnto him also of the Sacrament of Extreme Vnction. knowner Ex- Who answered, we have no such custome, neither doe our Priests know how to doe it : I intreat tremeVaction, you, that you would doe it for mee, as you know best to bee done. I aduifed him allo concerning Confession, which they frequent not, hee spake shortly in the Eare of a certayne

After this hee beganne to bee better, and hee intreated mee to goe for the Monke. So I went, but the Monke would not come at the first : yet when hee heard hee was some-what better, hee went with his Croffe. And I also went, and carryed (in a Boxe of Mafter Willians) the bodie of Chrift, which I had referued voon Easter Day, at the intreatie of Maiter Williams. Then the Monke beganne to kicke him with his feet , and hee most humbly im-

Then I faid vnto him; It is the custome of the Church of Rome, that the ficke should receive the Bodie of Christ, as it were prouision for their journey, and a defence against all the Deceits of the Enemie. Behold, the Bodie of Christ, which I confecrated on Easter Day. You must be confessed, and desire it. Then said hee with a great Faith, I desire it with all my heart. Which, when I had discouered, hee, with great affection said, I beleeue, that this is my Creatour and my Sauiour, who gaue mee life, and will restore it againe vnto mee after death in the generall Refurrection: and so tooke the Bodie of Christ (from my hand) made after the manner of the Church of Rome. Then the Monke abode with him, and gaue him (in my absence) I know not what Potions. On the morrow hee beganne to have the pangs of 40 death vpon him. Then taking their Oyle, which they faid, was holy, I anointed him according to the manner of the Church of Rome, as they intreated mee. I had none of our Oyle, becaule the Priests of Sartach kept all.

Which, when I had told his friends, they faid, it was true : and requested me to depart, left I might be lundered in that good, which I might promote. Afloone as her was dead, the Monke fail vnto mee, care not : I haue killed him with my Prayers. This fellow only was Learned, and opposed himselse against vs: the rest know nothing. Henceforth Mangu Chan himselfe, and they all will crouch at our feete. Then hee de- 50 Prince, for the clared vnto me the forefaul Answere of the Sooth-layer. Who said it was, Bod blindnes, But whether he were pre-instructed or not, that they knew not. Afterwards I found, that the The Monkey. Monke called the forelaid Sooth-fayer and his Wife into his Chappell, and caused dust to bee feth Dminut- fifted, and to divine vnto him. For hee had a certayne Ruterian Deacon, who divined to him. Which, when I understood, I was astonied at his foolishnosse, and said vnto him, Brother, a man fill of the Holy Ghoft which teacheth all things, should not demand Answeres or Counsell from Sooth-sayers; seeing all such things are forbidden, and they excommunicated, who follow such things. Then hee beganne to excuse himselfe that it was not true, that hee fought after such things. But I could not depart from him, because I was placed there by 60 the commandement of Chan himfelte, nor could I remocue my felfe without his speciall command.

Oncerning the Citie of Caracarum, know this, that excluding the Palace of Chan himfelfe . it is not to good, as the Cattle of Saint Denis : and the Monasterie of Saint De-Chap. 41. mis is tenne times more worth then that Palace, and more too. There are two fireets there: on of the Cione of the Saracens, where the Faires are kept : and many Merchants have recourse thither, tie of caracaby realon of the Court, which is alwayes neere, and for the multitude of Messengers. Following the Court, before the Ascension, wee Saraconsfarecame thither the Sunday before the Ascension. The next day after, we were called before Bul. well The Wick gai, who is a Justice, and chiefe Secretarie, both the Monke and all his Family, and wee; and of Mangu Chan all the Meffengers and Strangers, which frequented the house of the Monke. And wee were dyethcalled before Bulgar feuerally, first the Monke, and after wee, and they beganne diligently to inquire whence wee were, and for what purpose wee came, and what our errand was? And this inquirie was made, because it was told Mangu Chan, that foure hundred Hassaines, or fecret Murtherers were gone forth in divers Habits to kill him. About that time the forefaid 20 Ladie was restored to health, and shee sent for the Monke; and hee not willing to goe, answered : flee bath fent for Idolaters about her, let them cure her, if they can, I will goe no more. Vpon Ascension Eeuen, wee were in all the houses of Mangu Chan : and I saw when hee should drinke, how they cast Cosmos to their Idols of Felt, Then I said to the

Moreover, Mangu Chan hath eight Brethren, three by the Mother, and five by the Father. One of them of his Mothers fide, hee fent into the Countrey of the Haffafines, who are called by them Mulibet: and hee commanded to kill them all. Another went towards The Countrey Perfia, and is now entred therein, to goe (as is thought) into Turkie, from thence to fend of the Haffa-30 Armies against Baldach, and Vastacius. One of the other he sent into Cataia, against some that since, or Mulirebelled. His youngest Brother of the same venter, hee kept nigh himselfe, whose name was bet. On the Eeuen therefore of the Ascension, Mangu Chan said, hee would goe to his Mothers Court, and visit her, for it was neere. And the Monke said, hee would goe with him, and giue his bleffing to his Mothers foule. Chan was well contented. In the Eurning, the day of Accepton day. the Ascension, the foresaid Ladie was very much pained. And the chiefe of the Sooth Jayers fent to the Monke, commanding him that the Table should not be smitten. On the morrow, when the whole Court remound, the Court of the forefaid Ladie remayned fill. And when wee came to the place where the Court should stay, the Monke was commanded to depart further from the Court, then hee was wont : which hee did. Then Arabucha met his brother Arabuchathe Chan. So the Monke, and wee, feeing that hee was to paffe by vs, met him with the Crofle, yongerbro 30 And hee calling vs to minde, because sometimes he had beene at our Oratorie, ftretching forth ther of Manga his hand, made a Croffe vnto vs, like a Bishop. Then the Monke taking Horle, followed cham. him, bearing certayne Fruits. But hee alighted, before his brothers Gourt, wayting, while hee came from hunting. Then the Monke alighted there, and offered him the Fruit, which hee received. And hard by him fate two Saracens, of the Nobilitie of the Court of Chan. But Araducha vinderstanding of the contention betweene the Christians and the Saracens, enquired of Ignorant zeale the Monke if hee knew the faid Saracens; and hee answered, I know they are Dogges: abstrayer of why haue you them so neere you! but they replyed; why, say they, doe you wrong vs, the Faith, a Moreouer, while the Court abode heere, after the remoone thereof, none dare paffe that way (neither Horseman nor Footman) where the Court stayed, fo long as any shew of the fire made there, remayneth. That day certayne Saracens kept company with the Monke vpon the way, prouoking him, and disputing with him. And when hee could not defend himfelfe with Argument, and they mocked him, hee would have lashed them with the Whip which hee held in his hand; and hee went so farre, that the foresaid words were reported at the Court. And wee were commanded to depart with other Messengers, and not abide before the Court, where wee were wont. And I alwayes hoped, the King of Armenia would come. There came fome about Eafter from Bo- 10 lac, where those Ducchmen are, for whose fake chiefly I went thither, who told mee, that the Dutch Priest should come to the Court. Therefore I mooued no Question to Manen. concerning our flav, or departure. And in the beginning hee gaue vs leaue to flay but two monethes: and now fine monethes are past. This was done about the end of May. And wee had continued there all Ianuary, February, March, Aprill, and May. Hee presently sent vnto mee, commanding, that I should not goe farre off, because his pleasure was to speake 20 with mee the next day. But I told him, that if hee would speake with mee, hee should fend for Master Williams Sonne , for my Interpreter was not sufficient. And hee , that spake with mee, was a Saracen, who had beene a Messenger to Vastacim: and (blinded with Rewards) counfelled Vastacius to send Ambassadours to Mangu Chan, and the meane while the time palled: for Vaftacius thought , hee would prefently enter his Countrey. So hee sent, and after hee knew them, hee little regarded them, nor made peace with them, neither did they yet enter his Countrey : nor shall they bee able, so long The Tarun do as they dare defend themselues, nor did they eaer take any Countrey by Force, but by more by deceit Deceit. But the Monke hearing this , aduised mee secretly not to answere him, because he would procure, that an Ambassadour should be sent. Whereupon I held my peace, not willing to answere him. And hee spake vnto mee I know not what injurious words; for the which the Neftorian Priests would have accused him : so that hee had either beene flaine, or beaten all to clouts, but I would not.

I answered, God faith, if any man loue me, he will keepe my Commandements: and be that loueth me not, keepeth not my Commandements. Therefore, hee that keepeth not the Commandements of God, loneth not God. Then faid hee, have yee bin in Heaven, that yee might know the Commandements of God! The His Answeredutie or office of our Religion is to preach the Goffell to all: whereupon, when I heard of the fame of the people of Moal, I had a defire to come unto them: and while I was thus purposed, we heard of Sattach, that he was a Christian. They agreed Wee were therefore gathered together on Whidfon Euen at our Oratorie, and Mangu Chan fent three Writers, who should be Judges : one Christian , one Saracen , and one Tuine : And it was proclaimed before. Then all were ident : And there was a great affembly there : for every partie inuited the wifelt of their Nation, and many others came flocking thither. Then the Christians fet me in the mid-

Then hee demanded The beginning whereof I would first dispute seither how the world was made so what becomes of the foules of the disputa-tion concer-after death : To whom I answered : Friend, this should not be the beginning of our speech. And Mangu defires to know who bewish an lightleeues better. Then the Arbitrators judged this to bee reasonable. They would have begunne We ought fift with the forelaid questions, because they hold them for the strongest; for they are all of the Heto speak: of relie of the Manichees: heleeuing, that the one halfe of things is had, and the other good : and that God.

The herefie of the least there are two Principia. And concerning the foules they all thinke they paffe from body to body. Infomuch as one of the wilest of the Nestorian Priests demanded of mee, con- ta cerning the foules of bruite Beafts, whether they could fly any whither where they should not be compelled to labour after death ! for confirmation also thereof (as Master William told mee) a the Magi, infe- certaine child was brought from Cataia, who (according to the quantitie of his body) was not three yeeres old, yet not withflanding was capable of any reason; who affirmed of himlelfe, that he had beene three times incorporated, and knew letters, and how to write. I faid to the toresaid Tuinian, Wee firmely believe with the heart, and confesse with the mouth, that there is a God, and there is but one God, and one in perfect unitie. What beleene you? Hee laid : Fooles fay there is but one God, but Wife men fay there are many. Are there not great Lords in your Country, and Here is a greater Lord, Mangn Chan? So is it of the gods : because in divers Countries there are divers. To whom I faid : You make an ill example or comparison of men with God; for so every migh- 20 tie man in his countrey may be called a god. And when I would have diffolued the fimilitude, hee preuented me, inquiring; What manner of God is yours, whereof you speake, that hee is but Gadis Omni. one? I answered : Our God, beside whom there is no other, is Omnipotent, and therefore needeth not the helpe of another : nay, all we have neede of his helpe, it is not so with men. No man can doe all things. And therefore there must be many Lords in the earth, because no one can support all. Againe, be knowes all things, therefore be needes not a Counfeller : nay, all wifedome is from him. Moreoner, be ss perfect ly good, and needeth not our good : nay, in him we line, mone, and have our being. Such is our God, and Godperfectly therefore you must not hold there is any other. It is not so, faith he. Nay, there is one highest in the Heauens, whose Generation we know not yet, and ten are vnder him, and vnder them there is one Inferiour. And in the Earth there are infinite. Then hee would have added other fables. 30 So I asked him of that highest God, whether he thought he were Omnipotent for of any other God : and fearing to answer, hee demanded, if your God bee such as you say, Why made bee the balfe of things enill? It is falle faid I. Whoso maketh any enill is no God, and all things what sener are good. At this word all the Tuinians maruelled, and let it downe in writing, as falle, or impossible. Then he began to aske, Whence therefore commeth evill You aske amile, faid I; For first you flould demand, what emil is, before you aske whence it is. But returne unto the first question, whether you believe that any God is Omnipotent, and after I will answer you to all what soener you will demand. Then hee fate a long time and would not answer; Infomuch, as the Writers on the behalfe of Chan, were faine to command him to answer. At length hee answered : That no God was Omnipotent. Then all the Saracers brake out into great laughter : Silence being made, I laid, There- 40 fore none of your gods can fine you is all dangers, because such a chance may happen, wherein he bath no power. Againe, no man can ferue two Masters. How then can you ferue so many Lords in Heanen and in earth. The Auditorie willed him to answer. But he held his peace. Then when I was about to alleadge reasons to proue the truth of the divine Essence, and the Trinitie, in every mans hearing, the Nestorians of the Countrey faid vnto me, that it was enough, because they meane to fpeake. So I gaue them place : And when they would have diffputed with the Saracons : they answered : We grant that your Law is true, and what soener is m the Gospell is true : Wherefore wee will not dispute with you in any thing : and they confessed, that they beg at the hands of God in their prayers, that they may die the death of the Christians. And a certaine woman, under whole custodie the treasure of her Ladie was , accused them thereof vnto her Ladie : wherevoon the Ladie her felie reproued them. It fell out after this, that the Ladie her felfe began to be licke, and to fuster certaine fudden passions in divers parts of her bodie. The Sooth-favers were called : and they fitting farre off, commanded one of those Maidens, to put her hand youn 30 the place where the griefe was, and if thee found any thing, thee thould fnatch it away. Then thee arifing did fo. And the found a piece of Felt in her hand, or of some other thing. Then they commanded her to put it upon the ground; which being layd downe, it began to creepe, as if it had beene some living Creature. Then they put it into the water, and it was turned as it were, into a Horfe-leach: and he faid, fome Witch hath hurt you thus with her Sorceries: and they accused her that had accused them of the Furres, who was brought without the Tents into the fields, and received the baltinado feuen dayes together there, and was thus the Sorcerers. tormented with other punishments, to make her confesse; and in the meane space her Ladie died. Which shee understanding, faid unto them, I know my Ladie is dead, kill mee, that I may goe after her, for I neuer did her hurt. And when thee confelled nothing, Manon Chan 40 commanded to faffer her to line. Then the Sorcerers accused the Ladies daughters Nurse, of whom I spake before : w ho was a Christian, and her husband was the chiefe among all the Neforian Priefts, to flee was brought to punishment, with a certaine Maide of hers, to make her confesse. And the Maide confessed, that her Mistresse sent her to speake with a certaine Horse, to demand answeres. The woman also her felfe, confessed some things which shee did to bee beloued of her Ladie, that the might doe her good, but thee did nothing that might hurt her. Shee was demanded alfo, whether her husband were privile to it: thee excused him, for that he had burnt the Characters and Letters which she had made. Then shee was put to death, and Manou The Bishop of Chan sent the Priest her husband to the Bishop which was in Cataia, to be judged, although he were not found culpable.

In the meane time it fell out, that the principall wife of Mangu Chan, brought forth a fonne, and the Sooth-fayers were called, to fore-tell the Destinie of the child, who all prophecied prosperitie, and faid, he should live long, and be a great Lord : after a few dayes, it happened, the child died. Then, the mother enraged, called the Sooth-fayers, faying, you faid my fonne should line, and loe hee is dead. Then they faid, Madam, behold wee fee that Sorcereffe, the Nurle of Chirina, who the other day was put to death, flee hath killed your forme; and behold wee fee. thee carries him away. Now there remayned one fonne and a daughter of that woman growne to full age in the Tents: and the Ladie fent presently for them in a rage, and caused the young man to be flayne of a man, and the maide of a woman, in revenge of her fonne, whom the Soothfayers affirmed to be killed of their mother not long after, Mangu Chan dreamed of those chil- 60 dren, and demanded in the morning, what was become of them. His feruants were afraid to tell him : and he being troubled the more, demanded where they were, because they had anpeared vnto him in a Vition by night. Then they told him. So hee prefently fending for his wife, demanded whence shee learned, that a woman should give fentence of death, without the

prinitie of her Husband . And he caufed her to be flut up feauen dayes, commanding to give her The Reuenge no meat. But the man who (who flew the young man) he caused to be beheaded; and the head of Manguether, no meat. Thole two Monkes which came from you unto Sartach, Sartach fent them to Baatu: but Baatu, because Mangu Chan is the greatest over the World of the Moalls, sent them unto us. But now, that the oreat World and the Priests, and the Monkes might line in peace, and entry their goods, that the commandement of God might be heard among you, wee would have fent our En balladours of Moall with your Priests: but they answered, that betweene vs and you there was a warlike Nation, and many bad men, and troublesome wayes; so as they feared they could not bring our Embassadours safe onto 10 you, but if we would deliver them our Letters, contayning our commandement to King Lodowick, they would carrie them. For this cause wee sent not our Embassadours with them: But wee have fent the commandement of the eternall God by your faid Priests. And they called vs your Embaffadors in the Letters. Then I faid vnto them, call vs not Embuffadors, for I faid well to Chan, that wee are not the Embaffadors of King Lodowicke. Then they went vnto him and told him. But when they returned, they faid vnto me: that he held it much for our good, and that he commanded them to write as I should direct them. Then I told them, they should leave out the name of Embassadour, and call vs Monkes and Priests. I will not leave you. You leave not me (fayth he) but I leave you : because, if I goe with you. I fee the death of my bodie and foule , because I have not patience in intolerable labour. 40 Then they held three Garments or Coats, and faid vnto vs, Yee will not receive Gold, or Siluer, and yee haue stayed long here, and prayed for Chan: hee entreats you, that at the least euethere from the ry one of you would receive a fingle Garment; that yee depart not emptie from him. Then 27.0f December of the must receive them, for reverence of him : for they account it a very eurll thing, when their gifts are contemned. First, he caused vs to bee often asked, what we would have? And wee alwaies answered the same thing: so that the Christians insulted over the Idolaters, who seeke nothing but gifts. And they answered, that wee were fooles: because if hee would give them his whole Court, they would willingly take it and should doe wifely to. Receiving therefore the Garments, they be fought vs to make our prayers for Chan; which we did. So, taking our leaue, we went to Caracarum. But it happened upon a certaine day, while wee were with the 50 Monke, farre from the Court, with other Embassadours; that the Monke caused the Table to be ftrucken to hard that Mangu Chan heard it, and demanded what it was. Then they told him. So he asked, why he was remoued fo farre from the Court. They told him, because it was troublesome to bring him Horses and Oxen every day vnto the Court and faid further, that it were better, that he should stay at Caracarum. Then Chan fent vnto him, saying, if hee would goe to Caracarum, and flay there, neere about the Church, he would give him all things necessarie. But the Monke antiwered, I came from the holy Land of Ierufalem hither, by the commandement of God, and left that Citie, wherein there are a thouland better Churches then that cf Caracarum. If he please that I stay here and pray for him, as God commanded me, I will stay: if not , I will returne to the place from whence I came. So that every evening Oxen were 60 brought him voaked to the Carts, and in the morning he was brought vnto the place wherehee vied to be before the Court. And a little before wee departed thence, a certaine Nellorien came, who feemed to bee a wife man: Bulgai the chiefe Secretarie placed him before his Court; to whom Chan fent his children, that he should blesse them.

O departing from him on the Fealt of All-Saints, alwaies going toward the South, in the Fealt of Saint Martin, we came to the Mountaines of the Alani. Betweene Baata and Sarai in fifteene dayes we found no people, but one of his fonnes, who went before him, with the Mountains Falcons, and his Falconers, who were many, and one little Village. The day following, wee came A description to Porta ferrea, which Alexander the Macedonian King made. And it is a Citie whose East end of Porta ferres, is voon the Sea illoare, and there is a little Plaine betweene the Sea and the Monntaines, through which the Citie is stretched forth in length vnto the top of the Mountaine which bordereth vpon it on the West: fo that there is no way aboue, for the roughnesse of the Mountaines, nor below for the Sea, but forth-right through the middeft of the Citie ouerthwart, where there is 60 an Iron gate, from whence the Citie hath the name. And the Citie is more then a mile long, and in the top of the Hill a strong Castle; and it is as much in bredth, as a great stones cast; it hath very strong walls without Trenches, and Turrets of great polished stones. But the Tartars have deltroyed the tops of the Turrets, and the Bulwarkes of the Walls, laying the Turrets euen with the Wall. Beneath that Citie, the Countrey was wont to bee like a Paradife. Two dayes journey hence, we found another Citie called Samaron, wherein there were many Samaten 2 Ci-

When they came there, they could not have accesses and the Hungarian Frier returned by me to Tepbelis with one Servant : but Frier Bernard remained at Taurinum with a certaine Lay Frier, whose language he understood not. We went out of the Citie of Vannan in oftanis of the Epiphanie : for we had flayd long there by reason of the Snow. We came therefore in foure dayes to the Countrey of Sabenfa, a certain Curgine, sometimes mighty, but now tributary to the Tartars, who destroyed all his Munition : 30 whose Father Zacharias got that Countrey of the Armeniums, having delivered them from the hands of the Saracens. And there are many faire Villages of true Christians, having Churches right like the Frankes. And every Armenian hath in his house, in an honourable place, a wooden hand holding a Croffe, and he fets a burning Lampe before it : And that which we doe with holv Water, sprinkling it to drive away wicked Spirits, they doe the same with Frankinsence. For enery enening they burn Frankinsence, carrying it through all the corners of the house, to rid them of all kinde of Enemies. I ate with the forefaid Sabenfa, and he did me great reverence, both he and his Wife, and his fonne Zachary was a very-faire and wife young man. Who demanded of me, that if he should come vnto you, whether yee would entertaine him ! for he so hardly brooketh the Dominion of the Tartars, that, though he have plenty of all things, he had rather tra- 40 uaile into a strange Country, then indure their Lord-like Dominion. They said further, that they were sonnes of the Church of Rome: and if the Lord Pope would fend them any ayde, they would bring all the bordering Nations vnto the subjection of the Church.

The Popes

From that Towne of his, in fifteene dayes, we entred the Countrey of the Soldan of Turkie, vpon the first Sunday in Lent. And the first Castle we found, is called Marfengen. All in the Cafile were Christians, Armenians, Curgines, and Greekes: The Saracens onely haue the Dominion. There, the Captaine of the Castle said, he had received commandement, that no victuals should be given to any Franke, or to the Ambassadours of the King of Armenia, or of Vastacius. So that from the place where wee were the first Sunday in Lent, vnto Cyprus, (whether I came eight dayes before the Fealt of Saint John Baptift) we must buy our prouision. He, who was my guide 50 procured me Horses, and tooke money for the victuals, and put it in his purse. When he came into the Fields, seeing a slocke any where, hee violently tooke one Sheepe, and gaue it to his family to eate, and maruailed I would not eate of his robbery. In the Purification I was in a certaine Ci-February the at the called Ains, which was Sahenfas, whose situation is most strong: and there are there a thou-The Citie Ami, fand Armenian Churches, and two Synagogues of the Saracens. But when I toll them what I had feene, and how 60 they fent me backe againe, they directed their journey to Tephelis, where there are Friers of their Order, to confult what they should doe. I faid vnto them they might well passe, by those Letters, if they would : but they should bee well affured to indure much labour, and render an account of their comming: for feeing they had no other meffage, but the office of Preaching, they would care but a little for them, and chiefly, because they had no Interpreter. What they did after,I know not.

He second Sunday in Lent, we came to the head of Aravis, and passing beyond the top of Chap.ag. the Mountaine, we came to Euphrates; by the which wee descended eight dayes, alwayes They come to coing to the Weit, vnto a certaine Caitle, called Camuth. There was so great an Earthquake there that yeare, that in one into Countries, and Citie called Arlengan, tenne thousand persons noted by name, persshed, beside poore men of terward to deto whom there was no notice taken. Riding three dayes together, we faw the gaping of the Earth, tiochia. and as it was cleft by the Earthquake, and the heapes of Earth which came from the Mountaines, thenceto Trias it was ciert by the Latinguage and filled the valleyes; to that if but a little more of the Earth had beene moued, that which Efay the Citie Arfocaketh had beene literally fulfilled. The King of Hungarie hath not about thirtie thousand Souldiers. From Cullin to Constantinople are not about threefcore dayes journey by Waggons. From Conflantinople are not formany dayes journey to the Countrey of the King of Armenia. In old time, valiant men paffed through these Countries, and prospered, yet they had most valiant Resisters; whom God hath now deother Princes. Arroyed out of the Earth. And we need not be in danger of the Sea, nor in the mercie of Savlers. And the price which wee should give for traight, were sufficient for expenses by Land. I Tarturs thriftie speake it confidently, if your Countrimen (I say not Kings and Souldiers) would goe, as the Kings of the Tartars goe, and bee contented with tuch victuals, they might winne the whole 20 World. It feemeth not expedient (as I thinke) that any Frier goe vinto the Tartars any more, as I did, or as the Preaching Friers doe. But if our Souereigne Lord the Pope would honourably fend a Bilhop, and answere their tollies: which they have thrife written to the Frankes: once fhould be tent to Pope Innecent the Fourth of Sacred Memorie, and twice to your Maiettie, once by David, who to the Tartors, deceived you, and now by me, he might speake vnto them what he would, and also cause them to put those things in writing. Nno, 1246. Curne, who is also called Gog Cham, was advanced to the Imperiall Throne of 50 A the Tartars. All their Barons being affembled, placed a golden feat in the midfl, whereon thers tent another they caused him to sit; and set a Sword before him, saying, Wee will, and defire, and command de Plana Carijas thee to rule ouer vs. He demanded if they were contented, to doe, come, goe, slay as he should and his fellow, command. They answered yea. Then faid he, The word of my mouth shall henceforth bee my whose story is Sword: and they all consented. After this they spread a Felt on the ground, and set him thereon, faying, Looke upwards and acknowledge God, and looke downe on the Felt whereon thou fitteff. If thou shalt gonerne well, wilt be liberall, inst, and honour thy Princes according to their dignitie, thou shalt reigne magnificent, and the whole World shall be subject to thy Dominion, and God will give thee all thy hearts desire; if otherwise thou shalt bee miserable and so poore, that the Fels shall not bee left the: whereon thou fittest. This done, they let his Wife with him on the Felt : and lifted them up 69 both so fitting, and proclaimed them Emperour and Empresse of the Tartars. After which they hum Ocoddi Cas brought before him infinite flore of Gold, and Silver, and Gemmes, with all which remayned to Chagadan, who distributed what he pleased, and reserved the rest. Then began they to drinke untill night after their manner; and afterward solden flesh came in Carts without Salt, and a

He hath a Prince in the Confines of Persia, called Baioth Noy (Noy, fignifieth his dignitie, Baioth is his name) which hath fubdued the Conntries of Christians and Saracens to the Mediterranean Sea. Another talled Corenzam remayneth in the Well Frontiers with threefcore thousand vinder him. The greatest Prince is Bathath, who Batha. hath under him one hundred and three score thousand Tarters, and four hundred and fiftie thoufand Christians and others. The Chams forces are inhumerable.

Anno Dom. 1247. Frier Afeelinns fent by the Pope, came into the Campe of the Tarrats with other Friers Preachers : where the Captayne Baioth-noy, by Messengers demanded, whose Mesto fengers they were. Frier Afeiline answered for them all, I am the Messenger of the Lord Pope, who among ft Christians is greater then any man, reputed a Father and Lord. They replyed, how proudly doeyee lay your Pope is greater then any ! Knowes he not that the Cham is Son of God, and Baieth-noy and Batho are his Princes! Afcelines answered, the Pope knowes nos them, but heares that the Tartars have comne out of the East, and have destroyed infinite multitudes. And had he knowne the names of Cham or his Princes, he would not have omitted their names in the Letters which we bring. But beeing grieued for the flaughters of fo many. especially Christians, with the aduice of his Brethren the Cardinals, he hath sent vs to the next Tartarian Armie we could find, to exhort the Generall thereof to cease fuch attempts, and to repent of that which they have done. The Messengers went and came divers times betwixt, e-20 uery time in change of Garments, and were very follicitous for Gifts and Prefents which the Friers had none to giue. And besides they denyed to performe the Ceremonies of kneeling to Baioth-nor, left they should thereby intimate a subjection of the Pope to the Tartars: whereupon The foure hee confulted to put them all foure to death, to which a Messenger sent from the Great Cham were Assessment hee consulted to put them all foure to death, to winth a wieneger that thou the liead : whereata Alberite, Alex would not consent. The Frien only would put vp their hoods and bow the liead : whereata ander, and Si-Tartar asked whereas you Christians adore stockes and stones, that is Crosses imprinted on them; man. why doe you refuse to doe so to Baioth-noy, whom Cham the Sonne of God hath commanded to be adored. Ascelmus answered, Christians adore not stockes and stones, but the signe of the Croffe theron, for his fake which dyed on a Croffe, adorning it with his mebers as precious Iew- See a kke diels and confecrating it with his bloud, purchaining thereby our falluation. So cannot wee doe to sincision of your Lord. Baileb.nog lent them word, that hee would find them with their Letters to the Ethnick. Ang. Cham, which they refused. Then he sent for the Letters which were translated first into Persian. in Pfelatis. and thence into the Tartar Language. Hee held them there with many Trickes and Illusions. many weeks with hard fare and ill viage. And after much adoe he returned with Bases nors anfwer, having first had a Messenger with Letters from the Cham.

B Aioth nost Letter was this to the Pope. The word of Baioth nost. Pope, know this; thy Mef-General came and brought thy Letters to us. Thy Messengers spake great words; we know not whether thom gamest them so in charge, or whether they spake it of themselves. In thy Letters thou hads written; yee kill, slay, and destroy many men. The precept of God stable and firme, who contained the face of the whole world, unto us is this. Wholoener Shall beare the Statute on their owne Land, let them reald Water and Patrimonie, and let them deliner power to him which contagneth the face of the whole World. But who soener will not heare the Precept and Statute, but shall doe otherwise, let them be rooted out and Dut we opener run an out time trees in a state and Precept. If ye will yetld Water and Parti-monse on our Lund, it is meet that thou Pope thy felfs in thim per for come to ver, and to him which com-sumets the face of the whole Earth's and if thou will not heart the flatter Precept of God and of the which contagneth the face of the whole Earth , weeknow not, God knowes. It is meet that before thou commest, thou fendeft Meffengers, and that thou signifiest to us whether thou commest or no whether thou wilt compound with vs, or be Enemie. And fend an Answere of the Procept quickly to vs. This Precent by the hands of Aybeg and Sargis, we have (ent in the moneth of Iuly, the twentieth day of the Moone. By the Precept of the liming God Cingil-cham the Sonne of God, sweete and venerable suith, that God is high oner all, her is God immortall, and upon Earth Cingis-cham, is Lord alone. Wee will that this come into every place to the hearing of all, to the Provinces obeying us, and to the Provinces, obeying against vs. It is therefore meete that thou O Baioth-noy excite them and make it knowne to them , that this is the commandement of the living and immortall God: that thou also incellantly make knowne thy desire touching this, and notifie my commandement in all places, where a Messenger may come. And who focuer hall gamfay thee shall be hunted, and his Land shall be wasted. And I affure thee, that who-60 foener shall not heare this my Mandate, shall bee deafe; and who foener shall doe according to this my sudgement, knowing peace and not doing it, shall be lame. Let this my Ordinance come to the knowledge of all. Whosener shall heare and neglect to observe it shall be destroyed and slaine. Manifest this O Baioth-noy. And who soener desireth the profit of his House, and will serne us, shall bee saued and bonoured. And who somer shall contradict, studie thouse correct them at thine owne pleasure.

Thefe brought Letters in Partachin Ruhuq. Gan and Arabike Letters. They reported also that a great King of the Tartars called Chamwae Erealthen pre- become a Christian, with most of his followers. And now the said Erealthen had received Baptisme and was come forth from Cham with a great Armie to aduance the Christian Faith, and to destroy the Aduersaries thereof; and much desired the French Kings loue. They thought also that the faid Ercalthay would the next Eafter befiege Baldach. These told the King also of the Tartarian Affaires. Whereupon he fent Messengers with Letters and Iewels to Ercalibar, with a Tent or Chappell of Scarlet fairely embroydered, with the Storie of the Passion, with Orna-10 ments thereto and things fitting for Diuine Seruice, with a piece of the wood of the Holy Croffe, exhorting him to proceed in the Faith. And if they pared any, they yied them in the fore-front of their battels to fight against their Allies, that if they were therein faint or fayned, themselves at their backes might kill them: if otherwise it was without reward. They are rather Monsters then men, thirsting and drinking bloud, tearing and deuouring the flesh of Dogges and Men; clothed with Oxe-hides, armed with Iron A Caluifs con- Plates; in stature thicke and short, well set, strong in bodie; in Warre innincible, in labour in- 40 fatigable, behind vnarmed; drinking the bloud of their beafts for Dainties, &c. Thefe Tartars See Brirgwood of detectable memory are thought to be descended of the ten Tribes which went away (forfaking the Law of Moles) after the golden Calues; whom Alexander the Macedon fought to inclofe in the Cafrian hils; to which labour, exceeding humane power, hee innoked the affiltance of the God of Israel, and the tops of the hils joyned together, and the place became inaccessible and impaffible. And though it be doubtfull, because they vie not the Hebrew Tongue, nor Law of Mofes, nor are gouerned by any Lawes; yet is it credible, that as their hearts then in Mofes go-

For they had now brought in manner to a Willernesse, Frista, Gothia, Polonia, Bobemia, and both Hungarias, the most part of the Princes, Prelates and people beeing fled or flaine : as by this Letter appeareth.

For we know for certagne that about the Octives of Easter, the Tartanan Nation will innade cruelly and forcibly the Lands of the Bohemians, and if not

It was written by one Two of Narbone a Clergie man, which being accused of 30 Herefie to Robert de Curzun the Popes Legat, fled, and lived one while with the Pararines, another with the Beggines, and at last writ this Letter containing a discourse of his travels, amonest them in Italie and G.rmanie. He begins Giraldo Dei gratia Burdegalensi Archiepiscopo, Tuo dictus Narbonensis suorum olimnouissimu Clericorum, falutem, Jrc. and after some premistes of the Patarines, and Beguines (too long for this place) hee proceeds ; Hoc igitur & multis aligs peccatis inter nos Christianos emergentibu sratus Dominus, &c. this and other sinnes falling out among I vs Christians, is become as st were a destroying enemie.

THe Lord therefore being prouoked to indignation, by reason of this and other sinnes committed among vs Christians, is become, asit were, a destroying enemy, and a dreadfull avenger. This I may iustly affirme to bee true, because an huge Nation, and a barbarous and inhumane people, whose Law is lawleffe, whose wrath is farious, even the rod of Gods anger, overrunneth, and vicerly wasteth infinite 50 Countries, cruelly abelifting all things where they come, with fire and sword. And this present Summer, the forefaid Nation, being called Taxars, departing out of Hungarie, which they had (urprifed by trea-Son, layd siege unto the very same Towne, wherein I my felfe abode, with many thousands of Souldiers : neither were there in the faid Towne on our part aboue Fifty men of warre, whom, together with twenty Corse-bowes, the Captaine had left in Garrison. All these, out of certaine high places, beholding the enemies vafte Armie, and abborring the beaftly cruelty of Antichrift his complices, fignified forthwith unto their Governour, the hideous lamentations of his (briftian subjects, who suddenly being surprised in all the Province adiopning, without any difference or reflect of condition, Fortune, lexe, or age, were by manifold cructies, all of them destroyed: with whose carbesses, the Tartarian chieftaines, and their brutish co and Sauage followers, glutting themselves, as With delicious cates, left nothing for ruliures but the bare bones. And a strange thing it is to consider, that the greedy and rauenous vultures disclaimed to pray upon any of the reliques, which remained. Old and deformed Women they gaue, as it were for dayle fu-unto death, and cutting off their tender paps to present for dainties unto their Magistrates, they encorged them (elues with their Bodies.

Howbeit, their spials in the meane time discrying from the top of an high mountaine the Duke of Auitria, the King of Bohemia, the Patriarch of Aquileia, the Dake of Carinchia, and (as some report) the Earle of Baden, with a mighty power, and in battell array, appraching towards them, that accur sed rew immediatly vanished, and all those Tarcarian Vagabonds retired themselnes into the distressed and many selfon. ed land of Hungarie; who as they came suddenly, so they departed also on the sudden: which their celeritie caused all men to stand in horrour and astonishment of them. But of the said sugitives, the Prince of Dalmatia tooke esoht : one of which number the Duke of Austria knew to bee an Englishman, who was perpetually banished out of the Realme of England, in regard of certaine notorious crimes by him comm t- 10 ted. This fellow on the behalfe of the most tyrannical King of the Tartars, had beene twife, as a messenger and Interpreter, with the King of Hungaric, menacing and planely foretelling those michiese which afterward happened, wnlesse he would submit himselse and his Kingdome unto the Tartars yoke. Well, being allured by our Princes to confesse the truth, he made such oathes, and protestations as (I thinke) the Dea mill bimfelfe would have beene trusted for. First therefore hee reported of himfelfe, that prefently after the time of his banishment, namely, about the thirtieth yeare of his age, having lost all that he had in the Citie of Acon at Dice, even in the midft of Winter, being compelled by ignominious hunger, wearing nothing about him but a shirt of facke, a paire of shooes, and a haire cap onely. being shauen like a soole, and vttering an vncoth noyse as if hee had beene dumbe, he tooke his iourney, and so travelling many Countries, and finding in divers places friendly entertaine 20 ment, he prolonged his life in this manner for a feafon, albeit every day by rashnes of speech, and inconstancy of heart, hee endangered himselfe to the Devill. At length, by reason of extreame trauaile, and continuall change of ayre and of meates in Caldea, hee fell into a grieuous sicknesse. infomuch that he was weary of his life. Not being able therefore to goe forward or backward. and staying therea while to refresh himselfe, hee began (being somewhat learned) to commend to writing those wordes which he heard spoken, and within a short space, so aptly to pronounce and to veter them himfelfe, that he was reputed for a native member of that Countrie : and by the same dexteritie he attained to manie Languages. This man, the Tartars having intelligence of by their spies, drew him perforce into their societie; and being admonished by an oracle or vision, to challenge dominion over the whole earth, they allured him by many rewards to their faithfull service, by reason that they wanted Interpreters. But concerning their manners and fuperstitions, of the disposition and stature of their bodies, of their Countrie and manner of fighting, &c.he protested the particulars following tobe true:namely, that they were about all men. couetous, hastie, deceitfull, and mercilesse: notwithstanding, by reason of the rigour and extremitie of punishments to be inflicted upon them by their superiours, they are restrained from brawlings, and from mutuall strife and contention. The ancient founders and fathers of their tribes. they call by the name of Gods, and at certaine fet times they doe celebrate folemne Feafts vnto them, many of them being particular, and but foure onely generall. They thinke that all things are created for themselves alone. They esteeme it none offence to exercise cruelty against rebels. They be hardy and strong in the breast, leane and pale-faced, rough and huste-shouldred, having 40 flat and short noses, long and sharpe chinnes, their vpper jawes are low and declining, their teeth long and thin, their eye-browes extending from their fore-heads downe to their nofes. their eves inconftant and blacke, their countenances writhen and terrible, their extreame joynts strong with bones and sinewes, having thicke and great thighes, and short legs, and yet being equall vnto vs in stature : for that length which is wanting in their legs, is supplyed in the vpper partes of their bodies. Their Countrey in old time was a land veterly defert and wafte, fituated farre beyond Chaldea, from whence they have expelled Lyons, Beares, and fuch like vntamed beafts, with their bowes, and other engines. Of the hides of beaftes being tanned, they vie to shape for themselues light, but yet impenetrable armour. They ride fast bound vnto their Horses, which are not very great in stature, but exceedingly strong, and maintained with little 50 prouender. They vie to fight constantly and valiantly with Iauelins, maces, battle-axes, and fwords. But especially they are excellent Archers, and cunning warriers with their bowes. Their backs are fleightly armed, that they may not flee. They withdraw not themselves from the combate, till they fee the chiefe Standerd of their Generall give backe. Vanquished, they aske no fauour, and vanquishing, they shew no compassion. They all persist in their purpose of fubduing the whole world vnder their owne subjection, as if they were but one man, and yet they are moe then millions in number. They have 60000. Courners, who being fent before vpon light Horses to prepare a place for the Armie to incampe in, will in the space of one night gallop three dayes journey. And fuddenly diffusing themselves over an whole Province and surpriling all the people thereof vnarmed, vnprouided, difperfed, they make such horrible slaugh- 60 ters, that the King or Prince of the land inuaded, cannot finde people sufficient to wage battell against them, and to withstand them. They delude all people and Princes of regions in time of peace, pretending that for a cause, which indeed is no cause. Sometimes they fay that they will make a voyage to Collen, to fetch home the three wife Kings into their owne Countrey; fome-times to punish the auarice and pride of the Romans, who oppressed them in times past ; sometimes to conquer barbarous and Northern nations; fometimes to moderate the furie of the German with their owne meeke mildneffe; fometimes to learne warlike feates and ftratagems of the French; former mes for the finding out of fertile ground to fuffice their huge multitudes: fometimes againe in derision they fay, that they intend to goe on Pilgrimage to Saint lames of Galicia. In regard of which fleights and collusions certaine undiscreet Gouernours concluding a league with them, have granted them free passage thorow their Territories, which leagues notwithstanding being violated, were an occasion of ruyne and destruction vnto the foresaid Gouernours,&c.

Tround this Booke translated by Master Hakluyt out of the Latine. But where the blind leade the I blind both fall: au bere the corrupt Latine could not but yeeld a corruption of truth in English. Ramusio, Secretarie to the Decemviri in Venice, found a better Copie and published the same, whence you have the worke in manner new : so renewed, that I have found the Pronerbe true, that it is better to pull downe an old bouse and to build it anew, then to repaire it; as I also should have done, had I knowne that which in the enent I found. The Latine is Latten, compared to Ramusios Gold. And bee which 20 bath the Latine bath but Marco Polos Carkaffe, or not fo much, but a few bones, yea, sometime stones rather then bones; things diners, anerse, aduerse, peruerted in manner, dissoynted in manner, beyond beliefe. to be receded in liberalitie, caused twice the value to bee given them, and besides great and rich gifts. Hauing flayed one yeare in the Countrey of the faid Prince, whiles they thought to returne to Venice, there haddenly arole Warre betwixt the faid Barcha and another named Alan. Lord of the Easterne Tartars. These Armies fighting together, Alan had the Victorie, and the Armie of Barcha received a great overthrow. By reason whereof, the wayes beeing not secure. they were not able to returne that way which they came. And having confulted how to returne to Conflantinople, they were aduised to goe so farre to the East, that they might compasse the Realme of Barcha by virknowne waves : and fo they came to a Citie called Ouchacha, which is in the Confines of the Kingdome of this Lord of the Tartars on the Welf, and paffing further. they went over Tieris (one of the foure Rivers of Paradile) and after that a Defart of feuen- 10 teene dayes Journey, without Citie, Caftle, or Fort, finding only Tartars, which like in the gifts; especially, seeing through the manifold conference had with them; he now perceived their pleating behaviour. Those men therefore considering, that they could not easily returne home without danger, confulting together, joyne with the faid Ambassadour, and journey with him to the Emperour of the Tartars, having certayne other Christians in their Company . whom they brought with them from Venice, and departing towards the North-saft and the North, were a whole yeare in going to the Court of the faid chiefe King of the Tarrars. The cause of their long time in this Journey, was the Snowes and River Waters much increased, so that they were forced in their travell to flay the waiting of the Snow, and decreasing of the flouds. Being therefore brought before the prefence of the Great Can, they were most courteously the Great Can, receited of him. He questioned them concerning many things as of the Countries of the West, the Romane Emperour, and other Kings and Princes, how they carried themselves in Gouernment, and in Warlike affaires, how Peace, Iustice, and Concord continued among them; also what manner of life, and customes were observed with the Latines; and especially of the Pope of the Christians, of the things of the Church and the Religion of the Christian Faith. And M. Nico-lo and M. Musses, as Wisemen told him the truth, alway speaking well to him, and orderly in the Tartarian Tongue. Infomuch that hee often commanded they should bee brought to his prefence, and they were very acceptable in his fight. Hauing well understood the Affaires of the Latines, and resting satisfied with their answers, 40 the Great Can intending to fend them his Ambailadours to the Pope, first, consulted with his Barons, and then calling to him the two Brethren, defired them for his love to goe to the Pope of the Romans, with one of his Barons called Choquatall, to pray him to fend an hundred Wife-They are fent men, and learned in the Christian Religion vnto him, who might shew his Wisemen, that the Ambassadours Faith of the Christians, was to bee preferred before all other Sects, and was the only way of faluation; and that the Gods of the Tartars were Deuils, and that they and others the people of the East were deceived in the worship of their Gods. Hee gave them also in charge to bring in their returne from Ierusalem, of the Oyle of the Lampe which burneth before the Sepulchre of Taking their leave therefore of the Emperour, they take their Journey, carrying the Letters and Golden Tablet with them. And when they had rid twentie dayes Journey, the Baron aforesaid affociated vinto them began to fall grienously ticke. 60 Whereupon confulting and leaving him there, they profecute their intended Icurney, beeing euery-where courteoufly received by reason of the Emperours Tablet. Yet in very many places they were compelled to flay, by occasion of the ouer-flowing of Rivers, to that they ipent three yeares, before they came vnto the Port of the Citie of the Armenians, named Giazza. But the three Venetians exposing themselves to all danger, with many labours, and much difficultie trauelled many dayes, alwaies towards the North-east and North, till they after three yeeres and a halfe came vnto the Emperour of the Tartars, vnto the Citie called Clemenfu: for The Citie in the Winter time their journey had often and long hinderantes, by reason of the snow and mensu. excreme cold, and mundations of waters. King Argon. Nicolo, Maffio, Marco, and others, Embassadors. LIB. I

(the name also of the Prouince) in the Region of Persia, which was subject to a King called Barach: in which place they flayed three yeares before they could goe forward or backward, by realon of great warres betwixt the Tartars. At that time a certayne Wileman was fent Ambassador from the faid Prince Alex to the Great Can, who is the greatest King of all the Tartars, residing in the Confines of the Earth. betwixt the North-east and the East, called Cublai Can: who being comne to Bocara , and finding there the faid two brethren which had now well learned the Tartarian Language, he rejoyced about measure, and perswadeth these Westerne men or Latines to goe with him , to the pre- 26 fence of the Great Emperour of the Tartars; knowing that hee should gratifie him in this, and the men not with standing should be entertayned with great honour, and rewarded with large

These Embassadors departing, rode eight moneths the same way they came, but found so hot 10 warres betwixt the Tartars, that they were constrayned to returne: and acquainted the Chan with their proceedings. Meane-whiles, Master Marco had returned from the parts of India. where he had beene employed with certaine ships, and declared to the Chan the nouelties of the places, and the fecuritie of those Seas: which words having passed him, the Embassadours conferred with the Vinetiess, and agreed that they with the Queene should goe to the Great Chen, and desire leave to returne by Sea, and to have the three Latines, men skilfull in Sea affaires, with them to the Countrey of King Argon. The Great Chan was much displeased with their request, vet vpon their petition granted it: and caused Nicolo, Massio and Marco to come to his presence, and after much demonstration of his love, would have them premise to returne to him, after they had spent some time in Christendome, and at their owne house. And he cau- 20 fed to give them a Tablet of Gold, in which was written his commandement, for their libertie and securitie thorow all his Dominions, and that expenses should bee given them and theirs. and a Guide or conuoy for fafe passage; ordayning also that they should be his Embassadours to the Pope, the Kings of France, of Spanne, and to other Christian Kings. Hee caused fourteene thips to be prepared, each having foure Masts and able to beare nine Sayles in fayling, the forme of which is too long here to relate. Foure of them, or fine, had from two hundred and fiftue to two hundred and fixtie Mariners each of them. In these ships the Embassadours, the Queene. and Nicolo. Maffio, and Marco, fet fayle, having first taken leave of the Great Chan, who gave them many Rubies and other precious gems, and expenses for two yeeres.

After three moneths they came vnto a certaine Iland, named land, and from thence fayling 30 through the Indian Sea; after eighteene moneths, they come vnto the Countrey of King Aron, fixe hundred men of the Mariners and others, and but one of the Women and Damfels died in the journey, and onely Coza of the three Embassadours was living. When they came to the Countrey of King Argon, they found that hee was dead, and that one Chiacato governed the Kingdome, for his fonne being young. They fent to acquaint him with their businesse; who anfwered, that they should give her to Cafan the Kings sonne, then in the parts of Arbor secco, in the Confines of Persia with fixtie thousand persons for the guard of certaine passages against the enemie. Hauing done fo, Nicolo, Moffio, and Marco returned to Chiacato, and flayed there nine moneths. After this, taking leaue, Chiacato gaue them foure Tables of Gold, each a cupit long, fire fingers broad, of the weight of three or foure Markes: in which was written, that in 40 the power of the eternall God, the name of the Great Chan should bee honoured and praised many yeeres; and every one which should not obey, should be put to death, and his goods confiscate. It was further contayned, that these three Embassadours should be honoured, and service done them in all Lands and Countries, as to his owne person : and that Horses, Conuoves . expenses and necessaries should be given them. All which was duly put in execution, that sometimes they had two hundred Horses for their sateguard. In this their travell they heard that the Great Chan was dead, which tooke from them all hope of returning thicher. They rode till they came to Trabesonde, and from thence to Constantinople, and after to Negroponte, and at last came with great riches fafe to Venice, Anno 1295. And thus much may ferue for a Preface to the following worke, whereby might appeare, how Marco Polo could come to the knowledge of the 50 things therein contayned.

To supply a little more, delinered by Tradition and recorded by Ramusio: he sayth that these three being comne to Venice, like Vly sies in Ithaca, none knew them; all esteeming them long since dead. Befides, sheir voyage bad fo altered them, that they feemed rather Tartarians then Venetians, hauing in manner forgotten their natine Language; their babite also was of thicke Cloth, like Tartars. They went to their house in Saint Iohn Chrylostomes Street, and is there still to be seene, then a faire Palace, and now called, The Court of millions: which name it had by reason of Marcos relations of so many millions in this worke, and in his d scourses of the Great Chans incredible wealth. They found there inhabiting some of their kindred, nor knew how to make themselnes knowne. Therefore, as I have often heard of Magnifico Meffer Gasparo Malipiero, a very old Gentleman of singular integritie, from 60 the report of his Father and Grandfather, &c. they agreed to inuite many of their kindred to a feast, prepared in honourable manner with much Magnificence: in which at first all three came forth in Crim-Son Sattin Sutes , and after the Guests were set, stripped themselues, and gaue them to the Sernitors. comming forth in Crimson Damaske; and at the next seruice in Crimson Veluct, and after in the common habit, gining still the former to the servitors. Dinner ended and the Servitors put foorth, Marco brought forth their three habits of thicke (losth in which they had comne home, and thence tooks and let on the Table an incredible quantitie of lewels artificially sewed therein, which was no lesse maruell to the beholders, then enidence of their being of the Polo family as they pretended. Massio was made a Magifrate in Venice, Marco was daily frequented with the youth; and all wanne great reputation. In few moneths after, Lampa Doria Generall of a fleet of Genois beingcome to the Île Curzola with seauentie Gilleres, Andrea Dandolo was sent against them, and in that Fleet Marcowas made Captaine of a Galler, which by disaduenture of Warre was taken, and he carryed prisoner to Genoa. Where his strange travels being made knowne, a certaine Gentleman daily resorting to bim (as did the whole Citie in admiration) caused and beloed him to write this storie, bassing sent to Venice for his Notes. The booke was first written in Latine, and thence translated into Italian. One of which Latine Copies very ancient and baply copied out of Marcos originall, I have seene and compared with this which I heere Publish, lent me by a Gentleman of this Citie of the bouse of the Chisimy speciall friend, which holds it in specialleseeme. No price might ransome him, insomuch that his Father wanting an heyre to his wealth married againe, and had by his wife three Children. Marcos worthinesse obtained that which no moneys worth could doe, and being at libertie hee returned and marryed, and bad two Dangbters (but no sonne) Mo-

retta and Fautina, orc. That Gentleman of Genoa made a Preface to the Booke, and Francisco Pipino a Frier Preacher which translated the same, Anno 1320. out of the Vulgar (the Latine being rare, as well it might before Printing and perhaps neuer seene of him) into Latine. Both those Prefaces are in Ramusio : the latter commends M. Polo for a denout and honest man, and faith his Father confirmed the truth of this Booke. and his oncle Maffio on his Death-bed to his Confesor. Pipino abbremated the Booke and perhaps vaue occasion to that corruption which was after increased by others.

ð. II.

Olfernations of M. Pozo, of Armenia, Turkie, Zorzania, Baldach, Persia, Chirmain, Cobniam, Ormus, Knaue-fooles Paradile, and other Easterne parts in Alia, and Armenia the leffe.

Here are two Armenia's, the greater and the leffe. In the leffe the King abides in a Citie called Sebaffoz, which in all his Countrey observeth Justice and good Gouernment.

The Kingdome it selfe hath many Cities, Fortresses and Castles : the soyle also is fertile, and the Countrey lacketh no necessary thing, nor doth it want game of Beasts and fowle : the ayre is not very good. The Gentlemen of Armenia in times past were stout The mana warriours, but become now effeminate and nice, give themselves to drunkennes and ryot. There of the Inha is a certaine Citie in this Kingdome feated neere the Sea, named Giazza, having an excellent tants. Hauen whither many Merchants refort from divers Countries, even from Venice and Genna, by Giarge. reason of the divers marchandises brought thither, especially Spices of fundry forts . and certaine other precious riches brought thither out of the East Countries for trading : for this place is as it were a certaine part of all the East Countries. In Turchomania are three forts of Nations; to wit, the Turchomans or Turke-men, which ob- Turchoman ferue the law of Mahamet. They are men vnlearned, rude, and wilde, inhabiting the Moun- Turtie. taines and inacce lible places, where they know are pastures; for they live onely of their beasts. There are good Horses, called Turke-men. (or Turkie horses) Mules, of great estimation. The other Nations are Grecians and Armenians, who possesse the Cities and Townes, and bestow their labour on Marchandne and Artes. They make the best Carpets in the world. And they have many Cities, the chiefe whereof are Cogno, or Iconium, Ca farea, and Sebafte, where Saint Bafil fuffered Martyrdome for Christ, and they acknowledge one of the Kings of the Tartars for their Lord. Armenia the greater, being a very large Province, tributary to the Tartars, hath many Cities and Townes. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Arzuigg, and the best Bukram is made there-Most wholsome hot waters also spring there, for the washing and curing of mens bodies. And the other more famous Cities next to the Metropolis, are Argiron and Darziz. In the Summer time, very many Tartars refort thither with their Flockes and heards, allored through the fatnes of the pasture : and againe in the Winter depart for a certaine time by reason of the abifidance of Snow. The Arke of Noah remained in the Mountaines of this Armenia. This Countrey Of the Ge hath the Province of Mofull and Meridin, bordering on the East. But on the North is Zorza. ant nia*, in the confines of which a Fountaine is found, from which liquor-like oyle floweth, yet is it 60 vnprofitable for the seasoning of meat, but very fit for the making and maintaining of Lampes, and to anoint other things enough to lade Camels.

In Zorzania is a King called alway Danid Melicz, or King Danid : One part of the Pro- Georgia uince is subject to him, the other payeth tribute to the King of the Tartars. The Woods there are of Boxe-tree. The Countrey abutteth on the two Seas, Mar-maggiore, and that of Abaccu.

(or the Capian) which containeth in Circuit twentie eight hundred Miles, and is like a Lake. not mingled with other Seas. In it are many Hands, Cities and Caitles, fome of which are inhabited by those which fled from the Tartars out of Persia. The people of Zorzania are Christia ans, observing the rites of the Christians. They keepe their hayre short, like the Westerne Clergie. The Inhabitants have many Cities and Castles, and abound with Silke, of the which they make very faire Cleathes.

Moxul.

Moxul is a Province in which dwell people of many fortes, one called Arabi which are Mabumetans, other are Christians, some Nestorians, others Lacobites, and others Armenians: and they haue a Patriarch called lacelit, which ordaineth Archbishops, Bishops, and Abbots, and fends them thorow all parts of India, and to Cairo and Baldach, and all parts where Christians dwell, as doth Io the Pope of Rome. And all the cloathes of Gold and of Silke called Mosfulines are wrought in Moxul. But in the Mountaines of this Kingdome dwell the people called Cords, whereof fome are Nestorians, other Iacobines, and some followers of Mahamet. They are wicked men and rob Merchants. Neare to them is another Province, called Mus and Meridin, wherein growes infinite flore of Cotton or Bombast, whereof they make Buckrams and other workes. They are all under the Tartars.

Baldasb. Balfara.

Baldach is a great Citie, in which was the Chalifa that is the Pope of all the Sarcens. A River runnes thorow it, from whence to the Sea is ordinarily feauenteene dayes journey. They fayle by a Citie called Chif: but before they come thither is Balfara, about which grow the best Dates in the world. In Baldach are many cloathes of Gold and Silke : there are wrought Da- 20 maskes and Veluets with divers figures of creatures. All the pearles (in manner) in Coriftendome come thence. In that Citie is studyed the law of Mahomet, Negromancie, Phylicke, Altro-nomie, Geomancie, and Phisnomie : It is the chiefe Citie in those parts. When the Tartars began to raigne, there were foure Brethren, the eldeft of which, Monguraigned in Sedia. These purpofing to lublue the world, went one to the East, another to the North, to the South a third, which was Vlan, and the other to the West. In the years from the Incarnation of our Lord 1250. Vlas having a great Army of one hundred thousand Horse, besides Foot, yet vied policie, and hauing hid a great part of his men brought by fained flight, the Calipha into his ambush, and tooke him, and the Citie : in which he found infinite store of treasure, infomuch that he wondsred.

He sent for the Califa, and reproued him that in that warre hee had not therewith prouided 20 himselfe of Souldiers for defence : and commanded that hee should be inclosed in that Tower, where his Treasure was, without other sustenance. This seemed a sust sudgement from our Lord Iefus Christ on him. For he in the yeare 1225, feeking to conuert the Christians to Mahumet: And taking advantage on that place of the Goipell, that bee which hath Faith afmuch as a graine of Mustard-seed should be able to remove mountaines, he Converted all the Christians, Nestorians, and Lacobites, and propounded to them in ten dayes to remoue certaine Mountaines, or turne Mabumerane, or be flaine, as not having one man amongst them which had the least faith. They therefore continued eight dayes in Prayer : after which a certaine Shoomaker by reuelation to a Bish p, was designed to performe it. This Shoomaker once tempted to lust by fight of a young Wo nan in putting on her Shooe, zealoully had fulfilled that of the Gofpell, and literally had put 40 out his right eye : He now on the day appointed with other Christians following the Croffe and lifting his hands to Heauen, prayed to God to haue mercy on his people, and then with a loude

Tauris is a great Citie in the Province of Hirace. It is a most populous Citie. They live

These last are persidious and treacherous. thinking all well gotten which they steale from men of other Religions. And this wickednesse so of the Saracens hath converted many Tartars thereto. If the Christians kill them in their robbe-Deuils Martyrs rie, they are reputed Martyrs. From Tauris to Persia are twelve dayes sourney. In the confines of Tauris is the Monafterie of Saint Barfam, the Monkes whereof are like Carmelites; they alway make girdles which they lay on the Altar, and give to their friends, which demoutly e-

There are also very goodly and excellent Affes fold dearer then the Horses, for that they eat little, carrie much and farre. They have Camels but not so swift. 60 These are necessary in those Countries, which sometime in a long way yeeld no grasse. The people in those Countries are very wicked, contentious, Theeues, and Murtherers, profetting the faith of Mahumet. Merchants are every where flaine by those Theeves, vnleffe they travell in troupes. Yet are there excellent Artificers in the Cities, who make wonderfull things in gold, filke, and Embroyderie. They abound with Silke-wormes, Wheat, Barley, Milium, and other unas, and Law forbid wine, Fine diffinest kindes of Corne: and have also plenty of Wine and fruits. Chierman is a Kingdome in the confines of Perfus to the East, subject to the Tartars. In the weines of the Mountaines the stones are found, commonly called Turchiffes; veines also of Aza aio and Andanico. There are also made all Armes and munition for warre, and by the Women IO excellent needle-workes in Silkes, with the portraitures of all forts of Creatures verie admirable. There are the best Falcons in the world, verie swift of flight, red brested, and under the trayne, leffe then those of other Countries, Proceeding further, you goe through a great Plaine, and hauing ended eight dayes iourney, you come vnto a certaine descent. In the Plaine many Partridges are found, and also Castles and Townes. But in that steepe descent are many trees and thole fruitfull, but no habitation is there but of Shepheards. This Countrey in the winter time After this you come vnto a certaine great Plaine, where a certaine Citie is feated, named Ca- Cimandu. mandu, which in times past was great, but is now destroyed by the Tartars, and the Countrey is called Reobarle. There grow Pomgranats, Quinces, Adami-apples, and divers others fruits, 20 which grow not in our cold Countries. It hath also very great Oxen, and all white, thin hayred with thicke blunt fhort hornes, with a Camels bunch on the backe, accustomed to beare great Oxen with a with thicke blunt fhort hornes, with a Camels builth off the backe, accurdence to be Camels, bunch on the barthens. And when the packe-faddles are fet vpon the bunch, they bow the knee like Camels, backe. and having received the burthen rife againe, being fo taught by men. The Sheepe of that Coun-Sheepe of the trey are no leffer then Affes, bearing to long and broad a tayle, that they weigh thirty pound bigaes of Affe weight. They are very faire and fat, and good meat. Moreouer, in the plaine of this Countrey are many Cities and Townes, with high walls of Mud to defend them from the Caranna, that is Mestizes, or mingled people of Indian women and Tarrars, ten thousand of which bee conducted by one Nugodar, the nephew of Zagathas who ruled in the greater Turkie. This Nugodar hearing of the Malabars subject to Soldan Asidm, without his Vncles knowledge went and 30 tooke Dely with other Cities, and erected a new Seignorie, and mixing with the Indian women procreated these Carannas, which goe vp and downs to rob and spoyle in Reobarle and other Countries. There they learned magicall and diabolicall Arts, by which the ayre is so darkned in Their Inchar

Countries. I nere they tearned magnetar and account of the day time for a long space, that none may see them or preuent them. CM. Marco one time the thorow such darknessed additional fall into their hands, but made shift to escape to a Castle called danger. Consalmi : but many of his company were taken or flaine. That Plaine whereof I now speake, is fine daies sourney extended towards the South. But at the end therof, the way beginneth by litle and litle to descend for twenty miles together, & the way it (elfe is very bad, and not without danger by reason of Theeues. At length you come to very goodly Plaines, which extend themselues two dayes journey in length, and the place it selfe is 40 called Ormsu. That Countrey aboundeth with Rivers of water and Palme trees. There is also plenty of diners Fowles, especially of Poppin-jayes, which are not like to ours. From hence you come vino the Ocean, where on an Iland is leated, a Citic called Ormus, whereto many Mer-Parras. chants refort, bringing Spices, Pearles, precious Stones, cleath of Gold and Silkes, and Elephants teeth, and all other precious things from India. That Citie is a great Mart, having Cities and Caftles under it, and is head of the Kingdome Chermain: the King is called Ruchmedin Achomach, who yeelds obedience to the King of Chermain. He makes himselfe heyre, if any Merchant dyes there. In Summer they by reason of the heat betake themselves to their Garden houfes built on waters. And from nine till noone there blowes a winde with fuch extreame hear from the fands, that it swallowes up a mans breath and stifleth him, which makes them lye in 50 the water. The King of Chermain lent an Armie of fixteene hundred Horle, and five thousand Foot, against the Lord of Ormus for not paying his tribute, which were all surprised and shifted with that winde. The Inhabitants of the place eate no Bread made of Corne and flesh, but feed with yron nayles (by reason that the wood is brittle and would cleaue) but with woodden pins, with certaine threds made of the shels of Indian Nuts. These shels are dressed after the manner of An outward Leather, out of the which, threds are cut, and of the thrids exceeding strong cordes are made, shell which which are able to indure the force and violence of the water, and are not easily corrupted there- groves your by. Those Ships have one Mast, one sayle, one beame, and are covered but with one decke. They are not chalked with Pitch, but with the Trane of Fishes. And when they crosse the Sea thready sub-60 to India, carrying Horses and other fraight with them , they lose many Ships, because that Sca flance. is very tempestuous, and the Ships are not strengthened with yron. The Inhabitants of that Countrey are blacke, and addicted to the Law of Mahumet. It is the custome of this Countrey, when any Master of a family dyeth, that the wife left behind him should mourne for him foure weekes, once a day. They have women which professe the practile of mourning and are thereto hired to mourne daily for their dead.

Going from Chermain in three dayes riding you come to a Defart, which continued till you come to Cobinam, feuen dayes Iourney, which is extended. In the first three dayes you shall have no water, faue a very few, and those salt and bitter, of a greene co lour in shew, as if it were the iuyce of Herbs: and whoso tasteth but a little thereof, cannot escape loosenesse of thebelly. The like also hapneth, if any taste the Salt made of that water. It is therefore needfull, that Trauellers carrie some water with them, if they will not be indangered through thirst. The beasts also which are compelled to drink that water, escape not without scouring. In the fourth day they to find a fresh River under ground: the three last dayes are as the first.

Cobinam. Tutia and Siedio.

Cobinam 15 a great Mahumetan Citie; goodly, and great Locking Glasses of Steele, are made there. Tutia also which cureth the eyes; and Spedio and that, after this manner. That Country hath Mines, out of which they digge Earth, which they boyle casting it into a fierie Fornace. an Iron grate receiving the ascending vapour from aboue, in the which, the conglutinated and clammie vapour becommeth Tutia. But the groffer matter remayning in the fire is called Specie. The Inhabitants of this Countrey, are followers of Mahumet.

A Defart of eight dayes lourney.

Leauing the Citie Cobinam, you meet with another Defart eight dayes Iourney in length, and in it there is great drynesse: it wanteth trees, and fruits, and waters which it hath are very bit. the territory beafts refuse to drinke them except they mixe meale therewith, and Tra-uellers carrie water with them. But having passed ouer this Defart, you came to the Kingdome 20 Timochaim.

It produceth a prickly shales like those of a Chesnut, but nothing in them. The wood is folide and itrong, yellow like Boxe. There is no tree within one hundred miles, except on one fide, on which are trees within ten miles. In this place the Inhabitants fav. that Alexander the Great fought with Darius. The Cities are plentifull of good things, but Mahametan, and of temperate Aire. It hath also goodly men, but specially women, the most beautifull in my judgement in the World.

Mu'chet.

Mulehet is in Saracen Language, as much to fay as a place of Heretikes, and of this place they call the men Mulehetici, that is, Heretikes in their Law, as with vs Patarines. Hauing spoken of the Countrey, the old man of the Mountayne shall bee spoken of, of whom Marco heard much from many. His name was Aloadine, and was a Mahumetan. Hee had in a goodly old manof the Valley betwixt two Mountaynes very high, made a goodly Garden, furnished with the best trees and fruits he could find, adorned with divers Palaces and houses of pleasure, beautified with gold Workes, Pictures, and Furnitures of filke. Thereby divers Pipes answering divers parts of those Palaces were seene to runne Wine, Milke, Honey and cleere Water. In them hee had placed goodly Damofels skilfull in Songs and Instruments of Musicke and Dancing, and to make Sports and Delights vnto men what soeuer they could imagine. They were also fairely at- 40 make operes and seeings and were feene to goe continually sporting in the Garden and Palaces, tyred in Gold and Silke, and were feene to goe continually sporting in the Garden and Palaces, He made this Palace, because Mahomet had promifed such a sensuall Paradite to his deuous followers. No man might enter: for at the mouth of the Valley was a strong Castle, and the entrance was by a fecret passage.

Alaodine had certaine Youthes from twelue to twentie yeares of age, such as seemed of a hold and vindoubted disposition, whom hee instructed daily touching Mahomets Paradile, and how hee could bring men thither. And when he thought good, he caused a certaine Drinke to bee gie uen vnto ten or twelue of them, which caft them in a dead fleepe : and then hee caused them to be carryed into divers Chambers of the faid Palaces, where they faw the things aforefaid as foone as they awaked; each of them having those Damosels to minister Meates and excellent en Drinkes, and all varieties of pleasures to them; infomuch that the Fooles thought themselves in Paradiferindeed. When they had enioyed those pleasures foure or fine dayes, they were againe cast in a sleepe, and carryed forth againe. After which, hee caused them to be brought into his presence, and questioned where they had beene, which answered, by your Grace, in Paradise, and recounted before all, all before mentioned. Then the old man answered, This is the commandement of our Prophet, that who focuer defends his Lord, he make him enter Paradife : and if thou wile bee obedient to mee, thou shalt have this grace. And having thus animated them, hee was thought happie whom the old man would command, though it cost him his life: fo that other Lords and his Enemies were flaine by these his Assaires, which exposed themselves to all eight & ninth dangers, and contemned their lives. Hereupon hee was esteemed a Tyrant, feared in all those 60 parts; and had two Vicars one in the parts of Damafeo, and another in Coo diftan: which obserthis flock, Dis ned the same order with young men. Eparting from the forefaid place, you come vnto a certayne Country pleafant enough, Large pleafa which hath Hils. Plaines, and excellent Pasture, and lastly, fruits in great plentie: Country, for the soyle thereof is very fruitfull. This continues fixe dayes, and then you enter a Defart of fortie or fiftie miles, without water. After this you come to the Citie A Defart, Sapurgan, where plentie of all victuall is found : especially, Pompions the best in the World, Sapurgan.

fweet like Honey. Paffing from thence, we came vnto a certayne Citie, named Barach, which in times paft was great and famous, having fumptuous Marble Palaces: but now overthrowne by the Taxare. In this Citie they report, that Alexander tooke the Daughter of King Darins to wife. To this Citie (on the East and North-cast) continue the Confines of Persia. But it you goe from hence, and Balach, perha proceed betweene the East, and the North-east, you cannot finde any Habitation for two dayes in Sula, Journey : because the Inhabitans of the place having endured so many grievances by Theeses 20 and Robbers, are compelled to flye vnto the Mountaynes, to wit, places of more fafetie. Many waters are found there, and very much game of wild beafts: Lyons also are there. And because Trauellers find no food in that lourney, they carrie victuals with them, which may fuffice them for two daves. That two dayes Journey ended, which we mentioned, we met with a certaine Castle, called Thracian-* Thaican; where is great plentie of Corne, and very goodly fields. The Mountaynes also on Salt-mous-

the South are high, some of which are of white and hard Salt, and the Inhabitants thirtie dayes taynes. Iourney about fetch it from thence, being the best World, so hard that they must breake it with Iron Instruments, fo much that the whole World may have sufficient Salt from thence. The other Mountaynes have store of Almonds and Pistaches. Going betweene the East and North-30 east from hence the Country is fruitfull, the Inhabitants Murtherers, Perfidious, Mahametans, Drunkards: Their Wine is boyled and excellent. They goe bare-headed, faue that the men bind up their heads with a certaine string of ten hanfuls long. But they make them clothing of the skinnes of the wilde beafts which they take, as Breeches and Shooes, and yie no other

After three dayes Iourney is the Citie Scaffem feated in a Plaine, and hath many Castle, in the Scaffem Mountaines round about it. A certaine great River a fo floweth through the middle thereof. There are many Porcupines in that Country, which they hunt with Dogges by the Hunters : Porcupines. and they contracting themselves with great furie, cast their prickly Quils against the men and Porci pings the Dogges, and wound them. That Nation bath a particular language: the sheepherds there-40 of abide in the Mountaynes, having made Caues for their Habitation. You goe hence three daies Iourney without any Habitation at all, to the Prouince Balaxiam.

Balaxiam is a Mahametan Province, and hath a peculiar Language. Their Kings who fuc- Balaxiam ceed one another by hereditarie right, are reported to have derived their discent from Alexander the Great, and from the Daughter of Darius, and are called Zulcarnen, which is to fay, Alexander. There are found the Ballaffer, faire precious stones, and of great value. No man without danger of life, dare either digge fuch stones, or carrie them out of the Countrey, but with the licence and confent of the King : for all those stones are the Kings, and he sendeth them to whom he pleafeth, either for a Present, or payment of Tribute : he exchangeth also many for Gold and Siluer. And this hee doth left the stone whereof there is such plentie should become viler and 50 cheaper. Other Mountaynes also in this Province yeeld stones, whereof the best Azure is made, the like whereof is not found in the World. The Mines also yeeld Siluer great store, and Brasse and Lead. The Countrey it felfe is very cold. It hath many Horles, and those excellent, great, Couragious and fwift, which haue so hard and strong hooses on their feet, that they need no Iron Shooes, although they runne through Rockes. It is faid that not long fince there were Horses of the Race Busethalusof Alexanders Bucephalus, all with his forehead-marke, in the possession only of the Kings Vn- breed, cle, who was flaine for denying the King to have of them : whereupon his Widow in angry spite destroyed the whole Race. There are also excellent Falcons. The soyle thereof beareth notable Wheate, and Barley without huskes, and Oyle made of Nuts and Sulimane, which is like to flaxe feed, more fauourie then other Oyle. There are strait passages and many stormie 60 places. The men are good Archers and Huntimen, clothed with beafts skinnes. The hils are fteepe and high, large plaines, Rivers alongst the ruptures; and if any have an Ague with abiding two or three dayes on the hils he recouereth , which Maco procued in himselfe after a yeares ficknesse. The women in the skirts of their Garments put sixtie or eightie yards of Cot-

Bascia.

The Province Bascia is tendayes Journey toward the South, distant from the Countrey Balaxiam. And the Countrie it felfe is very hot : whereby it commeth to passe, that the people are browne; they are expert Magicians, and continually attend thereto. They have a peculiar Language ; and weare Golden and Siluer Eare-rings with Pearles and stones artificially wrought

The Inhabitants thereof haue a peculiar Language, and are Idolaters; beyond all others cunning Inchanters, forcing their Idols to Speake, and darkning the day. They are the chiefest Idolaters, and Idols are descended from them. From thence you may goe to the Indian Sea. The men and women are browne, not wholly blacke, the heate some-what tempered : their food is flesh and Rice, yet are they excee- 10 ding leane. There are many Cities and Townes there. Their King is tributarie to none. There are certaine Heremites in this Prouince, who in Monasteries and Cels worthip Idols, honouring their Gods with great abstinence of meate and drinke, and obserue great Chastitie, are very cautelous not to offend their Idols, and live long. Of these are many Abbeyes, and the people give them great reuerence. The men of this Prouince kill no quicke creatures, and shed no bload: and if they will eate fielh, it is necessary that the Saracens which live amongst them, kill the

returne to Balaxiam and direct our way towards Caray, betwixt the East and North-east. Beyond Balaxiam is a certaine River, whereon stand many Castles and Villages belonging to the Kine of Balaxiams Brother : and after three dayes Iourney is the Province Vockan, having in 20 length and breadth three dayes Iourney. The Inhabitants thereof haue a peculiar Language, and worthip Mahumet. They are good Livers, flout Warriours, and good Hunters : for that Countrey aboundeth with wild beafts. If you depart hence betwixt the North-east and the East, you must ascend for three whole dayes together, vntill you come vnto an exceeding high Mountayne, then the which, there is faid to bee none higher in the World. There also betweene two Mountaynes, a great Lake if found, whence by a Plaine runneth a very goodly River, neere vnto which are excellent Pastures, so that in them a leane Horse, or an Oxe, may bee fatted inten dayes. There is also plentie of wild beafts : especially, exceeding great wild sheepe, having hornee some of them fixe palmes or spans long, of the which they make divers kinds of vessels. That Plaine contayeth twelue dayes lourney in length, and is called Pamer; nor is there any humane Habitation there, and Trauellers must carry victuals with them. No Bird also appear reth there, by reason of the cold, and (it is reported for a Miracle) if fire be kindled there, it is not fo bright nor fo effectuall to boyle any thing, as in other places. From hence the way leadeth fortie dayes further, betweene the East and the North-east through the Mountaynes, Hils, and Valleyes, in the which many Rivers are found, but no humane habitation, nor any herbe : and the Countrey it felfe is called Beloro. Habitations of men are seene in the top of those high Mountaynes, but fuch as are fauage, wicked, Idolatrous; who line by hunting, and are clothed

After this you come to the Prouince Caschar, which is tributarie to the great Cham and a Ma-

humetan. In it are Vines greene Gardens, fruitfuil trees, Cotton, Flaxe, and Hempe, and a fertile 40 foyle. The Inhabitants have a peculiar Language, and are Merchants, and Artificers, who are so couetous that they eate that which is bad, and drinke worse. Some Nestorian Christians are found there, who also have their Churches. The Countrey inlargeth it selfe five dayes Iourney. Samarchan is a great and famous Citie in that Gountrey, where are goodly Gardens and a fertile Plaine. It is lubic et to the Nephew of the Great Cham. In it the Christians dwell with the Saracens, whence little agreement is betwixt them. It is reported, that in this manner a Miracle hapned, the brother of Great Cham, named Zagatai, gouerned that Countrey, about one hundred yeares agoe, being perswaded to become a Christian, the Christians through his fauour built a Church, in honour of Saint Iohn Baptist, with fuch cunning that the whole Roofe thereof, was supported by one Pillar in the midit, under which was set a square stone, which by fa- 50 uour of their Lord was taken from a building of the Saracens. Zagathais Sonne succeeded after his death in the Kingdome, but not in the faith : from whom the Saracens obtayned that the Christians should be compelled to restore that stone. And when they offered a sufficient valuable price, the Saracens refused to receive any other composition then the stone. But the Pillar listed Vp it felfe, that the Saracens might take away their stone, and so continueth.

Nestorian Christians dwell. They are great Artificers, and have most of them great legges, and a happen also in great Wenne or Bunch in the throat, by reason of the waters which they drinke. The Prouince Cotam tolloweth betweene the East and the North-east. It is subject to the Dominion of the Nephew of Great Cham, and hath many Cities and Townes. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Cotam. The Province is extended eight dayes lourney in length. There is no want therein of any thing, appertaying to the maintenance of life. The Inhabitants worthip Mahumer, yet among them certaint ton, Flaxe, Hempe, Corne, and Wine. But the people are not warlike, yet good Artificers and Merchants. They acknowledge Mahumet.

Proceeding further through the fame Countrey, you meet with the Prouince Peim, extended Prim, five dayes lourney in length. It is subject to Great Can, and hath many Cities and Cattles. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Peim, neere which runneth a River, wherein precious stones are found, to wit, lasper stones and Chalcedonie. The Inhabitants of the Countrey worship Mahumet, and are Artificers and Merchants. There is a custome in this Prouince, that when any marryed man goeth into another place and returneth not home within twentie dayes, it shall Adulterous be lawfull for the Wife to marrie another Husband, and the men also whereforeuer they goe doe custome. 10 the like. Cities and Castles. Many precious stones are found there in the Rivers, especially Iaspers and Chalcedonies, which Merchants carrie even to Ouchach to fel, and make great gain. From Peim to this Province, and quite thorow it also, it is al Sand, with many bad waters and few good, When any Armie passeth through this Prouince, all the Inhabitants thereof with their Wiues, Children, Cattel, and all their houshold stuffe, flie two dayes lourny into the fands, where they know good waters are, and stay there : and carrie their Corne thither also to hide it in the fands after Harvest for like teares. The wind doth so deface their steps in the land, that their Enemies can-20 not find out their way. Departing from this Prouince, you are to travell five dayes Iourney thorow the fand, where no other water almost then that which is bitter is to be found, vntill youcome vnto the Citie named Lop. Lop is a great Citie, from whence is the entrance of a great Defart, called also Lop, seated be- Lop. tweene the East and the North-east. The Inhabitants are Mahumetans, subject to the Great Delartof Lon

Can. In it Merchants who defire to paffe ouer the Defart, cause all necessaries to be prouided for them. And when victuals beginne to faile in the Defart, they kill the Affes and Camels and eate them. They most willingly vie Camels, because they are sustayned with little meate, and beare great burthens. They must provide victuals for a moneth to crosse it ouer-thwart; for to goe thorow the length, would aske a yeares time. They goe thorow the fands and barren Mountaines, 30 and daily find water, yet is it iometimes to little, that it can fearfly fuffice fiftie or one hundred men with their beafts: and in three or foure places the water is falt and bitter : the rest (which arceight and twentie) good. In it are neither beafts nor birds. They lay that there dwell many Illusions of spirits which cause great and meruailous Illusions to Trauellers to make them perish. For if any Deuils, It is flay behind that he cannot fee his company, he shall be called by name, and to going out of the meth that the way is loft. In the night they heare the noyle as it were of a company, which taking to bee not then four theirs they perish likewise. Other apparances as of their companions, or of enemies have out, which caused some to miscarrie. Consorts of Musicall Instruments are sometimes heard in the Ayre, later times likewise Drummes, and noyses of Armes. They goe therefore neere together, hang Bels on their farts as ind beafts neckes, and let markes if any flay. 40 Having passed over the Defart, you come vnto the Citie Sachion, betwixt the East and North- Sachion east, subject to the Great Can, in the Province of Tanguth , where among the Worthippers of Tanguth. Mahumet, a few Nestorian Christians are found. Many Idelaters are also there, who have their proper Language. The Inhabitants of this Citie, live not of Merchandize, but the fruits of the Earth. This Citie hath many Monasteries, confecrated to divers Idols, in the which many Sacrifices are offered, and great renerence. And when a Sonne is borne vnto a man, hee prefently commendeth him to some Idoll, and in bonour thereof, nourisheth a sheepe that yeere in his house, which he presenteth before it together with his Sonne, the next Festivall Day of that The Sacrific Idoll, with many Ceremonies and great reuerence. Afterward the flesh of the sheepe is boyled, or the Birth and left to long before the Idell, while their Prayers are finished, which they make for the con-50 feruation of their Sonne, and the Idoll hath fucked out the fauour of the meate, after which their fancie all his kindred being gathered together, eate that flesh at home with great deuotion and joy : but orderly keepe the bones in certayne veffels. The Prietts have the feete, head, inwards, skinne, and some part of the fiesh for their spare. In celebrating the Funerals of such as Funerall. were of effeeme, the dead bodies are burned after this manner. The kindred fend for the Aftro- Aftrojoger logers, and tell them what yeare, moneth, day, and houre, hee who dyed was borne: who pernot, they referue the dead bodie fometimes feuen dayes, and fometimes like monethes, preparing a Cheft for it at home, and ioyning the fides together with fuch cunning Art, that no stinke can issue forth. They also imbalme the bodie it selfe with Spices, and couer the Chest fairely pain-60 ted with a costly cloth: and enery day that the dead corps is kept at home, at the houre of Dinner, a Table is prepared neere the Cheft, fetting wine and meate thereon for the space while one might well eate a mealef-meat, supposing that the soule of the dead, feedeth of the sauour thereof. The Aftrologers sometime forbid to carrie it forth at the chiefe gate, pretending some dilaftrous ftarres thereto, and cause them to carrie it out another way, and sometimes breake the

And if any such eaill happen. they afcribe it to the dead thus wronged. When the bodie is carryed through the Citie to be burned without, woodden Cottages are erected in the way, with a porch couered with Silkes. in which they fet the bodie, and fet before it Bread, Wine, and Fleth, and Delicate Cates, fuppoling the spirit to be refreshed therewith, which must bee presently present at the burning of

The Province Chamul lyeth in the great Province Tanguth, subject to the Great Can, having many Cities and Townes: the chiefe Citie is called Chamal. The Land butteth vpon two Defarts, to wit, the great Defart, whereof wee haue spoken before, and a certaine other, thatis leffe, of three dayes Iourney. It aboundeth with fuch things, which a man needeth for the fuftentation of life. The Inhabitants are Idolaters, haue a peculiar Language, and feeme to bee borne for none other purpose, but to apply themselues to sporting, singing, dancing, writing and reading after their fashion, playing on Instruments, and to give themselves delight. When any Traueller passing by, turneth into any mans house for entertaynment, the Master of the Family 20 receiueth him with great ioy, and commandeth his Wife and all the Family, that they as long as he will abide with them, obey him in all things. In the meane space, he departeth not to returne folong as the Guest remayneth in his house. And meane-while hee lyeth with the Wife. Daughter, and the rest, as with his owne Wines. The women of that Country are beautifull. and readie to obey all those Commandements of their Husbands, who are so beforted with this folly, that they thinke it a glorious thing for them, and acceptable to their Idols, for which they prosper with plentie of all things. Mangu Can having heard of this folly, commanded them to oblerue this deteltable custome no longer; which they did about three yeares, and then seeing not their wonted fertilitie, and troubled with some Domesticall crosses, sent Ambassadours to 30 the Can, and instantly entreated, that he would reuoke so grieuous an Ediot, and not abolish that Tradition which they had received from theif Elders. The Can answered, seeing you defire your

Neere it is a great Castle, and in it the Gouernors faire corum-Palace. This was the first place neere which in old times the Tartars affembled themselves. And The original now we will declare how they began to raigne. They dwelt in the North parts, to wit, in Cior- of the Domi-24 and Baren, where are many and great Playnes without Cities and Townes, but goodly Pa- nion of the theres, Rivers and waters. They had not a Prince of their Nation, but payed tribute to a certayne Tailars. great King, named as I have heard, in their language Vmcan, which in some mens opinion in our 40 tongue fignifieth, Prefbyter (or Prieft) lobn. To him the Tartars gaue yeerely the tenths of all their bealts. In processe of time, the Tartars so encreased in multitudes, that V mean was afraid of them, and thought to disperse them into severall parts of the world. And therefore when any rebelled he fent three or foure of an hundred of the Tarrars into those parts, so diminishing their power; and the like he did in his other occasions, deputing some of their principals to that purpose. They seeing their ruine intended and loth to be separated one from another, went from

It hapned that about An. 1162. the Tartars having continued some time in those parts, chose a King among themselues, a wife and valiant man, named Cingis Can. He began to reigne with 50 fuch justice, that he was beloued and feared of all as a God rather then a Prince, infomuch that his fame brought all the Tartars in all parts to his subjection. And hee seeing himselfe Lord of so valiant men would needs leave those Desarts, and commanding them to provide Bowes and other weapons, began to subdue Cities and Prouinces, in which Conquetts hee placed such suit Governours, that the people were not offended. The chiefe of them hee carried alongst with him with great prouitions and gifts. Seeing therefore that he was advanced to fo great glorie, and The fruit of a power, he fent Embassadors politikly to Umcan to intreate, that he would bestow his daughter wilde gouernvpon him to be his wife, Which he taking, in very euill part, answered with indignation, and reiecting the Embassadors of Cingis, said, doth my servant demand my daughter? The first King of the Tartars, was called Cingis; the fecond, (yn (an; the third, Bathyn Can; the fourth, Elu Can; the fifth, Mangu Can; the fixth Cublai Can, whose power is greater then all his Predeceffors, having inherited theirs, and adding by Conquest in manner the rest of the World. For he lived neere fixtie yeeres in his Government. The name Car fignifieth Emperor. All the great Cans, and Princes of that bloud of Cingis, are carried to the Mountaine of Aliai to be buried, whereforeur they die, although one hundred dayes journey from it. And they which pulcher of the carrie the Corpfe to the buriall, kill all those that they meet in the way, saying : goe, and serue 20 our Lord the King in another life. They kill also the better Horses. When the bodie of great Cham Mongu, the Predecessor of Cham Cublai, was brought vinto the Mountaine Altai to bee buried, the Souldiers accompanying the funerall, are reported to have flayne aboue ten thousand men, youn the forelaid occation.

The Tartarean women are most faithfull to their husbands. Adulterie is a great shame with them : yet it is accounted lawfull, and honest, that every one may marrie as many wives as he is able to maintavne although the first be judged to be more principall and honorable then the rest. Womens con- Their live together in the same house without one ill word, in admirable concord, make their merchandifes, buy, and fell, and chaffer all things necessarie to their husbands and housholds, the men medling with nothing but their hunting, hawking, and things pertayning to Armes. They 30 haue the best Falcons in the World, and so they have of Dogs. They live onely of Flesh and Milke, and what they take in hunting. They eat Horses, Camels, Dogs, if fat; and drinke Mares milke , called Chemurs, fo vied , that it is like white " Wine. If the father dies, the forme may have all his wives except his owne mother and fifters. So, the brother being dead, it is lawfull for the brother who remayneth aline, to marrie the widdow of the brother. The husbands receive no dowrie from the wives, but they themselves affigne dowry to the wives, and their mothers. Through the multitude of wives , the Tartars have many children. Nor is the multitude of Wives very burdenfome vnto the Tartars, feeing they gaine much through their labours. Befides, they are very carefull for the gouernement of the familie, and preparation of food: and with no leffe care, execute the other duties of the house. But the men apply them- 40 felies wholly to hunting, fowling, and exercise of Armes. The Tartars nourish many herds of Oxen, flocks of Sheepe, and other Beafts, and Cattell, and abide with them in places of Paflure, in the Summer time, in the Mountaines, and colder places, where they finde Pathure and Wood: but in the Winter, they remove vnto the hotter Countreyes, where they finde Paffure for their Cattell : and goe forth-on two or three moneths together. Their houses are covered with flickes and felts, ordinarily round, which they carrie with them on Carts or Waggons of foure wheeles, whitherfocuer they goe. For they can fold and extend them, fet them yo, and take them downe : and they turne the doore of them alwaies to the South. They have also neat Carts of two wheeles (couered with Felt fo well that rayne cannot pierce them) drawne by Oxen, and Camels, wherein they carrie their wives, children, and necessarie houshold-stuffe 50 with them, and defend them from the injurie of foule weather, and rayne.

The Tartars, if they be rich, are clothed with Sables, Ermins, and Cloth of gold, and all their furniture is coftly. Their Armes are Bowes, Swords, Polaxes, and some Lances, but they can best vie their Bowes, whereto they are vied from their childhood. They are hardie, valorous, cruell, will continue two dayes and nights on horse-backe armed; exceeding patient of difficulties, and exceeding obedient to their Lords. Their Cattell also are hardie. The Law and Faith of the Tartars is this. They fay, that there is a great God, high and heauenly, of whom with daily incenfe they defire good understanding and health. They have another, which they call Natigay, which is like an Image couered with Felt, or some other thing, which every one hath in his house. To this God they make a wife and children, placing the 60 wises Image at the left hand, and the representations of children before his face. This they call, The God of earthly things, which keepeth their Children, and their Beafts, and Corne ; and give it great reverence. Before they eat themselves, they amoint the mouthes of the Images with the fat of the fodden Flesh, and they cast the broth out of doores, in honour of other

Spirits, faying, that their God with his familie haue had their part; and after they eate and drinke at pleafure.

If the forme of any Tartar die, who hath not yet beene married, and also the daughter of another die vinarried, the parents of both the deceated parties meet together, and make a mar- Painted Marriage betweene the dead: and making a draughter in writing, of that contract, they paint men riages. and women for feruants, Horses and other creatures, with clothes of all forts and moneyes, in paper, and burne them together with the writing of contract; by the fumes whereof, they fav that all these things are carried to their children in another world, where they are married, and the fathers and mothers thinke they are lowned together through fuch a bond of affinitie, as if thole marriages had beene celebrated, while the married couple yet lined.

When the Tartars goe to warre, their Prince conducteth about one hundred thousand Horse, Their war-fare appointing Heads ouer tens, hundreds, thoulands, ten thoulands, by which orderly subordination, commands are easily effected. Euery hundred is called a Tuc; ten, a Toman. When they fer forthithey fend our men every way, as Scouts that no Enemie may affault them vinpromitted. Of Horse and Mares, there are for every man about eighteene. They carrie also their like Felt houses under the which they shelter themselves in the time of rayer. When there falls out 20 fome important employment, they will ride ten dayes together without victuals boyled, and live of the bloud of their Horfes, cutting a veyne and fucking it. They have Milke dryed like Patte, which they make, boyling the Milke, and taking the Creame which fwims on the top, put it in another vessell, and thereof make Batter: After, they let the Milke in the Sunne and drie it: and when they goe in the Armie carrie ten pounds thereof, and every morning take halfe a pound, and put it into a little Flaske or Bottle of Leather, with as much water as he pleafeth : which while he rides, beats together : and this is his dinner. When they encounter with their Enemies, they ride here and there shooting, and sometimes make shew of slight, shooting as they flee, and finding the Enemies broken, redintegrate their forces, and purfue the victorie: haning their Horses at command, with a signe to turne any way. But now the Tartars are mixed 30 in divers parts, and fo are their fashions.

They punish malefacters after this manner. If any steale a thing of small value, and hath not The muld or deferued to be deprined of life, he is feauen times beaten with a Cudgell, or feauenteene, or fea- Penaltic of uen and twenty, or thirty feauen, or forty and feauen, guing the strokes according to the meafure and qualitie of the offence, and that wnto an hundred; fome doe often times dye, through the heards of these strokes. But if any haue stollen an Horse, or another thing, for the which hee deserueth to Castella dye, he is cut afunder with a Sword in the middle : but if hee will redeeme his life, he shall reffore the theft nine fold. Such as have Horses, Oxessor Camels, brand them with their markes. and fend them to the pattures without a keeper.

Leauing the Citie of Carachoran, and the Mountaine Altai, you come vnto the champaine Baren, 40 Countrey of Bargu, which extendeth it felfe Northwards about fixtie dayes journey in length, The Inhabitants of those places are Meriti, and they are fubicet to great Chan, whing the manners of the Tartars. They are wilde men, and eate the flesh of Beafts which they take by hunting, especially of Stagges, whereof they have great plentie, and they make them so tame, that Strange Falthey may ride them. They want Corne and Wine. In the Summer they exercise great hun-cons ting and taking of wilde Beasts and Fowle, with the flesh whereof they may live in the winter: This is either a For in Winter, as well fowle as other living creatures flie from thence, by reason of the exceeding and vntolerable cold of that Countrey. After the end of fortie dayes iourney, you come hardly credivnto the Ocean, neere which is a Mountaine where After, and strange Falcons breed, which are ble. carryed thence vnto the Court of great Chan,

50 Heere we mult returne vnto the Citie Campion. If therefore you proceed further fine dayes Ni tht walking iourney from the Citie Campion towards the East, (in the places lying in the middle, horrible E-grade voyces of Deuts are heard in the night time) you come to the Kingdome Erginal, in the Prouince of Tangut, fubicetto the great Cham. In this Kingdome are many other Kingdomes which are Idolators. There are some Nestorian Christians, and Turkes. There are many Cities and Ca-Bles, of which Erginal is chiefe. From hence, if you proceed further to the Southeast, you may Cathal, goe to the parts of Cathai, going Southeast towards Cathai, there is a certaine famous Citie vamed Cingur, (the name also of the Province) tributarie vnto great Chan : contained in Tangut : the people are some Christians, some Mahumetans, others Idolators. Their are also found wilde Oxen, neere as great as Elephants, very faire, having white and blacke havre, thort in

60 other parts, and on the shoulders three palmes long, fine and white beyond silke : of which Other parts, and on the inconcers since painted song, and and and of the leaves brought fome to Venice as a rare thing. Many also of these Oxen are tamed, and made to of the bigness. engender with tame Kine, and the breed of them are fitter for bufineffe then any other creatures, of the bane, beare great burthens are yoaked to the plow, and doe twife as much as others. The best Muske in the world is found in this Prouince, and is of a goodly beast of the bignesse of a Goat, haung Maske. groffe hayre like a Stagge, feet and tayle like a Gazella but without hornes; it hath foure teetin, two aboue, and two beneath, of the length of three fingers, fubtle, and white as luorie, and is a faire beaft to fee to, when the Moone is at full, neare the naull under the belly there growes to this beaft an impostume or bladder full of blood, and at the full then they goe to hunt the faid beafts and take away that swelling, which is dryed in the Sunne, and is the best Muske : the fieth alio is good to eate. Mafter Marco brought to Venice the head and feet of this beaft dryed The men hue of Merchandise and Arts, and have aboundance of Corne : they are Idolaters, of a fat body and a little Noie, blacke hayred, having no beard but foure hayres on their chin Require prefer. The women are faire and white. And when the mendefire to marry wives, they rather feeke redbe ore No- the beautifull, then the noble or rich. Whereby it commeth often to palle, that a great and Noble man marryeth a poore wife, but beautifull, affigning dowrie to her mother there. This Prouince extendeth it felfe fiue and twentie dayes journey in length, and is very fertile. In it are exceeding great Feafants, having traynes eight or ten handfuls long. Many other kindes of 10 Birds are also found there, which have very goodly feathers, diffinguished with divers and ev-

Egrezaia.

Proceeding further towards the East, after eight dayes journey, you meet with the Propince Egrigaia, in the which are many Cities and Castles, all still in Tangush. The principall Citie is called Calacia. The Inhabitants thereof are Idolaters, there are three Churches of Nefferian Christians, and are subiect to the great Chan. In the Citie Calacia, Chamlets are made, wouen of white wooll and the hayre of Camels, then the which, there are scarce any fairer found

Going to the East from the Province Egrigaia, the way leadeth vnto the Province Tenduch. in the which are many Cities and Cafiles : where also Presbyter lobannes vieth to abide, who 20 now payeth tribute to great Chan. This King of that progenie of Priest Iohn is named George. and is a Priest and a Christian, and most of the people are Christians. All the Great Chans, after his death who was slaine in battell by Cingus, gaue their Daughters to those Kings to wife. This King George holds not all that Priest John before held, and is the fourth of that progenie. There is a Nation there called Argon, more goodly men and fitter for Merchandife then the rest, descended of Idolaters and Mahumetans. There are also two Regions where they raigne. Gog and Magog which in those parts are called Og and Magog, but they which dwell there call them Vng and Mongul: in Ung are Gog, and in Mongul the Tartars. Riding East feauen dayes towards Catar.

are many Cities peopled with Idolaters, Mahumetans, and Nestorians. There is one Citie called Sindicin, where very faire and excellent Armes are made of divers forts, fit for Armies. In the 30 mountaines of this Prouince are great Mines of filter, and manifold game of wilde beafts, and the Countrey of the mountaines is called Idfa. Three dayes journey diffant from the forefaid Citie. flandeth another Citie langamur, that is White Lake, wherein is a Palace, in which the great Chan most willingly remaineth, because there are many Lakes and rivers, many Swannes, and in the plaines, Cranes, Feafants, and Partridges, and store of other fowle. There are fine forts of Cranes there : some haue blacke wings like Crowes, others are white and bright, hauing their feathers full of eves like Peacocks, but of a golden colour, the necke blacke and white very beautifull; a third fort of bigneffe not valike ours; a fourth, little and very faire, intermingled with red and blew colours; the fifth, of a grizell or gray colour, having red and blacke heads, and thefe are very great. And neere vnto this Citie lyeth a certaine valley where many Cottages are, in the which 40 an exceeding number of Partridges is maintained, which are kept for the King, comming to lodge there for a time. This Citie is three dayes iourney Northeastward to the Citie Xandu, which the great Chan

Cublay now raigning built; erecting thereing a maruellous and artificiall Palace of Marble and other stones, which abutteth on the wall on one side, and the midst of the Citie on the other. He included fixteene miles within the circuit of the wall on that fide where the Palace abutteth on the Citie wall, into which none can enter but by the Palace. In this inclosure or Parke are goodly meadowes, fprings, rivers, red and fallow Deere, Fawnes carryed thither for the Hawkes, (of which are there mewed aboue two hundred Gerfalcons which he goeth once a weeke to fee) and he often vieth one Leopard or more, fitting on Horses, which hee ie: teth vpon the Stagges 50 and Deere, & having taken the beaft, giveth it to the Gerfalcons, and in beholding this spectacle he taketh wonderfull delight. In the middest in a faire Wood hee hath built a royall House on pillars gilded and vernished, on every of which is a Dragon all gilt, which winderh his tayle about the pillar, with his head bearing up the loft, as also with his wings displayed on both sides: the couer also is of Reeds gilt and varnished, so that the rayne can doe it no iniurie, the reeds being three handfuls thicke and ten yards long, fplit from knot to knot. The house it selfe also may be fundred, and taken downe like a Tent and erected againe. For it is fullained, when it is fet vp, with two hundred filken cords. Great Chan vieth to dwell there three moneths in the yeare, to wit, in Iune, Iuly, and August. On the eight and twentieth day of August, he departeth to make a folemne facrifice. He hath an herd of white Horses, and white Mares, about ten thou- 60 fund of the milke whereof none may drinke except hee be of the progenie of Cingis Can, except one family called Boriat, priviledged hereto by Cingis for their valour. And these beatts as they goe vp and downe feeding are much renerenced, nor dare any goe before them or hinder their way. The Aftrologers or Sorcerers tell Chan that on the twentie eight of the Moone of August, he should disperse that milke heere and there, for the honour of all spirits and his Idols, that they might be carefull preferiers of all those things which he possesses.

Munting with

There are two forts of Idolaters, Sorcerers called Thebeth and Chefmir, which in the midft of The Kines formes ascend the Palace and fuffer no rayne to fall thereon; which they make the people be- Magiciansleene comes to palle by their fanctitie : and therefore they goe flouenly and regardleffe of their persons, neuer washing nor combing themselves. They also have a horrible custome to dresse and eare fuch as are comdemned to death, but not those which dve naturally. They are called also Bachfi, which is the name of their Order, as Friers Predicants or Minors with vs. They feeme by Magicke to doe what they lift, when the great Can in his Hall fits at his Table, which is 10 eight yards high : and in the midft of the hall a good distance from the table is a great Cupboard of plate furnished: They cause that the peeces full of Wine or Milke or other viands of themfelues, fill the goblets without any hand touching them, and goe ten paces in the ayre into the great Cans hand; and when he hath drunke, returne to their place. This they doe in the prefence of any man, when their Lord commands. These Bachfi also when they will make feaths to their Idols, goe to the Can and fay; Sir know that if our Idols be not honoured with Sacrifices, they will bring plagues to Corne and Bealts. And therefore wee pray you to give the fielh of fo many Sheepe with blacke heads, and fo many pounds of Incense and Lignum aloes, that we may make them due facrifice and honour. This they spake not to him themselves, but by certaine Lords deputed to that Office, who speake to the Can and obtaine it. On the feath day they o facrifice the faid beafts, and fprinkle the broath before the Idels,

They have great Monatteries some of the big nesse of a Citie, in some of which are about two thousand Monkes which serve Idols, sequestred from the Laitie in their shaving and garments. Shavings For they thaue their heads and beards, and were a religious garment. These in the folemnities of their Idols fing with folemne fongs and lights, some of them may marry. There are some of great abitinence called Sensim, leading an auftere life, for they eate nothing but Meale mingled with water till all the Flower be gone, and eate the branne without any fauour. These worthin the Fire; and the men of other rules fay that these which are so austere, are Heretikes against their Law, because they worthip not Idols as they doe; and there are great differences betwixt them : and these marry not in any case. They shaue their Head and Beard : they weare blacke 20 hempen garments, and bright yellow. They fleepe in thicke Mats, and line the feuerest life

Of CVBLAICAN, his Raigne and Acts, Magnificent feasts and Huntines. Court and Counfell. His Citie Cambalu and glorious

Nthis Booke I purpose to write of all the great and maruellous Acts, of the present Heère begins Can called Cublai Can, which is in our Tongue Lord of Lords, the greatest Prince the second in peoples, Cities and Treatures, that euer was in the world. Hee being discended Booke of Marfrom the Progenie of Chingis, the first Prince of the Tartars, is the fixth Emperour which I thought of that Countrey, beginning to raigne in the yeare of our Lord 1256. being twentie leaven good to adueryeares old, and ruling the people with great wifedome and grautie. He is a valiant man, exer- use the Res-

cifed in Armes, ftrong of bodie, and of a prompt minde for the performance of matters, before der as for the he attained to the dignitie of the Empire (which by his wissome he did against the will of his Laire and Re-Brethren) he often shewed himselfe a valiant Souldier in the warres, and carryed himselfe like mule so differ, a wifer and bolder Captaine, then euer the Tartars had. But fince he swayed the Kingdome, he that I have lets went but once into the Field, but fends his Sonnes, and other Captaines in expeditions.

In the yeare of our Lord 1286, his Vnclenamed Naiam, being thirtie yeares of age, and hauing the command of many people, and Countries, fo that hee was able easily to bring together Company China fourehundred thousand Horse. Being puffed vp through youthfull vanitie, would now no lon- ga can. ger be lubic ct, but would needs take away the Kingdome from his Lord Cubas, and fent to ano. Naiamit chelther great Lord named Cardus, Lord of the parts towards great Turkie, who was nephew of the lion Emperour Cublai, yet hated him, who yeelding confent to Rebellion, promited to come in proper person with an hundred thousand Horse,

Both of them began to gather Forces, which could not bee done fo fecretly but Cublai heard of it, and presently tooke order to set guard to the wayes that no intelligence might passe that way: and then affembled all the Forces within ten dayes journey of Cambala with great speed. 60 fo that in twentie dayes, were gathered together three hundred & fixtie thousand Horse, and one hundred thousand Foot, a great part of them Falconiers and men of his Houshold. With these hee made all hafte day and night towards Naiams Country, where at the end of twentie fine dayes he arrived, altogether vilooked for : and refted his men two dayes. Then hee called his Aftrologers, and caused them before all the Armie to divine who should have victorie (a thing they alway vie to incourage their men) and they promifed it to Cublai. One morning whiles Main was fleeping negligently in his Tent, having not fo much as fent out any fcouts to efpie. Cublas made hew of his Armie vpon a hill to Naiams. Hee himselfe sate in a certaine Cattle of wood, full of Archers and Croffe-bow men, borne by foure Elephants; on the top whereof was the Royall Standard with the Images of the Sunne and Moone. Hee deuided his Armie into three wings, of which he lent that on the righthand and the other on the left against Naiams Armie: To every ten thousand Horse were affigued five hundred Foot with Lances, taught to leape up behind the horse-men if any occasion of flight happened, and suddenly on advantage to light and flay the enemies horses with their lances. Caids was not yet come. The battels joy- 10 ned and made a cruell fight, which continued from morning till noone: and then was Naiam taken and brought before Cublai, who commanded that he should be sewed betwixt two Carpets, which should be tossed up and downe till the breath were out of his bodie, that so the Imperial blood might not be expected to the Sunne and the ayre. The remainder of his people iware O. bedience to Cublai, which were foure Nations, Ciorza, Carli, Barfeol, and Sitingui

Nature was fecretly baptifed, and by profession a Christian, but 110 follower of the workes of Faith, and figned his principall Enfigne with the figne of the Croffe, having with him infinite

ftore of Christians which were all flaine.

The Icmes and Saracens, that were in the Armie of Cublai, began to vpbraid the Christians with this difafter of the Croffe, who thereupon complained to Cublai. Hee then sharply repro- 29 uing the Iewes and Saracens, turning to the Christians faith; Surely, your God and his Croffe. would not give any ayde to Naiam. but be not you therefore ashamed, because God beeing good and just, oughtonot at all to defend Injustice and Injustice. Najam was a Traytour to his Lord, and contrary to all equitie raifed rebellion, and fought the helpe of your God in his mischieucus purpose. But he as a good and vpright God, would not fauour his Defignes. He returned after this with great triumph to Cambalu, and stayed there till Easter. On that day he called the Christians before him, and kiffed their Gospels, and made his Barons doe the same. The like hee doth in the great Featts of Saracens, lewes, and Ethnikes, that Sogomamber Can the God of the Idols. Mahumet, Meles, or who foeuer is greatest in heaven might helpe him. Yet he made best shew of liking to the Christian Faith but pretended the ignorance of the Professors, and the mightie acts 30 of the Sorcerers, to his not professing it.

Now for rewarding his Souldiers, he hath twelue Barons or wife Counfellours, which give him notice of each Captaynes merit, who raifeth them command of one hundred to a thousand, and from one thousand to ten thousand, and so forward, giving them Vessels of Plate and Tablets. The Captayne of one hundred hath a Tablet of filter, and the Captayne of one thousand of Gold, or filuer gilded; the Captayne of ten thousand hath a Tablet of Gold with a Lions head on it: the weight of the Tablets differ also according to the worth and weight of the dignitie. On the laid Tablet is written a command in this manner. By the firenoth and power of the great God, and by the Grace which he hath given to our Empire, the name of Can be bleffed, and let them all dre and be destroyed which will not obey him. All they which have these Tablets have 40 priviledges in writing, of all things which they are to doe or demand. And the Generals when they ride in publike, they have a cloth borne over their heads; and when they fit, fit on a Chaire of filter. Their Tablet is of three hundred Saggi (fittie ounces of Gold) with the Images of the Sunne and Moone. They whose Tablet haue a Gerfalcon, may take with them for their guard the whole Armie of a great Commander.

he lendeth Ambaffadors to puruey the fair oft Lasses for him of great oft esteeme for beautie, which bring him foure or flue hundred more or leffe, as they fee caufe. There are Praylers or Examiners appointed, which take view of all their beauties, examining Eyes, Nofe, Mouth, &c. apart; and fet price on them at fixteene, feuenteene, eighteene, nineteene, twentie or more Carrats. And they bring those of that rate which their Commission appoints. These hee causeth to bee reviewed by other Examiners, and of to many chuleth perhaps thirtie for his Chambet of the chiefe; which he puts to some of his Barons Wines, to see if they snore not in their sleepe, if in 60 fmell or behaviour they be not offensive. Those which are approoued are by fives divided, each fifth part wayting three dayes and nights in his Chamber by course, the other in the next Lodgings preparing whatfocuer thele command them. The leffe prized are put to Cookerie, and other noble Officers. And fometimes the Can bestowes them on Gentlemen with great portions.

His Wives and in the Kingdome. And every one of these is called Empresse, and holdeth a peculiar Court, and that Princely in a proper Palace, having about three hundred chofen Hand-mayds, and Mayd- 50 feruant, and many Eunuch feruants, and at least ten thousand persons in their Family. The King hath alto many Concubines. There is a certaine Nation of faire people, Tartars, called Ungut, whether every second yeare

Cublai is a comeley and faire man of a meane stature, of a red and white face, blacke and goodly eyes, well fashioned note, and all the lineaments of his bodie consisting of a due proportion. He hath foure wives which he accounteth lawfull, and the first-borne of them succeedeth him and thinke themselves borne under an ill Planet, if they have not for his turne. Cublai hach two and twentie Sonnes by his foure legitimate Wiues, and the first-borne of his. His children first Wife was called Cingis, who should have succeeded him in the Empire, if hee had not dved before his Father. He lete a Sonne named Temur, a valiant man, wife, and exercifed in Armes, Temur who is to fucceed his Grand-father in the Empire, in stead of his deceased Father. But by his Hand-mayds and Mayd-fernants, he hath fine and twentie Sonnes, all which are daily exercifed in feats of Armes, and are great Lords. Seven of his Sonnes by his Wives are Kings of great Prouinces, and maintayne their states with great reputation.

The men of that Countrey effeeme it a grace and credit to have Daughters worthy his liking:

Three moneths of the yeere, to wit, December, Ianuarie, and Februarie, Cublai remayneth ordinarily in Cambala which is at the North-east border of Cataio, and there on the South part by the new Citie is seated a great Palace. First, there is a square Wall, each square being eight miles, with a deep Ditch enuironing, and a Gate in the middle of each; after which is the space of a mile in circuit where Souldiers stand. After this is another circuit of fixe mile square, with three Gites on the South square, and three on the North: that which is in the midst being in both the greater, and kept thut, except when the Can paffeth that way; the other alway open to others. In each corner of this Wall and in the middt is a faire Palace, eight in all, very large, in which are kept the Cans munitions and furnitures of all forts, for Horles in one, in another Bowes and shooting Artillerie, in a third Costlets, Curasses and leather Armours, and so in the 20 reft. Within this circuit is another wall-circuit, very thicke, and ten paces high, all the battlements white; the wall square, each square a mile in length, with fixe gates as the former, and eight Palaces also very great, wherein are the Cans prouision. Betwixt these two last walls are many faire trees and medowes, in which are Deere, Muske beatts, with other game, and store of graffe, the paths being heightned two cubits to spare it, no durt, nor plashes of water being therein. Within this last wall is the Palace of the great Can, the greatest that hath beene seene, abutting with the wall on the North and South and open spaced where the Barons and Souldiers palle. It hath no feeling, but a very high roofe : the foundation of the pauement ten palms high, with a wall of marble round about it, two paces wide, as it were a walke. In the end of the wall without, is a faire Turret with Pillars. In the walls of the Halls and Chambers are carued Dragons, Souldiers, Birds, Beafts, of diuers kinds, histories of Warres, gilded. The roofe is to made, that nothing is seene but Gold and Imagery. In cuery square of the Palace is a great Hall of marble, capable of great multitudes. The Chambers are disposed the best that may be deuised: the roofe is red, greene, azure, and of all coloures. Behind the Palace are great Roomes, and private store-houses for his treasures and Iewels, for his women , and other secret employments: Ouer against the faid Palace of the Can, is another for Cingis his sonne, whole Court, was in all things like his Fathers. Neere this Palace towards the North is a Mount made by hand, a mile in compasse, one hundred paces high; beset with trees that are alwaies greene. Vnto this mountaine, the king commandeth all the best trees, to be brought from remote parts, lading Elephants with them, for they are taken up with the roots, and are transplanted in this Mountaine. And because this Mountaine is alwaies greene it is called, The greene Mountaine. The ercens And where the earth of that Mount was taken away, are two Lakes answeringeach other, with Mountaine. a pretie River alling them, stored with fish, and so grated that the fish cannot get forth.

The Citie of Cambaln in the Province of Cathai, seated on a great River, was famous, and cembaln. regall, from antiquitie. And this name Cambalu tignifieth, The Citie of the Lord, or Prince. This Citie the great Canremoued vnto the other fide of the Riner where the Palaces are: for This Citie the great Cas remoued wnto the other fide of the Kner where the Palaces are: for the waderflood by the Altrologers, that it should rebell against the Empire . This new built in Cities is alled Tadas: and he made all the Casyson; to goe out of the old Citie into the new is defined to believe the contract of which contayneth in compasse four and twentie miles, every side of the square contayning fixe mixed. miles. It hath walls of earth ten paces thicke at the bottome, and at the top but three, by little Taidu. and little afcending thinner: the batlements are white. Euery square of the wall hath three principall Gates, which are twelue in all, having fumptuous Palaces built ouer each of them.

There are also excellent Palaces in the angles of the walls, where the Armes of the Carrifon Palaces. (which are one thousand at each Gate) are kept. The buildings are squared out, & the streets laid The conslitis very straight by line, throughout this Citie, so that from one Gate a free prospect openeth tho- of the streets, row the Citie, to the opposite Gate, having very goodly houses built on both sides, like Palaces with Gardens and Courts, divided to the Heads of Families. In the middle of the Citie, a certaine sumptuous house is built, wherein hangeth a very great Bell, after the third knolling whereof in the night no man may goe out of his house, vitill the beginning of the day following, except it be for speciall cause, as for a woman in travell, &c. And they are compelled to 60 carrie a light with them.

Without the Cirie of Cambalu are twelve great Suburbs, three or foure miles long, loyning Suburbs large vpon each of the twelue Gates, more inhabiting the Suburbs then the Citie : heere Marchants and Strangers keepe, each Nation having a feuerall Store-house or Burle in which they lodge. No dead corps of any man is buryed within this Citic, but the bodies of Idelaters are burned without the Suburbs, where the dead bodies of other feets are buryed. And because an Burial without huge multitude of Sorcerers converse alwayes there, they have about twentie fine thousand Harlots in the Suburbs and in the Citie, and these have a Captaine appointed over every hundreth, and thousand ; and one Generall ; whose office is, that when Embalsadours come, or such as have businesse with the Can whose charges he findeth, this Captaine giveth every Embassadour and every man of his family, change of women nightly at free coil : for this is the Queanes tria Harlose of the bute. The Guards every night cast those in prison which they finde walking late : and if they be found guiltie they are beaten with Cudgels : for the Bachfi tell them that it is not good to shed mans blood. But many dye of those beatings.

The number of The Guard.

The great Can hath in his Court twelve thouland Horse-men, which they call Castian, faith- 10 the horse men full Souldiers of their Lord, who guard his person more for state then searc. And source Captaines haue the charge of these, whereof every one commandeth three thousand. When one Captaine with three thousand Souldiers within the Palace, hath guarded the King for three dayes and nights, another Captaine with his Souldiers againe succeedeth : and so throughout the whole

yeeare, this course of watching by course is observed. When through occasion of any feastinall day hee keepeth a solemne Court, his Table being higher then the rest of the Tables, is set at the North part of the Hall, and his face is to the South, having the greatest Queene on his left hand, to wit, his principall wife, and his Sonnes. and nephews, and they of the blood royall on his right. Yet their table is in a lower place, so that they scarce touch the Kings feet with their heads; the seat of the eldest being higher then the 20 rest. The Barons and Princes, sit in a lower place then that. Their wives also keepe the like order. first the Cans sonnes wives and his kinsmens, sits lower on the left hand, and after, those of the Lords and of eurry Captaine, and Noble-man, each in her degree and order. And the Emperour himselse, while he sitteth at his table, may cast his eyes upon all that feast with him in that Hall. There are not Tables for all to fit, but the greatest part of the Souldiers and Barons eate on Carpers. At all the doores stand two grantly fellowes with Cudgels, to see that none touch the Threshold, which if hee doe they take his garments away; which he must redeeme with so many blowes as shall be appointed, or else loie them. They which serue the King sitting at the table, all of them couer their mouthes with Silke, leaft their breathing should by any meanes touch the Kings meat or drinke. And when he hath minde to drinke, the Damofell which gives 30 King drinketh, it, goeth back three paces and kneeles downe, and then the Barons and all the people kneele, and the Musicians found their Instruments. There is no cause why I should write any thing concerning the meats which are brought to the Table, how daintie and delicate they are, and with what magnificence and pompe they are ferued in. All the Tarters observe this custome, to celebrate the Birth day of their Lord most honourably. The Festivall birth day of Cublai, is kept the twentie eight of September, and this day hee accounteth more folemne, then any of the whole yeare, except the first of February, wherein they begin their yeare. The King therefore in his Birth day is cloathed with a most precious garment of Gold, and about two thousand Barons and Souldiers, are cloathed of the same colour of gold (though of Silke stuffe) and a girdle wrought with gold and filter, which is given them with a payre of shooes: some weare Pearles and Gemmes of great price, namely, the Quiecitarie, which are next to the Can: and these garflome is fully-ments are not worne but on their thir eene folemne Feafts according to the thirreene Moones fedby the Mo- of the yeare; all then cloathed like Kings. This custome is also observed with the Tartars, that on the birth day of great Cham, all the Kings, Princes, and Nobles, which are subject to his Dominion, should fend presents vnto him, as to their Emperour. And they who defire to obtaine any place of Dignitie or office of him, offer their requests vnto twelue Barons appointed for this purpole, and what they decree, is all one, as if the Emperour himselfe had answered them. The prayers of All people also, of what Faith or sect soeuer, whether Christians, or sewes, Saracens, or Tartars, and other Pagans are bound, felemnly to call vpon their Gods, for the life, fafetie, and profpe-

On the day of the Kalends of February, which is the beginning of the Tartars yeare, great Can and all the Tartars, wherefocuer they are, celebrate a very great and folemne Feath, and all aswell men as women, desire to bee cloathed in white Garments. For they beleeue, that the white garment is a token of good lucke: Therefore that fortune might fauour them all the yeare, they weare white in the beginning of the yeare. Moreouer the Rulers of Cities, and Gouernours of Prouinces, mindfull of their dutie, fend vnto their Emperour on this day prefents of Gold and Silver, Pearles and Precious stones, many white Cloathes, and other white things, and many Horses of a white colour : the rest of the Tartars at the beginning of the yeare, fend white prefents one to another. It is the custome of those which bring presents, if they can, of each to present nine times nine; as if they fend Horles, to present nine nines, that is e ghtie one, and so of 60 Gold, of Clouths, & other things, that fomtimes he hath by this reckoning one hundred thouland Horses. Also at this good lucke, all the Elephants which the Emperour hath (fine thousand in number) are brought vnto the Court, couered with Tapistrie, wherein the similatudes of clivers Beatls and Fowles are portrayed, carrying upon their shoulders two Chests full of golden and Silver veffell. Many Camels also are brought, covered with faire Silken clothes, which bring other things, necessarie for the Court. And this day in the morning, all the Kings. Capraines, Barons, Souldiers, Phylicians, Aftrologers, Falconers, and the Gouernours of Proninces. and Armies, and other Officers of the Emperour, affemble in the great Hall before the King. and they who happen to have no place there, for the multitude of men, fland in another place where he may fee them. All being placed in their or ler, and degree, one arifeth as it were lome Prelate, and crieth out with a loude voyce, Bow downe, and adore. And prelently all doe reperence, bending downe their forcheads to the earth. Then he fayth, God preferue our Lord with long life and way, and all answere, God grant. Then he sayth, God encrease and advance his Empire. 10 and preserve his Subjects in peace, good will, and prosperitie; and all answers, God grant. And this they doe toute times. The aderation finished, the laid Prelate goeth to an Altar richly adorned, on which is a red Table, wherein is written the name of the Can, and taking a Cenfer, and putting odoriterous Spices therein, they perfume the Table and the Altar with great reuerence, in honour of great Can, and to returne to their places. After which, are offered the gifts whereof we have spoken; and then the Tables are prepared, and a most tolemne Dinner held, cating and The Reast. drinking with great my with their wines, in manner before described. In those three moneths, in which as we faid before, the Emperour remayneth in the Citie of The office of 20 Cambalu, to wit, in December, Ianuarie, and Februarie, all the Hunters, which the Emperour the Prosincial hath in all Provinces, round about the Province of Cashai, apply themselves to hunting, and offer Hunters, all the oreater wilde-bealts, to wit, Stags, Beares, Roe-buckes, wille Boares, Deere, and fuch like, voto their Gouernours : who (if they be diffant from the Emperours Court, lose then thirtie dayes Iourney) fend fuch heafts taken, by Waynes, and Ships vinto the Emperour, hauing first bowelled them. But such as are fortie dayes iourney distant from his Court, fend one. ly the skinnes, which are necellarie for the making of Armour. Hee hath many Leopards, and Tame Leo-Wolves for hunting, and many Lions also, greater then those which are in Babylon, in the haire Pards, and whereof certaine little beames appeare of divers colours, to wir, white black; and red, and they Lions, are accommodated to catch Boares, Beares, Stags, Roe-buckes, wilde Ailes, and wikle Oxen .

30 and it is maruellous to fee the Lions herceneffe and dexteritie in the act. Two Lions vie to bee carried in one Wagon, when they goe to hunt, and with them a Dog, with which they are ramed; and they carrie them on this fashion, because of their furie and vnrulinede; and they must carrie them contrary to the wind; for elfe the beaits would fent them, and flee. Hee hath many Eagles. tame Eagles, which are fo fierce, that they take Hares, Roe-buckes, Decre, and Foxes; among which some of them feare not with great violence to telze vpon Wolles, and vexe them to fore. that without labour and danger, they may be taken by men,

In hunting they goe with their people, one on the right, and the other on the left hand of the King : and they take up to great a length of the Playne, that from one end to the other is a dayes journey, to that no beattean escape them ; and it is great pleature when the Can goes in the milft, to fee the Dogs follow Harts, Beares, and other kinds. And these Brethren are bound by coue ant, from the beginning of October to the end of March, to bring to the Court, one thouland heads of pealts and birds, befides Quailes, and filles the beit they can, in great proportion.

Whiles they are thus busied in sporting and hawking, they come vnto a certaine great Plaine. called Caczarmedin, where the Tents of the King and all the Courtiers are prepared, about to ten thousand in number. The first and chiefe is the Cans Paullion, under which ten thousand Souldiers fland, befides Barons and Noble-men, with the doore to the South; fuftayned with three Pillars, wrought with divers curious and excellent carved workes, and couered with the skinnes of Lions (and strakes of divers colours) which keepe out rayne. The Tartare call the Sable, the Queene of Furres. The Cordes, wherewith these Paulions are supported, are of filke. There are also other Paulions erected, wherein the Wines, Sonnes, and Hand-maides of the King remaine. Further also, the Falcons, Hawkes, Owles, Garfalcons, and other Birds, 20 which ferue for Hawking, have their Tents wherein they are contayned. For, there is fo great a multitude of Tents, that to them that come thither, a farre off it feemeth that a famous Citie is built there. The King remayneth all March in that Plaine, and taketh innumerable Beafts and infinite multitudes of Fowle. For no man may else hunt in all the Provinces of that Kingdome, at the least within five dayes journey one way, ten another, and fifteene a third way of the Cans Court : nor keepe an hunting Dogge, or an Hawke : and specially, from the beginning of March vntill the moneth of October, no man is permitted to vie any deuice or engine whatfoeuer, to take Stagges, Deere, Roe-bucks, Hares, left he should hinder their breede ; and here-

> It is incredible what multitudes of People, Merchants, and merchandises of all forts are seene 10 in Cambalu. The Money of the Great Can is not made of gold or filter, or other metall. But they take the middle barke from the Mulberrie Tree, and this they make firme, and cut it into divers and round pieces, great and little, and imprint the Kings marke thereon. Of this matter therefore, the Emperour causeth an huge masse of money to bee made in the Citie of Cambala. which sufficeth for the whole Empire : and no man vnder paine of death may lawfully coine any other, or spend any other money, or refuse it in all his Kingdomes and Countries. Nor any comming from another Kingdome, dare spend any other money in the Empire of Great Can. Whereby it commeth to passe, that Merchants often comming from farre remote Countries and Regions vnto the Citie of Cambalu, bring with them gold, filter, pearle, and precious stones, and receiue the Kings money for them. And because this money is not receiued in their Countries, 40 they change it agains in the Empire of Great Can for merchandife, which they carried way with them. He also payeth stipends to his Officers and Armies of the mentioned money; and lastly, whatsoeuer thing he needeth in his Court he buyeth with this money. Other twelue Barons are appointed Counsellors for the foure and thirtie Prouinces, which have a faire Palace in Cambala, in which is for every Province a Judge & many Notaries. These have power to to choose Gouernours of the faid Provinces, and present their names to the Can which confirmes them. These also have the charge of the Treature to exact and dispense the same. Their office is called Singh, that is, The fecond Cours, subject to none but the Can, yet reputed leffe noble then the former, that being a martiall State.

They make excellent drinke, in the Province of Cathai, of Rice and divers Spices, which in the tafte thereof excelleth the tweetnetie even of Wine. And they who drinke more greedily therof then reason judgeth to be fit, or the nature of the drinker requireth, sooner become drunke then if they had drunke Wine.

Throughout the whole Prouince of Caibai, certaine blacke stones are digged out of the Mountaines, which put into the fire burne like wood, and being kindled preferue fire a long time, as if Ich a thing ftrange they be kindled in the Euening, they keepe quicke fire all the night. And many vie those ftones. because that though they have store of wood, yet is there such frequent vse of Stoues and Bathes (thrife enery weeke) that the wood would not ferue.

It is not amifie also, having spoken of his Provisions abroad, to mention his care for the poore of Cambalu. When he heares of any honourable Familie decayed by difaduentures, or of any which cannot worke, and have no meanes : he causeth to give to such Families the whole yeares expenses; each of such Families going to the Officers for that purpose, and shewing their Bill of allowance, receive provisions accordingly. There is a Palace deputed for those Officers. They are provided also of garments for Winter, and for Summer; the Can having the Tenths of all Wool, and Silke, and Hempe, which he causeth to bee made into Clothes in a house thereto appointed : 20 for all Trades are bound one day in the weeke to worke for him. He prouides also apparell for his Armies, and in every Citie caufeth Cloth to be made of his tithe wooll. You must vinderstand defull divine that the Tartars ancient customes knew no almes, but rather vpbraided such as were in necessitie. bounty indeed as liated of God. But the Idolaters, especially these Bachs, have propounded it as a good worke acceptable to God, and have taught him to be thus bountifull, fo that in his Court bread is never denyed to any which aske : and there is no day in which is not given away twentie thousand Crownes in Rice, Millet and Panike, whereby he is esteemed as a God.

There are alio in Cambalu of Christians, Saracens, and Catayans, about five thousand Astrologers and Diumers, which the Great Can prouideth yeerly of foode and rayment, as those poore about laid. These have an Astrolabe in which are marked the signes of the Planets, the houres and 30 points of all the yeare. Herein all these Astrologers, each Religion apart, view the course of the yeere, according to enery Moone, observing the disposition of the weather, referring alway to The Denill an God to doe more or leffe after his owne pleasure. They write also vpon certaine squares (they call them Tacuini) the things which are to come that yeere , which they fell to those that will buy them, and fuch as speake most truth are most honored. If any intend any great worke, or to goe a farre journey, and will know the event before-hand, he makes recourse to these Astrologers. to fee it with their eyes in the Heauens, which they doe, comparing the prefent Constellation with that of his Birth (which they demand of him) so foretelling him the good or euill.

The Tartars reckon the computation of their yeeres by twelves, the first figurified by a Lion. the second by an Oxe, the third by a Dragon, the fourth by a Dogge, and so thorow the whole 40 twelve: fo that if a man be demanded when he was borne; he will answer, such a point of such an houre, of fuch a day in the yeere Lion (this their fathers exactly let downe in a booke) and when the twelae is complete, they goe ouer the same againe.

Of their Religion we have faid that they are Idolaters, and for their Gods have a Table fet aloft in the wall of their Chamber , on which is written, a Name representing the High God of Heasen; and there every day, with a Cenfer of incenfe, they adore it in this manner. They lift up their hands aloft, and ftrike their teeth thrice, praying it to give them a good understanding and health; and defire thereof nothing elfe. Befides, on the ground they have another statue, called Nationi. The God of earthly things, with his Wife and Children (as before is faid) whom likewite they worthip with incense, striking or gnashing the teeth, and lifting up the hands; 50 and defire thereof temperature of the aire, fruits of the earth, children, and the like. They hold the Soule to be immortal, and that when a man dies, it enters into another bodie better or worle, according to the merits in the former life, as of a poore man to become a Gentleman, and after of a Prince or Lord, and so higher till it be assumpted in God:or if it hath ill deserved to be a pooret man, after a Dogge, alway descending to the lowest ranke of basenesse. They have a comely sprech, salute cheerfully and honestly, haue a gracefull carriage, and feed cleanly. They beare great reuerence to their Parents, and if any be vindutifull, or helplesse to their necessitie, there is a publike Office defigned to this particular, to punish vngratefull or disobedient children. Prisoners are released at three yeeres end, and marked in the cheeke, to be knowne Malefactors.

The Barons and People which goe to the Grand Can, obserue thele Rites. First, within halfe 60 a mile of the place where the Can is , all is husht and quiet without noyse or cryes , or any loud speech; and every Baron carries continually a little faire vestill to spit in, after which hee covers it, none daring to ipit on the Hall. They have Furre buskins of white leather, which they put on when they enter the Hall , putting off the former and giving them to the fervants , left they should foule the faire artificiall Carpets.

Hauing passed over the River and Bridge, proceeding thirtie miles westward (in which Palato ces are continually seene with Vineyards and fertile Fields) you come to the Citie Gonza, both The Citie faire and great, having many Monatteries of Idols. Cloth of gold and filkes are made there, and Gouza, the pureft and finest Cambricks or Launes, and many common Innes for Strangers and Trauailers are found in that Citie: The Citizens are Artificers and Merchants. A mile without this Citie the way parteth, one leading West, the other South-east : that to the West leadeth through the Parting of the Prounce of Cathay, but the other towards the Countrey of Maugi. From the Citie of Gouza way. to the Kingdome of Tainfu, you ride ten dayes thorow Cataso, alway finding many faire Cities and Caffles, well traded with Vineyards and tilled Fields, from whence Wine is carried to Cataio, where it wants. There are many Mulberrie trees for Silke-workes : the People civill and Cities very frequent.

Seven dayes further westward is a goodly Countrey, beautified with many Castles and Cities, in which also great trade of merchandise is vied. After which . you come to a Citie very great, named Pianfu, in which there is great abundance of Silke and Trading.

Westward from Pianfu standeth a very goodly Castle, named Thaigin, anciently built by a King called Dor. In it is a fractious Palace, wherein is a faire Hall, in which are painted all the famous Kings which have reigned there; a faire spectacle. Of this King Dor they say that he Dor and his was potent, and was attended onely by young Damfels, whereof his Court had great flore. But seuen men professing fidelitie and service to likewise in Dor, tooke him at advantage in hunting, and brought him captive to Presbyter John or Vincan, pare, who put him in vile clothes, and appointed him to keepe his Cattell, and fet on him aftrong guard till two yeeres were ended : after which , hee commanded him to bee brought before him. and actived him in Princely apparell, and giving him his pardon after sharpe admonition, fent him fo well actended to the repostession of his Kingdome. About twentie miles beyond the Callle Thaigin, is the River Caramoran, which by reason of caramoran, the exceeding bredth and depth thereof, hath no Bridge : and floweth to the Ocean. On the 40 shoare thereof are many Cities and Castles built; wherein much trading is exercised. This Countrey abounder with Ginger, Silke, and Fowle, especially Feasants, that three of them are bought for a great of Venice. There grow Reeds infinite flore, fo great that fome are a foot, some are a foot and halre in compaffe, profitable to many vies. Pailing this River, after two dayes journey is the famous Citie called Carranfu, where many clothes of Gold and Silke are made: heere carranfu, growes Ginger, Galingale, Spike, and many Spices. The people are Idolaters. Proceeding feuen dayes iourney Westward, many Cities, and Townes, goodly Fields and Gardens are found; and every where Mulberies for Silke-wormes. And they are Idolaters . but there are also Chriflians, Turkes, Nefforians, and fome Saracens. There is much both of wilde Beatts and Fowle. If you proceed feuen dayes journey further, you shall come to a certaine great Citic, named 50 Quenzanfu, which is the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, in which have raigned many famous Quenzanfu, Kings: and at this day, the fonne of great Can, called Mangals, hath the command thereof. That Countrey yeeldeth great plentie of Silke, Cloth of Gold, and all other things necessarie for furnishing of an Armie, and for preservation of the life of Man. The Inhabitants worship Idols, and there are some Christians, and Turkes, and Saracens. Fine miles without the Cirie Handeth the Palace of Mangalu, leated in a Playne, where are many Springs , Riverets, and places of King Mongalu, Game. There is a high wall encompassing fine miles, where are all wilde Beatis and Fowles, in the midit is an excellent Palace, having many Halls and Chambers great and faire, all painted with Gold and Az ire, and infinite Marbles adorning. The King with his Courtiers applieth himfelfe to hunting of wilde Beafts, and taking of Fowle, and followeth his tathers fteps in 60 Justice and Equitie, much beloued of his people.

Going three dayes Journey Westward from the faid Palace, through a certaine goodly Plaine, where many Cities and Caffles are (and abundance of Silke, Merchandife, and Arts) is a mountainous Countrie, where, in the Mountaines and Valleyes are frequent Habitations, and flore of Lodgings, of the Province of Cunchin. The Inhabitants are Idolaters, and Husbandmen. Alfo. combin.

in that Countrie they hunt Lions, Beares, Stags, Roe-buckes, Deere, Wolues. That Plaine is two dayes journey, and the Countrey is twentie dayes Westward all inhabited, having Mountaines, and Valleyes, and many Woods.

After that, twentie day es towards the West, is a Prouince, named Achbaluch Manei, that is The white Citie of the borders of Mangi, which is wel peopled. This Province for two dates journey hath a Piaine, with infinite habitations. After which follow Mountaines, Valleyes, and Woods. all inhabited twencie dayes journey Weltward. It hath flore of wild beafts, and of those creatures which yeeld Muske. In this Province Ginger groweth in great plentie, as also Corne and Rice.

After twentie dayes journey thorow those Hills, is a Playne, and a Province in the Confines of Manei, named Sindinfu. The chiefe Citie hath the same name, great and exceeding rich, be- to ing twentie miles circuit about. It hath had many rich and mightie Kings, but the old King dying, left three sonnes Successors of the Kingdome, which divided the Citie into three parts. compating enery part with their proper walls, all which notwithitanding were contained within the former wall. But great Can fibiected that Citie and Kingdome to his Dominion. Thorow this Citie runne many Riuers, in many places, and round about, some halfe a mile ouer. fome two hundred paces, very deepe, and on them are many Bridges of stone, very faire, eight paces broad, fet on both lides with marble Pillars, which beare vp a timber Frame that course the Bridge; each Bridge having ftreets and thops all along it. When these Rivers are past the Citie. they becom one great riner, called Quian, which runneth one hundred dayes journey hence to the Ocean. Neere thefe Rivers are many Cities and Caftles, and ships for Merchandile. Proceeding five dayes journey archer, through a certaine Playne, many Cities, Castles, and Villages are 10 found, in which fine Lawnes are in great aboundance. Many wilde Beafts also are there. After the Playne whereof wee now speake, is the Prouince of Tebeth, which great Can van-

And because it is become a Wildernesse, wanting Inhabitants, wilde Beafts , and Lions are there encreased abundantly: and it is needfull that Traueliers carrie victuals with them. Moreouer, Horses, and other Beasts which Merchants vie for their journey, hearing this noyse and cracking, are very much afraid, and many betaking themselves to flight, have escaped from their Mafters: but the wifer Trauellers binding their feet together with Fetters, detayne them Twentie dayes lourney ended, having passed over the Province of Tebeth, wee meet with

Strangers comming from other parts, passe shrough this Countrey, and pitch their Paulions, the like of the cy. Women of that place having marriageable daughters, bring them vnto Strangers, desiring 49 them to take them, and enjoy their companie as long as they remayne there. Thus the pretier the 4- booke, are chosen, and the rest returne home forrowfull. And when they will depart, they are not suffered to carrie any away with them, but faithfully restore them to their Parents. The Mayden also requireth some toy or small Present of him who hath defloured her, which shee may shew as an argument and proofe of her deflouring. And shee that hath beene loued, and abused of most men, and shall have many such favours and toyes to shew to her Wooers, is accounted more noble, and may more eatily and honourably be married. And when thee will goe honourably attired, shee hangeth all her Louers fauours about her necke, and the more acceptable shee was to many, of so much the more honour is shee adjudged worthie. But when they are once married to husbands, they are now no more fuffered to be coupled with Prange men. And the 50 men of this Countrie are very wary, that they offend not one another in this matter. They are Idolaters, and cruell men, thinking it no finne if they rob, and exercise theft. They live by hunting, and the fruits of the earth. Many beafts also are found with them, yeelding Muske called by them, Gudderi. They have a proper Language, and have no money, not the Paper Coralimoney, money of Can, but spend Corals for money, and are clothed with the skins of beafts, or course Hempe. This Countrey appertaymeth to the Province of Tebeth: for Tebeth is a very large Prouince and hath beene fometime duided into eight Kingdomes, having many Ciries, and Townes, with many Mountaynes, Lakes, and Rivers, where Gold is found. The women weare Corall about their neckes, and hang it about the neckes of their Idols, as a precious thing. In this Countrey there are very great Dogs, as big as Aifes, which take wilde Beafts, specially wilde 60 Oxen, called Beyamini. They are exceeding Necromancers, cauting tempefts, lightnings, thunderbolts, and many other wonders. There are many fores of Spices never brought into thele parts. This Thebeth is (as all the former Provinces) Jubicet to the Can. On the Welt of the Prouince of Tebeth, bordereth the Prouince of Cainda, fometimes governed by her owne Kings, now by the Gouernours of the Can. By the West you must not underthand that the Countries are in the West, but that wee departing from those parts which are berwint the East and North-east come hither Westward: and therefore reckon them Westward. The people are Idolaters, haue many Cities, the chiefe called by the name of the Prouince, Cainde built in the ertry of the Prouince. There is a greatfalt Lake, in which is store of Pearles, white not round, so abundant, that the price of them would become little worth, if they were fuffered to be carried away at mens pleatures. Whereupon, it is prouided vpon payne of death, that none flould prefume to fish for Pearle in this Lake, without the licence of great Con. There is also a Mountaine in which is found a Minerall of Turkesse Rones, confined to the like To licence. Many Gadderi are also in this Prouince, which yeeld Muske. That Lake also which Gadderis ingendreth Pearle in such plentie, aboundeth with Fishes: and the whole Countrey is full of wilde Beaits, that is to fay, of Lions , Beares , Stags . Deere, Ounces, Roe-buckes ; and divers kinds of Birds. Cloues are found there in great plentie, which are gathered from small Trees, Cloues. which have boughs and leaves like the Bay-tree, but somewhat longer and straighter, white Howers and little, as are the Cloues, and when they are ripe they are blacke and duskie. Gin-Ginger, Cinager, Curamon, and divers other Spices grow there in great plentie, which are not brought vnto mon. our Countries. Wine groweth not in it , but in flead thereof they make excellent Drinke of Corne, Rice, and divers other Spices. The Inhabitants of this Countrey worship Idols, by which The Inhabithey are so besorted, that they thinke they deserve their favour, if they prostitute their wives, tants are idea 20 filters, and daughters to be abused by Trauellers. For, when any Stranger commeth amongst laters and them, every housholder feeketh to give him entertainment, and goe their way, leaving the femals and house to the Strangers will, and returne not vntill they depart. And the women presently hane vo tome tigne till he be gone, that when the Matter of the familie returneth, he may know he is there (bill, and goe away againe, flaying without till he be departed: which hee doth for the glorie of his Icols, hoping they will be more gracious voto him. Certaine twigs of Gold are their money, ving weights, and according to the weight of the twig is the value of the money. And this money is the greater money without flampe. They have also a leffer, which they make after this manner. They boyle Salt in a Caldron an houres space, of which being congea. Money of Sala led, they make little lumps like two-pennie loaues, which being made folid, is figned with the 30 Princes Stampe, and make great profit thereof in lauage places, remote from Cities which haue ftore of Muske and Gold, and want Chapmen. In the day time they vie to lie hid, by reason of the heat, in holes, out of the which they goe by night to seeke their prey, and denoure what focuer they get, Lions, Wolues, or others : and then goe to feeke water, leauing fuch a tract with their weight in the fands, as if some piece of timber had beene drawne there. They yie long Stirrups as the Frenchmen; which the Tartars and other Nations for their shooting vie short, because when they shoot, they rise up. Going from the Prouince Carazan, after fine dayes journey Westward, is the Prouince Caradandan, which also is subject to great Can. The chiefe Citie thereof is called Vociom. The Inhabitants thereof vie Porcelanes and weighed pieces of Gold in thead of money: for in that Countrey, and many other lying round about, Siluer mines are not found, and they give one ounce of Gold for five ounces of Silver, and great gayne is made by the change. The men and women of that Countrey couer their teeth with thinne plates of Gold , which they fo fit vinto Golden coues them, that the teeth themselues seeme (as it were) to be set in the plates. The men about their armes and legs make lifts, pricking the places with Needles, and putting thereon a blacke indelible tincture. And these lists or markes are esteemed with them a great galantrie. They give their minds to nothing but riding, hunting, hawking, and exercises of Armes, leaving the houfhold cares to the women, who are he ped therein by flaues which they buy or take in Warre, When a woman is brought to bed flee iorfakes the bed, washeth the shild and dreffeth it, and * Strato in his then the husband * lieth downe and keepes the child with him fortie dayes, not fuffering it to depart : is vilited meane while of friends an neighbours, to cheare and comfort him. The woman lookes to the house, carrie the husband his brothis to his bed, and gives fucke to the child by done with the him. Their Wine is made of Rice and Spice, their meat Rice, and raw flesh dressed, as is before Spaniards in mentioned. In this Province there are no other Idols, take that every familie adoreth the oldeft man in the honfe, of whom they fay come themselves and all they have. They dwell for the most part, in wilde and mountainous places. But Forrainers come not to those Mountaines, because the ayre would kill them, being in Summer very corrupt. Then leaving the dance, they confilt with him that is poll flor, for what cause that disease hapned vnto him, and what is to be done for his reconerie. The Deuill answereth by him, because he hath done this or that, or because he hath offended this or that God : therefore, he fell into this difease. Then the Magicians intreat that God to pardon him that offence, promising, that if the ficke partie recouer, he shall offer a Sacrifice of his owne bloud. But if the Deuill thinke the weake partie to be ticke of fuch a difeate that he cannot be freed from the fame, he yeeh to answere: This man hath so grieuously offended that God, that he cannot by any facrifices bee appealed. But if he thinke he shall recouer, he commandeth to offer so many Rammes having blacke heads, and to prepare fo many Magicians with their wines, by them to offer Sacrifices, and that God may then bee appealed towards him. Which being heard, his kinfmen quickly cause those things to be done which the Denill commanded: they kill Rammes, and sprinckle their bloud in the ayre, and the Magicians affembled with their Witches, light great Candles, 60 and perfume the whole house with incense, making fume of Lignum Aloes, and sprinckle the broth of the flesh in the ayre, together with the potion made of spices : all which being duely performed, they skip about againe in a dance in honour of that Idoll, which is supposed to have beene favourable to the ficke, finging, and making an horrible novie with their voyces. But if he answer, that he is satisfied, they fit downe at the Table, and eate the fielh offered to the Idoll with great ioy, and drinke the confections. And dinner being ended, and the Magicians payed, every one returneth to his owne home. And when the ficke hath thus escaped the disease. through the prouidence of God, and hath beene restored to health, they attribute it to the Idoll whom they facrificed. But if he die, then they fay, the Idoll was defrauded, and that forme of the Sacrificers tasted thereof first. This is not done to all but to the Richer, the Deuill deluding their blindnesse.

Of the Province of Mich and Bengala, how they were conquered to the Can: Of Cangigu, Amu, Tholoman, Cintigui, and some other parts of Cataio. And of the Conquest of Mangi.

No Dom. 1272: the Great Can fent an Armie into the Kingdome of Vociam, and Carazan to guard it, to the number of twelve thousand expert warriors, vnder the conduct of Neftardin a wife Captaine. As foone as the King of Mien, and the King of Bengala heard of their comming, affembling their forces, they iny ned Horseand Foot together, about three core thousand, and about a thousand Elephants bearing Castles, and in every Callle twelve or fixteene armed men were placed. of the battaile, all the Tartars purposely shot a multitude of Arrowes against the Elephants, which not able to indure the ftrokes of the Arrowes, speedily betooke themselues to flight, and with swift course went all vnto the next Wood, and brake their Caffles, and ouer-threw the armed men fitting in them, which the Tartars feeing , runne vnto their Horses , and getting vp vpon them, furiously fall vpon the Kings Armie with great violence : and many of either Armie fell, at length the King of Mien being put to flight, left the victorie to the Tartars, who haften to the Wood, and taking many Captiues, vied their helpe to take two hundred of thefe Elephants, And euer fince Great Can hath vied Elephants in his Armies which before hee had 40 not accustomed. Hereupon also he vanquished the Countries of the King of Mien and Bengala, and tubiected them to his Empire.

Departing from the Prouince of Cardandan, is a great descent, which continueth two dayes and a halfe, nor is there any habitation there, but a very large Playne, in the which, three dayes Market in a In the weeke many men meete together for Trading. Many descend from the great Mountaines dishabited of that Countrey, bringing gold with them to change for filter, to wit, giving one ounce of gold Playne. for fine ounces of filuer: whereupon, many Merchants from forraine Nations come thither, who bringing filuer carrie away gold, and bring thither merchandifes to fell to those people. For to uer. those high Mountaines, in which, they who gather gold in that Countrey, dwell, no flranger can come, feeing the way is vnpaffable and intricate. When you are past that Playne, going to-50 ward the South, Mien bordereth vpon India, and the way lyeth fifteene dayes journey in places not inhabited and wooddy, in which innumerable Elephants, Vnicornes, and other wild Vnicornes or beafts wander.

After that fifteene dayes is found Mien, a great and noble Citie, the head of the Kingdome, Mien, and subject to Great Can. The Inhabitants thereof haue a peculiar language, and are Idolaters. In this Citie there was a King, who being readie to die, commanded that neere to his Sepulchre, there should be made two Towres in Pyramide fashion, one at the head, the other at the feete, both of Marble, of the heigth of ten fathom. On the top was a round Ball. He caused one to bee covered all over with gold a finger thicke, and the other with filter. And vpon the top round about the Balls, many little golden and filuer Bells were hanged, which at the blowing of the 60 winde gaue a certaine found. The Moniment or Sepulchre was also couered with Plates, partly of gold, partly of filter. He commanded this to be made in honor of his Soule, and that his memorie should never decay among men. And when Great (an minded to subdue this Citie , hee fent a valiant Captaine, and the greatest part of his Armie were Iesters, of which his Court is alway furnished. These winning the Citie, would not violate that Moniment without the Cans

The Prouince Bengala bordereth upon India toward the South, which Great Can fubdued when Marco Polo lived in his Court. The Countrey hath a proper King, and peculiar language. The Inhabitants thereof are all Idolaters: they have Maiters which keepe Schooles and teach Idolatries and Inchantments; a thing common to all the great Men of that Country, They eate Fiesh, Rice and Milke : they have Cotton in great plentie, and by reason thereof, much and great trading is exercised there: they abound also with Spike, Galang:l, Ginger, Sugar, and diuerso-

Many Eunuches are made in this Prouince, which are afterwards fold vnto Merchants. This Province continueth thirtie dayes journey, in the end whereof going Eastward is the Pro-Cangigue hach his proper King and peculiar language. The Inhabitants thereof worship Idols.

Cangiga. Cangiga hath his proper King and pecur aringuage. Lie Himaniana which Much gold is The Kingsmin and are Tributaries to Great Can. Their King hath about three hundredt Wises. Much gold is the Canada of found in this Prouince, and many Spices, but they cannot easily be transported, seeing that countrev is farre distant from the Sea. There are also many Elephants in it, and much game of many wild Beafts. The Inhabitants thereof line with Flesh, Milke and Rice. They want Wine, but they make good drinke of Rice and Spices. Aswell the Men as the Women vie to embroider their 20 Faces, Necks, Hands, Bellies and Legs, making the Images of Lions, Dragons and Birds, and fo firmely imprint them that they cannot easily bee put out : and the more such Images any one hath, by so much is hee esteemed themore gallant. And there be Professors of this foolish Art of flesh embroiderie, which vse no other Trade but this Needle-worke, and dying of Fooles-skinnes.

Amu is an Eafterly Prouince subject to Great Can, whose Inhabitants worship Idols, and haue a peculiar language. They abound with Herds of Cattell, and haue plentie of Victuals, and many Horses and those excellent, which Merchants bring into India. They have also many Buffes and Oxen, because there are delicate Pastures there. As well Men as Women, weare bracelets of gold and filuer of great value on their armes, also the like on their legs : but those of the Women are of most value. From Amu to Cangiguare fine and twentie dayes journey.

The Prouince Tholoman is eight dayes journey diffant to the East from Amu, subject vnto 30 Great Can, having a peculiar language, and worshipping Idols. The Men and Women thereof are tall and goodly, of a browne colour. The Countrey is very well inhabited, having many and firong Castles and Cities. The men are exercised in Armes and accustomed to warre. They burne the bodies of their dead, and inclosing the Reliques of their bones in a Cheft, hide them in the Caues of the Mountaines, that they cannot bee touched either of man or beaft. Gold is in great plentie there, and in itead of money they vie Porcelanes brought from India, as also in Cangina

From the Prouince Tholoman, the way leadeth towards the East on a River, by which are many Cities and Cailles, and at the end of twelue dayes you come to the great Citie Cintigui. The 40 Countrey is subject to Great Can, and the Inhabitants thereof are addicted to Idolatrie. Excel-Cloth made of lent Clothes are made in this Countrey of the barkes of Trees, wherewith they are clothed in the Summer. Very many Lions are there, so that for feare of them, none dare sleepe without doores by night. The ships which goe vp and downe the River, for feare of the Lions, are not fashed to the banke. There are great Dogs in the same Countrey, so hardie and strong, that they seare not to adventure on the Lion: And it often hapneth, that two Dogs and one Archer kill a Lion: for the Dogs fet on by the man give the onfet, and the Lions nature is presently to seeke shelter from some Tree, that the Dogs may not come behind him : neither yet will his great heart suffer him to runne from the Dogs, left he should seeme afraid; but he holds his stately pace, the man meanwhile shooting, and the Dogs fastning on his hinder parts, but with such quicknesse, that when 10 the Lion turnes on them they are gone. And then doth this magnanimous Beaft hold on his way againe to feeke fuch Tree fuccour, that with Bitings and Arrowes he fometimes comes fhort, and with expense of bloud dyeth by the way. This Countrey aboundeth with Silke, which by Merchants is carried to divers Provinces by the River. They live on Merchandife, their money is Paper. They are valiant in Armes. At the end of ten dayes is the Citie Sidinfu, and twentie dayes from thence is Gingui, and foure dayes thence is Pazanfu towards the South, and is in Cataio returning by the other fide of the Province. The people are Idolaters and burne their dead. There are also certaine Christians which have a Church : all vnder the Can and vie Paper money. They make Clothes of Gold, and Silke, and Launes very fine. By this Citie (which hath many Cities vnder it) goes a great River which carries store of merchandise to Cambalu, made by many Chan-60 nels to paffe thither. There are great Peaches very good, which weigh two pounds a piece. Fine dayes journey beyond the Citie Ciangla, in Cataio South- Great Peathes ward flandeth another Citie, named Ciengli (in which way are many Cities and Caffles, all lub- cianeli. iect to the Can) through the middeft whereof runneth a great River, very convenient for shipping laden with merchandiles. Six dayes iourney thence to the South (all which way hath great Cities and Caffles of Idolaters) is the noble Kingdome and great Citie Tudinfu, which had his proper King, before it was Tudinfu Subdued to Great Can, Anno 1272. and hath eleven Royall Cities, famous for traffick, subiect to the jurifdiction thereof. It is very delectable for Gardens and Fruits, rich in Silkes. The Can fent to the government hereof one of his Barons, named Lucanfor, with eightie thousand Horse: who rebelled against his Lord, but was shine by a power of one hundred thousand under two other Barons fent against him, and the Countrey reduced to obedience. Seuen dayes off (riding by many Cities and Castles of Idolaters, plentifull of all things) towards the South is the famous Citie, named Singuimatu, vnto the which on the South, a certaine great River runneth, which be- Singui matic ing divided by the Inhabitants of the place into two Rivers, floweth partly to the East towards Caraio, and partly to the West towards Mangi. By these Rivers, innumerable Vessels for muleitude, and incredible for their greatnesse and wealth, bring necessaries to both Provinces. If you goe fixteene dayes journey towards the South from Singuimatu, you still meet with Cities

After that fixteene dayes, you come vnto a great River, named Carameran, which is faid to carameran. flow out of the Kingdome of Vmean or Presbyter John, of the North. It is very deepe, and carrieth Ships of great burthen; it is also flored with Fish, Within one dayes journey of the Sea there are in this River fifteene thousand Saile, each of which carrieth fifteene Horses and twentie Men, befides Victualls and the Mariners. This is the Con: Fleet kept there in readingfie , to 20 carrie an Armie to any of the Ilands in the Sea, if they should rebell; or to any remote Region Neere the banke of the River where these Ships are kept, is Congenza, and over against it Quanza, one a great Citie, the other small. After you are past that River, you enter into the noble Kingdome of Mange. And doe not thinke that wee have handled in order the whole Province of Cataio; yea, I have not spoken of the twentieth part. For, M. Polo passing by the faid Pro-

Whereby it came to passe, that is now called the King as well as the People, loft the vie and exercise of Warre and Armes. All the Cities were compassed with Ditches, a Bow shoot broad, full of Water. Hee held in pay no Horses, because he feared none. And hence it came to passe, that the King giving himselfe to pleasure more then was meete, enjoyed continuall delights. He maintayned about a thousand goodly Laffes, with which he passed his time in pleasure. He nourished Justice, and preserved Peace. No man durst offend his Neighbour, and diffurbe the Peace, for feare of feuere vnpartiall punishment. So that Artificers would often leave their Shops full of Wares open by night, and yet none would prefume to enter into them. Tranailers and strangers most fafely walked day and night, throughout that whole Kingdom, fearing no man. The King himfelte also was pitifull and mercifull towards the Poore, and forfooke not them that were oppressed with necessitie, or pinched with penurie. 50 Besides, euery yeere hee tooke vp twentie thousand young Infants, cast off by their Mothers, which through pouertie were notable to keepe them, which he brought vp, and fet them when they were growne to some Trade, or married the young Men with the Maids which hee had in like fort educated

Cublai Can was of a differing disposition to Fanfur, and delighted onely in Warres and Conquests, and to make himselfe Great; he sent a great Armie leuied of Horse and Foot, and made one, named Chinfan Baian (that is, one hundred eyes) Generall thereof. Hee, therefore comming Chinfan Baian with his Armie and a Fleet to the Prouince of Mangi, first summoned the citie Conganzan to yeeld another Argun obedience to his Emperour .: Who refusing the same, hee departed without any assault given to in the signifithe Citie and required the fame of the fecond Citie; which likewife setiting, he marched forward name. 60 to the third, and fourth, and received the like answere of them all. But he assaulted the next with great courage, and vanquished the same by force, and flue every mothers child therein; which so affrighted and terrified the reft, that they all presently yeelded. It is to be observed, that King Fanfar had beene told by his Diuiners, that his Kingdome should never be taken from him, but by one which had at hundred eyes: which the Queene knew, and therefore was still in hope not to lofe the Citie, how focuer fireightned; thinking it impossible for one man to have an hundred eyes. Organzu is a faire and rich Citie, lituate towards the South-east, and East in the end tiance of the Province of Mangi, (from Cataio, whence the Ambour paffed) where are alway great flore of thips , being leated on the River Caramoran. Great flore of 20 Merchandife is carried thicher. Salt is also made there in great abundance.

Going from Coiganzu, you ride towards the South-east one dayes journey on a stone * Caufie; on both fides whereof are great Fennes with deepe waters, whereon they may palle with thins : neither is there any entrance into Mangi but by thipping (as the Captaine of the Con did) but by this Caufie. At the end of that dayes journey is a Citie called Punghin great and faire. The people make clothes of Gold and of Silke, are Merchants and Idolaters. The Paper money of great Can is received throughout that whole Countrey. It is plentifull of all necesfaries of lite.

To the Citie Caim, is from Panghin one dayes journey South-east, and this is also a famous Citie, abounding with fish, and game, of beasts, and fowle: especially Phesants are found an there, in exceeding great plentie, as great as Peacocks, of which you may have three for one Venetian groat.

Proceeding further hence one dayes journey, you come thorow a well manured and peopled Countrey to the Citie Tingui, which although it be not great, yet hath it exceeding great plentie of victuals. They are Merchants, and very many thips are also there: plentie of beafts and fowles : It is feated to the South-east, and on the left hand towards the East three dayes iourney off is the Ocean: and in the space betweene, are very many Salt pits; and they make great store of Salt. After this, is Gingui a great Citie, whence the Countrey is furnished with Salt, whereof the Can makes great profit, beyond beliefe. They are Idolaters, and have Paper mo-Iangui, Head ney. From Cingui riding towards the South-east, you meet with the noble Citie langui, vinder 50 of 27. Cities, the government whereof are other Cities; feven and twentie in number. And in that Citie refideth one of the twelue Barons which are Governours of Provinces chosen by the great Can. They are Idolaters, and live of Merchandise. They make Armes and Harnalle for warre. And Malter Marco had the fole government thereof by commission of the great Can, three yeeres together in stead of one of those Barons.

Nanghin is a Picuince to the West, one of the greatest and noblest of Mangi, a place of great Merchandise. They are Idolaters, ipend Paper money, have store of beasts and fowle, wille and tame. They make clothes of Gold and Silke, and are rich Merchants, and the Countrey is very commodious to the Can, specially by Customes of Merchandite. There is great plentie of Corne. Stanfu is a noble and great Citie in the Province of Mangi, and hath twelve rich and 60 great Cuties subiect vnto her juridiction. They make great stere of Silkes and cloth of Gold, have plentie of game and fowle, and of all things pertayning to a Citie of note : to firong, that it was three yeeres befieged, and could not be vanquified by the Armie of the Turtars, when the Prouince of Mangi was fublued. For it is compafied on every fiele with Lakes, that there was no way vn:o it, but on the North: fo that thips came and went continually, bringing plentie of victuals: which not a little afflicted great Can. The two brethren Matter Nicolo, and Matter Maffio, then in his Court, hearing hereof, went to him, and offered their feruice to demis certaine Engines after the manner of the Welt, able to thoot a ftone of three hundred weight, thereby to kill men, and ruine houles. The Can appointed them the best Carpenters which were Neftorian Christians, who made three (Mangani) of thole Engines in a floor space, kind of fine which were proued and approued before him, and by thips tent vnto his Armie. Planting them gines. From the Citie Stanfu, to a certaine Citie, named Singui, are numbred fifteene miles South- singui. eaftward, which although it be not great, yet hath it an exceeding multitude of Ships , being teatre woon the greatest River in the world, called Quian, the bredth of which in certaine pla- Quian. ces, con ayneth ten miles, in other eight, and in some fixe. But the length thereof extendeth it illfe aboue an hundred dayes journey from the head to the Sea. Innumerable other Rivers flow into it, which tunne therow divers Regions, and are navigable, and make it fo great; incredible flore of Merchandife is brought by this River. There are also very many other Cities, in 20 number about two hundred, which participate of this River: it floweth through the bounds of fixteene Provinces. The greatest commoditie is Salt, wherewith all the Cities which communicate in these waters are stored. Mafter Marco faw at one time at Singui fine thousand ships. and yet other Civies on that River have more. All those ships are covered, and have but one mail, and one favle, and viually carrie foure thousand, and so vowards, some of them twelve thouland Venetian Cantari. Neither vie cordage of Hempe, except for the mait and layle, but have Canes fifteence paces long, which they rive into thinne parts from one end to the other, and binding the cut pieces together, and wreathing them , make very long ropes, to that fome of them contaying three hundred fathom in length. And those lines are as strong as Hempen. and ferue for halfes and cables to draw their ships up and downe the River, each thip having ten 30 or twelue Hories for that purpole. On that River in many places are rockie hillockes, on which are built Monafteries to their Idols: and all the way are Villages and places inhabited.

Cameni is a little Citie, vpon the forefaid River South-eastward, where every yeere is brought Cameni. ftore of Corne and Rite, carried the most part to Cambalu. For they may passe thither by Lakes Hand-made and Rivers, and by one deepe large hand-made River, which the Can caused to be made for pas- River. fage from one River to another, and from Mangi to Cambala without going to Sea. Which worke is goodly and wonderfull for the fite and length, and more for the profit thereby to the Cities. Hee hath made also great Causies to goe on land by those waters commodiously. In the mids of the laid River is an Iland of a Rocke, on which is erected a great Temple and Monafterie, in which are two hundred Idolatrous Monkes. This is the Mother-temple and Monafte-40 rie of many others.

Cinghianfu is a Citie of Mangi, rich in Merchandise, plentifull of game, of wilde beatls cinebiantu. and fowle, and of victuall. In it are two Churches of Nefforian Christians, built Anno 1274. when the great Can fent Gouernour thither, Marfachis a Nestorian, which built them. From the Citie Cinghianfu, in three dayes journey South-eastward, you find many Cities and Castles all Idolaters, and at last come to the Citie Tingnigui, a great and faire Citie, abounding Tinguigui. with all kinde of victuals. When Chinfam Baian, Generall of the Armie of the Tartars conquered the Province of Mangi, he fent many Christians (called Alani) against this Citie, which was double walled; into the inner they retired; into the other the Alans entred, and found there abundance of Wine, whereofafter a bad journey, they began to drinke fo largely, that they were all drunke: and the Citizens in their fleepe fuddenly falling upon them, flue them all, 50 none escaping. But Baian hearing this, sent another great Armie against those Citizens, which shortly vanquishing the Citie, in reuenge, put them all to the sword, leaving none alive.

The great and excellent Citie Singui, contay neth in circuit twentie miles. Great multitudes Singui. of people are in it: it hath many rich Merchants, and cunning Artificers, and it hath allo very many Phylicians, and Magicians and Wilemen or Philosophers. In the Mountaines of this Citie, Phylicians and Rhubarb and Ginger grow in great plenty. This Citie hath fixteen Cities under the jurification Philosopher. thereof, where much trading is vied, and very many carious Ares are exercised. Very many Silkes are made there. The word Singui, in their language, fignifieth, The Citie of the Earth, as allo they have another Citie, which they call Quinfar, that is to fay, The Citie of Heaven. From Singui one dayes iourney is Vagiu, where is also abundance of Silke, and cunning Artificers with 60 many Merchants.

Oing from Vagin three dayes, continually you find Cities, Caliles, and Villages, well peo-Apled and rich. The People are Idolaters, under the Can: at the end of those dayes you come to Quinfai, which for the excellency hath that name (interpreted Citie of Heaven) for in the World there is not the like, in which are found to many pleafures, that a man would thinke of Heann, O he were in Paradife. In this Citie Mafter Marco Polo hath often beene, and confidered the fame with great diligence, observing the whole state thereof, setting downe the same in his memorials, as here shall be declared briefly. This Citie by common opinion, is an hundred miles in cirneauenty citie on Earth in cuit; for the threets and channels thereof are very wide. There are Market places exceeding grice, & more large. On the one fide a cleere Lake of fresh water, on the other a great River which enters in then meft in- many places, and carries away all the filth of the Citie, and to runneth into that Lake, thence continuing his courie to the Ocean: which caufeth a good ayre, and commodious paffage that heavenly both by land, and by thele channels. There may goe both Carts and Barkes to carrie necessanen in glorie? ries : and the report is , that there are twelve thousand Bridges great and small , and those on the chiefe channels are to high that a ship without her Malt may passe vinder, and about. The fituation. Charjots and Horles. On the other fide the Citie is a Ditch, about fortie miles long, which encloses hit on that fides large and full of water from the River, made by the antient Kings of that Province, both to re-

ceine the overflowings of the water, and to fortifie the Citie: the earth which was taken out the other, with many Bridges trauerling it. And every foure miles is found fuch a Market- 20 place, two miles, as is faid, in compaffe. There is also one large channell, which runnes against the faid threet, behind the Market-places, on the next banke whereof are erected great Store-houses of thone, where the Merchants from India, and other parts lay up their Merchandise.

Ten Market being layd within as a banke or hill encompassing. There are ten chiefe Market-places (belides inplaces. finite others along the streets) which are square, halte a mile in each square. at hand, and commodious to the Market-places. In each of these Market-places is a concourse three dayes in the weeke of perfons betwixt force and fiftie thouland, which bring thither all things that can be defired for mans life, of all beafts of game, and fowles: that Lake veelding fuch commediousnesse to bring them vp, that for a Venetian groat you may have two Geese, and four Duckes for as much. Then follow the Butcher-rowes of Veale, Beefe, Kid, and Lambe, which the great and rich men eat; for the poore eat vncleane meats without respect. There are all forts of herbs and fruits continually, and amongst the rest buge Peares, weighing ten pounds a piece, white within like paste, and very fragrant: Peaches yellow and white very delicate: Grapes grow not there, but are brought from other places dried very good, and Wine alfo, but not to effeemed in those parts, that of Rice and Spices contenting them. Every day from the Ocean is brought up the Riner (which is the space of fine and twentie miles) great quantitie of fish, besides that of the Lake, so much as a man would thinke would never be bought, and yet in a few houres is gone. All those Market-places are encompassed with high houses, and underneath are shops of Artificers, and all fort of Merchandises, Spiceries, Iewels, Pearles, and in some onely Rice-wine. Many ffreets answere one another in the faid Market-places. In some of them are many Baths of cold waters accommodated with attendants of both fexes, a thing which from children they vie themselves vnto. There are chambers also in the faid Baths with 40 hot waters for thrangers which are not accustomed to the cold waters. They wash enery day; neither doe they eat before they have washed. In other streets are mercenarie Profitutes in such number, that I dare not report it : and not

onely neare the Market-places, where they have their places appointed, but thorow all the Citie they stand very pompoutly with great odours, many feruants, and their houses adorned. There are very practike in making iports, and daliances, and fweetest pleasures rauishing (fooles) forth of themselves. In other streets are the Physicians, the Astrologers, they which teach to reade and write, and infinite other Trades, At each end of enery Market-place is a Palace, where Lords and Governours are appointed by the King to determine difficulties which happen betwixt Merchants or others, as also to looke to the Guards on the Bridges, punishing the negli- 10 gent. Alongst the principall Street (whereof wee spake) on both tides are great Palaces with Gardens: and neere them houses of Artificers, and such multitudes of people continually going to and fro, that a man would wonder whence such multitudes should bee prouided of victuals. A faucy Citie. And Mafter Marco learned of an officer of the Cuftome-house in Quinfai, that by reckonings a ppeared the daily expence of Pepper in Quinfai, to be three and fortie Some, and enery Soma is two hundred twentie three pounds. Hence may be ghessed the quantitie of Victuals, Fleili, Wine, Spiceries, were there ipent.

The Inhabitants are Idolaters, fpend Paper money, are white and faire complexion, apparelled for the most part in Silke, which growes in all that Territorie abundantly, besides that which is brought from other places. There are twelve principall mysteries, each of which have 60 one thousand shops; and in each shop or standing, are ten men, fifteene, or twentie at worke, and in some fortie under one Master. The rich Masters doe no worke with their hands, but stand civilly adorned, or rather pompoully, especially their wives, with Iewels invaluable. And although the antient Kings ordayned, that the child should bee of the fathers Trade; yet the rich are permitted not to worke, but to keepe shop, and men working in the same Trade. Their Houses are well ordered, and wrought richly, adorned with Pictures and other stupendious costs. The Natives are peaceable, know not to manage Armes, nor keepe them in their Houses : nor is there ifrife and debate among it them. They make their workes with great finceritie. They loue in fuch amitie, that one Street feemes as one House, without jealousies of their Wives, which they hold in great respect, and it would be reputed great disgrace to speake a dishonest word to a married Woman. They entertayne Merchant-strangers kindly, both in their houses, and with best Great neighadvice for their affaires. But they are loth to fee Souldiers and the Guards of the Grand Can, as bourbood

About the Lake are built faire Buildings and great Palaces of the chiefe men : and Temples of their Idols with Monasteries of many Monkes. In the midit of the Lake are two Ilands, vpon each of which is a Palace with incredible numbers of Roomes; whither they refort vpon occasions of Marriages or other Featts; where Prouisions of Vessels. Naperie, and other things are maintayned in common for such purposes, one hundred sometime accommodated at once in seusrall Roomes. In the Lake alfoare Boates and Barges for pleafure, adorned with faire Seates and Pleafures. Tables, and other prouisions for Bankets, coursed about and plaine, vpon which men if and with Poles to make the Boat goe, the Lake being but shallow, Within they are painted; without, are windowes to open and thut at pleature. Nor can any thing in the World feeme more pleafant then in this Lake to have fuch an object, the Citie fo fully prefenting it felfe to the eye, with so many Temples, Monasteries, Palaces, Gardens with high Trees on the Waters, Barges, People: for their cuitome is to worke one part of the day, and to differ to fome part to this fo-lace with their Friends, or with Women in the Lake; or elfe by Chariots riding thorow the Citie, which is also another of the Quinfay pleasures. For all the streets are paued with stone; Stone wayes as also are all the high Wayes in the Province of Mangi, onely for the Postes is left on the side, a space vnpaued. The principall street of Quinsay is paued ten paces on each hand, and in the midft it is full of Gravell with paffages for the Water, which keepe it alway cleane. On this street are alway innumerable long close Chariots, accommodated with Clothes and Cushions of filke, for fix persons; which solace themselues in the street, or goe to Gardens, and there passe the time in places made by the Gardeners for that purpose, and returne at night in the Gid

In every street are 40 Towres of stone, whither in danger of fire they vie to carrie their goods, their timber houses being much subject to such casualtie.

The Can hath ordayned that on the most part of the Bridges, day and night, there stand under Warders. a couert ten Guardians, fiue by day and fine by night; and in every Guard is a Tabernacle of Wood with a great Bason, whereby they know the houres of the day and night, which at every Clocks. houres end the Warders frike to notifie what houre, one, two, &c. beginning at the Sunne rifing, and then agains at the beginning of the night. When they are well againe, they are compelled to worke. If a fire happen; their from divers places come to quench it, and to carrie the goods into Boats, or the llands, or those Towres : for in the night the Citizens dare not come our, but those who are in danger. When the Can had reduced all Mangi to his obedience, hee divided it (being before but one Nine Vice-Kingdome) into nine parts, and fet a King ouer each, which there administers inflice. Euery royce in Minyeare they give account to the Cans Officers of the revenues, and other accidents: and every third gi. yeere are charged, as all other Officers are. One of these Deputie-Kings is resident at Quinfay, who is Gouernour of aboue one hundred and fortie Cities, all rich and great. Nor may this be a 60 wonder, seeing in Mangi there are twelve thousand Cities, all inhabited with rich and indu- 12000. Cities,

And most part of the Cans Receits are this way expended : and if any Citie rebell, he fuddenly from the next Garrifons rayleth an Armie to reduce or destroy them. There every yeere on certaine Idoll holy-dayes, Fanfur kept his Court and featled his principall Lords, the great Matters, and rich Artificers of Quinfai, ten thousand at a time vnder those Terraces. This dured ten or twelve dayes with incredible magnificence, every guest independing to prefent himselfe in greatest pompe. Behinde this middle-most building was a wall, and going out which divided the Palaces in which was, as it were, a Cloyfter with Pillars, fuftayning the Porch or Terrace round about the Cloytter: wherein were Chambers for the King and Queene curioully wrought. All this was told mee by a rich old Merchant of Quinfas, whiles I was there, one which had beene an inward familiar of King Fanfar, and knew all his life, and had feene that Palace flourishing, into which he would needs bring me. The Viceroy now refides there; and the first Galleries remayne as they were wont, but the Damsells Chambers are ruined; the wall also which encompassed the Woods and Gardens is fallen to the ground, the Beafts and Trees being gone. Here begins the third book Ships of India,

E will now enter into India and begin with their Ships, which are made of Firre and the Zapino Tree, with one deck, on which are twentie Cabbins (or leife, as the Ships are in quantitie) each for one Merchant. They have a good Roother, and foure Masts with foure Sailes, and some two Masts, which they erect or take downeat to pleature. Some greater Ships have thirteene Colis, or divitions, on the infide made with boards inchased, that if by blow of a Whale or touch on a Rocke water gets in , it can goe no further then that division a which being found is soone mended. They are all double, that is, have two course of boards one within the other, and are well calked with Ocam, and navled with Iron. but not pitched (for they have no Pitch) but anointed with the Oile of a certayne Tree mixed with Lime and Hemo beaten small, faster then Pitch or Lime, The greater ships have three hundred Mariners, others two hundred, one hundred and fittle, as they are in higheffe, and from five to fix thousand bags of Pepper. And they were wont to be greater then now they are: the Sea having broken into Ports and Ilands, that the defect of water, in some places, causeth them to build leffe. They vie also Oares in these Ships, foure mente an Oare; and the greater Ships 20 haue with them two or three ships lesse, able to carry a thousand bags of Pepper, having sixtie or more Mariners, which leffe thips ferue fometimes to tow the greater. They have also with them ten small Boats for fishing and other services, fastned to the sides of the greater ships, and let downe when they please to vie them. Also they fleath their ships after a yeares viage, so that then they have three course of boards; yea proceed on in this manner fometimes till there bee fix courses, after which they breake them vp. Hauing spoken of the ships, we will speake of India, and first of certayne Ilands.

These Oyfters are found all Aprill, and till the midst of May, and not else: in September they finde them in a place about three hundred miles off, and till the midft of October. The King goeth as naked as the rest, saue that he weareth some honorable Ensignes, as a Coller of precious siones about his necke, and a threed of Silke to his breaft with one hundred and four faire Pearles (as Beads) to number his Prayers, of which he must daily say so many to his Idols: like Bracelets he weareth on three places of his armes, and likewife on his legs; and on his fingers also and toes. The so prayers which he fayth are Pacauca, pacauca, pacauca, one hundred and foure times. This King hath one thousand women, and if any please his sense he takes her; as one he did from his brother, whence warres had followed, but the mother threatning to cut off her breafts which had nourished them, if they proceeded, flayed the broyle. It is very hote, and they have no raine but in 20 June, July, and August, without which refreshing of the Ayre they could not line. They have many Phyliognomers and Sooth-fayers, which observe beafts and Birds, and have an valuckie Boyes put to houre every day of the weeke, called Choiach, as on Munday betwixt two and three, on Tuefday, the third houre, on Wednelday the ninth, &c. thorow all the yeare fet downe in their Bookes. They curiously observe Nativities: at thirteene yeares old they put the Boyes to get their owne liuings, which runne vp and down to buy and fell, having a little stocke given them to begin; and in Pearle-feafon they buy a few Pearles, and fell them agains to the Merchants, which cannot well endure the Sunne for little gaine. What they get they bring to their Mothers to dreffe for them, but may not eate at their Fathers coft. They have Idols Males and Females, to which they offer their Daughters, which when the Their Idols & 30 Monkes (or Priefts) appoint, fing and dance to cheere the Idols; and divers times fet victuals be- Vocaties, fore them faying, that they eat, leaving it the space of a meale, singing the while, and then they fall to eating in deed, after which they returne home. The cause of these solaces is the household quarrels betwixt the God and his Goddeffe, which if they should not thus appeale, they thould lote their bleffing.

Anno 1288. A great Prince having more Rice then roome to lay it in, made bold with Saint Thomas his Church in the roome where Pilgrimes were received, but by a Vision of Saint Thomes in the night was so terrified that he quickly freed the place. The Inhabitants are black, not so borne, but often anount themselves with Seffamine Oyle to obtayne that beautie: they paint the Denill white, and their Idols blacke. In Zeslan I had forgot to tell of a high Mountayne, which none can afcend but by Iron chaines, as I was told, in the top whereof the Saracens fay is Adams Sepulchre, the Idolater fay it is the body of Socomonbarchan the first Idol-founder, fonne to a King of that Hand, which gaue himselfe to a solitarie life on the top of this hill, whence no pleasures nor perswassons could draw him. His Father made an Image after his death to represent him, all of Gold adorned with Gemmes, and commanded all the Handers to worthip it, and hence began Idolatry. Hither they come from farre places in Pilgrimage; and there his haire, teeth, and a dish of his are referred and folemnly shewed. The Saracens say they are of Adam, which report caused the Can, Anno 1281. to fend Ambassadors thither, who obtayned two teeth, and a dish, and some of his haires by grant of the King of Zeilan; which he caused to be received by the whole people of Cambals, without the Citie, and brought to his presence with great honour.

Cael is a great Citie gouerned by Altar, one of the foure Brethren, very rich and a good vier of Merchants : he hath three hundred women. All the people haue a custome to carrie in their mouthes chawing, a leafe called Tembul, with Spices and Lime. Coulam is fine hundred miles North-west from Malabar, they are Idolaters; there are also Christians and lewes which have fpeech by themselues. They have Pepper, Brafill, Indico, Lions all blacke, Parrets of divers forts, all white as Snow, others Azure, others Red, and fome very little: Peacockes and Peac hens much differing from ours, and greater, as are their fruits. They are leacherous, and marrie their fifters and kindred. There are many Aftrologers and Phyficians. In Comare are Anes for great that they feeme men : and here we had fight of the North starre. Dely hath a proper Kine to and Language : the people Idolatrous and have flore of Spices. The shippes of Manes come

Malabar is a Kingdome in the West, in which and in Guzzeras are many Pirats, which come to Sea with aboue one hundred Sails, and rob Merchants. They bring with them their wines and children, and there abide all Summer. In Guzzerat is flore of Cotton the Trees fix fathoms (or paces) high, and dure twentie yeeres; the Cotton of the old Trees is not good to spin, after they are past twelue yeeres old, but for Quiles. There are many " Vnicornes : they have artificiall embroideries. In Canam is store of Frankincense; it is a great Citie, where is great trade for Horles. In Cambaia is much Indico, Buckram, and Cotton. Sermenath is a Kingdome of a pecuthe Rhinocerus: liar language, Idolaters, Merchants, a good people. Chefmacoran is a great Kingdome of Idola- 10 ters and Saracens, the last Province of the greater India towards the Northwest (understand the Author according to his sourney, from China or Mangi by Sea) five hundred miles from which, are faid to be two flands, one of Men, the other of Women, those comming to these and there stave ing March. They are Christians and have low by relati- their Bishop, subiect to the Bishop of Soccotera; they are good Fishers and haue store of Ambar. Soccotera hath an Archbishop, not subject to the Pope, but to one Zatolia which resides in Baldach, who chooseth him. The Soccoteriors are Inchanters and great Witches, as any in the world (howfoeuer excommunicated therefore by their Prelate) and raife Windes to bring backe fuch thips as have wronged them, in despite of all contrarie working.

A thousand miles thence Southward is Magastar, one of the greatest and richest Iles of the World, three thousand miles in circuit, inhabited by Saracens, gouerned by foure old men. The nough to finde People live of merchandife, and fell great store of Elephants teeth. The Currents in these parts and translate are of exceeding force. They tell of Fowles, called Ruch, like an Eagle, but of incomparable greatnesse, able to carrie an Elephant (but I am not able to carrie it.) Zenzibar also is said to bee of great length, &c. there are Elephants, Giraffas, sheepe vnlike to ours: the Men and Women fay fables, as are very deformed. I have heard Mariners and great Pilots of those parts report, and have seene that of Ruch, in their writings, which have compassed the Sea of India, that there are in it twelve thousand and seuen hundred Hands, inhabited or defart. In Indiamaior, which is from Malabar to Chefmacoran are thirteene Kingdomes. India minor is from Ziambi to Murfili, in which are eight 50 11700. Ilands. Kingdomes, besides Ilands many. The second or middle India, is called Abascia. The chiefe King is a Christian; there are fix other Kings, three Christians, and three Saracens, subject to media and mi- him : there are also lewes. Saint Thomas having preached in Nubia, came to Abascia, and there did the like, and after to Malabar. They are great Warriors, alway in Armes against the Soldan of Adem, and the people of Nubia. I heard that An. 1288, the great Abiffine would have visited Ierusalem, but being disswaded by reason of Saracen Kingdomes in the way, he sent a Bithop of holy life to doe his devotions, who in his returne was taken by the Soldan of Adem. and circumcifed by force : whereupon the Abiffine rayled a power, discomfitted the Soldan with two other Mahumetan Kings, tooke and spoyled Adem. Abascia is rich in gold. Ester is subject to Frankincenfe. Adem fortie miles diffant South-east: where is store of white Frankincense very good, which do drops from small Trees by incision of the barke; a rich merchandise, &c. Some in that Countrey for want of Corne make Bisket of Fish, whereof they have great plentie. They also feede their beafts with fifthes. They take them in March, April, and May, &c.

Hauing spoken of the Provinces on the Coast, I will now returne to some Provinces more to

They have no fort of Corne, but live of Flesh and Milke in great peace. They have flore of Horses, Kine, Sheepe, and other beafts. There are found oreat white Brares, twentie palmes long, black Foxes very great, wilde Affes, and little heafts called Rondes which beare the Sable Furres, and Vari arcolini, and those which are called Pharaos rats. which the Tartars are cunning to take. The great Lakes which are frozen except in a few moneths of the yeare, cause that the Summer is scarse to bee travelled for myre. And therefore the Merchants to buy their Furres, for fourteene dayes journey thorow the Delart, haue fet vp for each day a house of Wood, where they abide and barter : and in Winter they vie Sleds without Tragule. wheeles, and plaine in the bottome, rifing with a femi-circle at the top or end, drawne eafily on the Ice by beafts like great Dogs " fix yoked by couples, the Sledman only with his Merchant " Perhaps and Furres fitting therein.

The Tartars oft rob them of their Cattell in those darke moneths. and left they should lose their way, they ride on Mares which have Colts sucking, which they 20 leave with a Guard at the entrance of that Countrey, where the Light beginneth to faile . and when they have taken their prey give reynes to the Mares, which haften to their Colts. In their long continued day of Summer they take many the finest Furres (one occasion of the Tartars going to rob them) of which I have heard some are brought into Russia. Russia is a great Country Russia in that Northerne Darkneffe : the people are Greeke Christians, the Men and Women faire . and pay Tribute to the King of the Tartars of the West, on whom they border on the East. There is flore of Furres, Waxe, and Minerals of filuer. It reacheth, as I was told, to the Ocean Sea : in which are flore of Gerialcons and Falcons.

To the Reader.

N this admirable Voyage of Polo, I confesse, Inopem me copia fecit; the Translation which I had of Master Hakluyts from the corrupted Latine, being leffe then nothing (nimirum damno auctus fui) did me no fleed but lofe, whiles I would compare it with the Latine, and thought to amend it by the Italian; and was forced at last to reiest both Latine and English, and after much vexation to present thee this , as it is , out of Ramulio. I have not given thee word for word as an exact Translator, but the sense in all things substantiall, with longer Relations then I have admitted in others. because many which have read M. Paulus, never saw M. Polo, nor know the worth of the worthiest Voyage, that perhaps any one man hath written; a man credible in that which hee faw himfelfe, in fome things received by Relation, rather telling what he heard, then that which I dare believe and frecially toward the end of his third Booke, which I have therefore more abridged. Pitie it is that time bath fo gnawne and eaten some-where, and some-where denoured otterly many his names and Trasts, which new Lords and new (Lawes, the Saracenicall Conquests, especially ener since his time) in those parts have caused. And farre caster by the Cans greatnesse then, and his employments under him, might bee know the World in those times; then in the combustions long since begunne and still continued, in diversified and quarrelling States is possible : the Saracens quarrelling with Ethnikes, Christians, and other Saracens the Tartars divided and sub-divided into so many quarrelsome Serpentine heads, whereby that bugenesse is broken in pieces; the Chinois and others prohibiting ingresse of strangers, egresse of their ownes, that I mention not Ethnike and Moorish Dissifions amongst themselves. In the same time with Polo, 50 lined this following Armenian, of whom Ramusio relateth, and this Discourse intimateth that the Ho- See Town 1.18. ly Land being quite loft, Pope Clement the Fift minding to reconer it, was given to understand of c.4.5.3. belpes which might be gotten from the Tartars, and withall of this Haiton or Antonie a Kinsman of the King of Armenia, then living a Monke or Frier of the Order Premonstratens in Episcopia in Cyprus; who in his young time had beene exercised in the Warres betwirt the Tartars and Egyptian Soldans, by whom he might receive the best Intelligence of Tartarian Affaires. He therefore (as hee first remoued the Court from Rome to France, where it abode seuentie yeares) caused the said Hayton to be brought from Cyprus to France with all bis Memorials and Writings of that subject, and being comne to Poitiers, caufed one Nicolo di Falcon a Frenchman to write in French, which the other dictated in Armenian, which was done Anno 1307. A Copie of this Storie written aboue two hundred yeares since 60 came to Ramusines hand (whereto I here, that I say not you, are beholden) whence hee tooke that which concerned the Taxars, omitting the rest, or remitting rather his Reader to M. Polo. Betwixt which two some difference may seeme, but so little, that Wisemen need no advertisement thereof. One thing is remarkable, that the Author and the next, who in many Geographicall Notes agrees with Hereof we are the more curious, to give to the more curious a reason of our method in this Worke, who in our former Tome have first encompassed the sheares of Alia from the West to the East: and then in the In-land parts have in the eight and ninth Bookes principally (as Voyages gave leave) viewed Asia without Taurus, and to the South of the Caspian; but this Profound or inner, more unknowne part, we Guruan here where we handle the Voyages and Discourries of those parts of the World, which the Ancients 20 knew very little or not at all. And indeed, how little was Mangi, Cataio, or Tartaria knowne till the Tartars obtruded upon the World, a terrible knowledge of them selues, in manner as Rubruquius and the former Friers, with the fe Gentlemen, Polo and Haiton describe? Tea, how were they by ignorance of following times buried againe, till Portugall, English, and other moderne Voyages banerenined them. as it were in a resurrection? and that often in new names, as if they had suffered that warmili yours, so often here rebearfed, and so much credited in many Religions of those Easterne Asians, whence st comes that they are bardly knowne to be the same. The Reader must pardon me (or go to the Author himselfe) if I have here omitted some pieces of Haiton, which you have bad in Polo and others before, Becially not so pertinent to our present Tartarian subject. The figures note the Chapters, after the Latine, from which Ramufios Dissifton is much dissided, and we therefore from both.

The Kingdome of Cumunia is very great : yet by reason of the diftemperature of the Ayr., Of the Kingit is ill inhabited : for in the Winter season, the cold is so great in some places, that neither dome of Coman nor beaft can any way live therein. And againe in some places, the heate of Summer This extramiis fo great, that none can endure the same, nor the slyes which abound there. This King-tie comes by dome of Cumania, is in a manner all plaine, and there are no Trees, nor any Wood to bee found the long pretherein, vnlesse it be about some Cities, which have certayne Orchards. The people inhabit in sence in Sum-

But beyond and on the other fide of that River, are divers and fundry Nations inhabiting, which are not accounted of the Kingdome of Cumania, and yet are obedient to the King thereof : And some there are which inhabit about the Mountayne Cocas, Cocas or Cast-

6. The Kingdome of India is very long, and fituated on the Ocean Sea, which in those parte is called the Indian Sea. This Kingdome beginneth from the Confines of Persia, and extendeth Note that of by East vinto a Prouince called Balaris, in which are found the precious stones which wee call great, the Sa-Fables, neuer heard of in

Alexander the Balayes. On the North-fide is that long and great Defart of India, where the Emperour Alexander the ander is faid to have found fo many Serpents, and such diversitie of Beafts inhabiting. In that Kingdome it is that Saint Thomas preached the Faith of Christ, and converted many people and gass have many provinces. But because they are so farre distant and remote from other places and parts of Christendome, the Christian Religion is there much diminished, for there is but one Citie that is in- to habited with Chrritians, the rest having wholy forsaken the profession of Christianitie. On but their Inhabitans be all blacke, going altogether naked for heat, and worthip Idols like fooles. In those Ilands are found precious itones, Pearles, and Gold, and fundry Spices, and medicinable drugs helpfull vnto men. There is also a certayne Iland called Celan or Zeilan, knowne in ancient time by the name of Taprobana, in which are found Rubies and Saphires, and the King of that Iland hath the greatest and best Rubie that is any where to be found, which when hee is to be crowned King, he holdeth in his hand riding round about the Citie, and is afterwards obeyed

In Armenia there are many great and very rich Cities, of which Tawie is the chiefe: they haue both Characters of their owne, called the Armenian Letters , and others also which they call Haloen. In Armenia is the highest Hill or Mountayne that is in the World, which is commonly called Arath, or Ararat, and on the top of that Mountayne, the Arke of Noah rested first after the Deluge. And albeit for the abundance of Snow which is alwayes on that Mountayne, both Winter and Summer none is able to goe vp the same, yet is there alwayes seene in the top thereof a certaine blacke thing, which men affirme to be the Arke. 10. Alania, or Albania, from whence the Kingdome of Georgia reacheth West-ward on the Northfide to some Lands of the Kingdome of Turkie; the whole length of this Kingdome of Georgia lying youn the great Sea, and on the South-fide it is confined with Armenia the Great. This Kingdome of Georgia is divided into two Kingdomes, one of which is called by the name of Georgia, and the other knowne by the name of Albeas, or Albease : and they have beene alwaies gouerned by two feuerall Kings. The one of which is subject to the Emperour of Asa: namely, the King of Georgia, But the Kingdome of Albem being mightie in people, and strongly situated and fortified, could never yet either by the Emperours of Afia, or by the Tartarians bee 40 fubdued. In this, Kingdome of Georgia is a maruellous strange Wonder or Miracle, which I durst not have reported or beleeved, if I had not feene it with my eyes. But because I have personally beene there, and beene made the eye witnesse thereof, I say, that in those parts there is a Province or Countrey called Hamfem, being in circuit about three dayes journey, whose whole extent is all covered over with fuch thicke and palpable darknesse, that none can fee any thing therein, neither doe any dare to goe into that Land, because they know not the way out againe. Those that inhabit neere about it, affirme, that they have often heard the found of mens voices crying, of Cockes crowing, and the neighing of Horses in the Wood, and by the course of a Riuer that runneth out from that place, there appeare certaine fignes that there are people inhabiting therein.

TI. The Kingdome of the Chaldeans beginneth on the East-fide from the Mountaynes of Chaldea. Media, and reacheth out vnto Ninine. The Inhabitants of Chaldan are called Nestorians, because they are followers of the Errour of Nestorius, and they have their peculiar Chaldean Characters, others there are amongst them that wie the Arabian Letters, and are of the Sect of the feducer Mahomet.

And whiles these fe- der whom they uen Nations lived voder the subjection of their Neighbours, as is above faid, it happened that a cal Biomis &c. poore old man, being a Smith, faw a Vision in his sleepe; namely, a man armed all in white Armour, and mounted on a white Horse, which calling him by his name, taid voto him, Changing, changing or It is the will and pleasure of the immercall God, that then be Lord and Ruler over these Nations of the Cingis. Mogli, and that by thee they bee delinered from the Dominion of their Neighbours, under which they hane long remarned: and they shall rule oner their Neighbours, and receive Tribute of them to whom they formerly paid Tribute. Changing hearing this Word of God, was replenished with exceeding ioy, and made publikely knowne the Vition which he had feene. But the Rulers and Comman-30 ders would not give credite to the Vision , but rather despised and mocked the old man. But the night following, they themselves saw the same Vision of the Horse-man armed in white, who commanded them from the Immortall God, that they should be obedient to Changing, and canfe all to obey his command. Whereupon, all the faid Chieftaines and Governours of the feuen Nations of the Tartarians, calling the people together made them to yeeld obedience and reuerence to Changins. Then atterwards placing a Chaire for him in the midft of them, and spreading a blacke Felt Carpet on the ground, they fet him thereon, and then the feuen chiefe Rulers lifting him vp, did place him in the Throne, or Chaire of State, with great triumph and acclamation, calling him Can their first Emperour, and doing him solemne reuerence, with bowing their knees as to their Lord and Gouernour.

Now, at this folemnitie of the Tartarians, and at the simplicitie of their blacke Cloth, vied in the creating of their first Emperour, none ought much to wonder, either because hardy they were not then furnished with any fairer (loth of S ate, or elle were fo rule and ignorant at that time, that they knew no better or fairer fashion of State. But at this men might rather maruell, See God to that the Tartarians having fince that, co. quered many Kingdomes, and gotten infinite riches, (and namely, commanding ouer the Dominions and wealth of Afra, even to the winfines of Hungaria) they will not yet leave their ancient and accustomed manner: but at the confirmation of euery Emperour obserue the like order in euery point, whereof I can well be awitnesse, having beene personally prefent at the ceremonic vied at the Confirmation of one of their Em- Hailon, an eyeperours. The first was, That all the Tartarians hould beleene and obey the Immortali God, by whose will hee was promoted to the Imperial Dignitie: which Commandement they objected and from thenceforth vntill this day have ever continued to call on the Immortall God in all their occasions. Secondly, Hee willed that all the men that were able to beare Armes should be numbred, and that ouer euery ten should be one appointed, and ouer euery ten thousand a great Commander, and that also ouer every thousand should bee a Colonell or Conducter of a Regiment. and he called an Armie of ten thousand Souldiers, a Regiment, He commanded also the seven Rulers over the Nations of the Tartarians, that they should forthwith dismisse themselves of their 50 former dignities: which they relinquished immediativ. But another of his Ordinances was very flrange and admirable, in which he commanded those feuen chiefe Rulers to bring every of them his eldeft fonne, and each with his owne hand to cut off his head. Which Commandement appearing to bee most crueil and valuel, yet was there none that would any way gainfay

Wherear they being all aftonithe exceedingly, and rendring thankes to the Immortall God most denoutly, they passed on lous way. the way which they faw before them, and directed their steps towards the Weft. Hoccota Can, who succeeded in the Empire, was a man of much valour and wisedome, gull. sup. pay. 556 which made him very well beloued of the Tartarians, who were alwaies faithfull and obedient Of Hocesta Can vnto him. Hee therefore bethought himselfe in what manner be might best subdue all Afe, and the second thought good to make triall first of the mightiest Prince therein before he attemped it himfelfe in person. On that enterprise therefore he sent forth ten thousand Horse-men under the conduct of a wife and valiant Leader, called Gebefabada, and commanded him to feeke out divers Kingdomes and States, and when hee met with an Aduersarie too mightie for him, to returne. Hee marched on, and tooke divers Castles and Townes, and cruelly vied those which hee vanquished

Thus hee proceeded to the Iron Gate which Alexender built at the foot of Cochas, and razed it, left it might hinder his returne. Twentes the Prince of Georgia came out against him, and in a Plaine, called Mogram, they fought, but the Tarters ouercame; and proceeded to Arfeor a Citie of the Solden of Turke, who was fo well prouided to entertayne him, that Gebelabada feeing his forces decayed, returned to Hoccota Can, then in Gebelabada. Hoccoia Can made choise of another skilfull and valiant Captaine, called Baydo, to whom he gave thirtie thouland Tartarian Souldiers, termed

50 Tamachs, or Conquerours, and commanded them to fet forward the very same way that the other ten thousand went before, and not to make flay in any place till they came to the Kingdome of Turkie, and to trie whether they could withftand the Solder of Turkie, which was held the mightieft of all the Princes in Asia. And if haply they found him so strong that they were not able to encounter him, they should then forbeare to fight with him, and make choise of fome place where they might reft themselves till they had received supplie of further aide from some of his sonnes which should bee neerest vinto them, and that afterwards they might with more fafety fet vpon him. Baydo accordingly with his thirtie thouland Tartarians came to the Kingdome of Turkie; and there hee underflood that the Solden which had discomfitted the first Tartarians was dead, and that his fonne Guiatadin succeeded him. And this man hearing of the

And after a little time Hocora Can dyed , and a sonne of his succeeded in the Empire, called Gino Can, whose life was but short and after him succeeded a Kinsman of his called Mange Can, who was of very great power and felbased many Prouinces, and at length with a great purst he went into the Caibayan Sea to take a certaine Iland, which whiles he held befreeed, the thesewo, 1. de Inhabitants of those parts being very fubtile and ingenious, sent certaine Diners secretly under water, who continued fo long under the Ship, in which bee was, until they had made many to holes therein, fo chatche water came into it (no man obseruing nor stopping the leake) vntill the Ship funke, and Mango Can was drowned therein. Whereupon the refidue of the Tarrarians returned home and chose his brother, called Cobile Can, for their Emperour, who raigned ouer them two and fortie yeeres, became a Christian, and founded a certaine Citie, called Ions, in the Kingdome of Cathan, which is reported to be greater then Rome; and in that Citie he dwel-Cabila, or Cubia led untill his dying day. Afterwards the Tartarians went towards the parts of tioned by Plus Germanie . till they came to a certaine River that runneth through the Dukedome of Auftria: where they thought to have passed over a Bridge which they found there. But Frederick the Now Musicouis. Duke of Austria, and others, that bordered neere it, had fortified the Bridge to that the Tartaria ans were denyed passage. Baydo thereupon, incensed with furie, commanded that all should paffe through the water, and himfelfe was the first that entred, exposing thereby himfelfe and His drowning all his followers to apparant danger of death: for fuch was the breadth of the River and the violence of the streame, that their Horses were wearied before they could come to the farther banke 40 of the River. 31. Whiles Haoloon was butie in the warre with Barcat, as hath beene faid, the Soldan of Egypt affembling his Armie came to the Province of Paleftina, and in a place called Hamalech ginft Guiboga, he soyned battaile with Guiboga and his Tartars, where Guiboga was flaine, and his Armie defeated. The Tartare which escaped went into Armenia, and by this meanes the Kingdome of Saria was wholly libdued by the Saracens, fauing certayne Cities of the Christians, which were feated neere the Sea. When Halson vn.derthood how the Soldan of Egypt had inuaded Stria. Hastone press. 32. Abaga was wife and gouerned prosperously in all things, two only excepted, one that he would not be a Christian, as his Father had beene, but worshipped Idols, beleeuing the Idolatrous Priests. The other, that he was alwayes in warres with his Neighbours, by reason wherof the Soldan was long in quiet, and the power of the Saracens much increased. Those Tartars (or rather Turks) which could escape from out the Dominion of the Tartars, fled vnto the Soldan, feeking to avoid the heavie burthens which the Tartars imposed on them. And the Soldan dealt politikely, for he fent Messengers by Sea to the Tartars, in the Kingdomes of Camania, and 20 Ruffia, and made composition and agreement with them, that when seeuer Abaga should moone warre against the Land of Egypt, then they should inuade his Countrey, for which he promised them great gifts, by meanes whereof Abaga could not well inuade the Land of Egypt, but the Soldan could eatily without reliftance inuade the Christians in the parts of Syria, infomuch, that the Christians lost the Citie of Antioch, and divers other places of strength, which they held in 33. So that the Saracens thereby wasted and spoyled all the Kingdome of Armenia, and carryed infinite riches thence to the great damage of the Christians, whereby the Enemies power was much encreased, and the Kingdome of Armenia wondrously weakned. The King whose endeauour was wholly bent about the destruction of the Insidels, having heard this most valiappie newes of his owne Countrey, busied his thoughts night and day how to afflict the Saracens, and oft-times very earneftly dealt with Abaga , and his Tartars to attempt He concludes the overthrow of faithleffe Mahomet, and the reliefe of the Christians. The 40 King of Armenia leeing that hee could not have any present ayde of the Tartarians, fent and made truce by his Meffengers with the Solder of Egypt, that he might redeeme his Sonne which was Prifoner. The Soldan also promised him that if he restored him a friend of his called Angoldscar whom the Tartars held captine, and yeelded up the Cattle Tempfach , and some holds of the Citie of Halappi, which he had gotten in the time of Haoloon, hee would let his Sonne at libertie. This King of Armenia Linone was wife, and gouerned his Kingdom providently, and being much beloued by his owne People, and by the Tartars, he laboured earnestly to destroy the Saracens, lo that in his time Abaga made peace with al his neighbors, who of long time had been his enemics. Then the Soldan of Egypt entred the Kingdome of Twkie, and flue many of the Tartars, and draue them out of many Townes. Abaga hearing thereof, posted thather so speedily, that in fifteenedayes hee rode 50 the Kingdome fortie dayes journey. The Soldan hearing of his comming departed fuddenly, not daring to make any longer abode. Yet could not fo speedily withdraw himselfe, but that the Tartars tollowing fwiftly, ouertooke the rereward of his Armie in the entrie of the Kingdome of Egipt, in a place called Pafblanke. There the Tartarians tulking on them, tooke two thouland Honeman of

Abaga being come to the Confines of Egypt, was perswaded to goe no farther for heat : for that Land is very hote, and his Tartars, and their beafts having come speedily from farre, could hardly have indured it, by reason whereof hee returned into Turkie, and spoiled and wasted all the Countries that had rebelled, and yeelded to the Soldan. But he caused the Traytor Parnana with his partakers to be cut afunder in the midth, after the Tartarian manner, and part of his flesh to caten. be ferued in all his meats, whereof he and his Captaines did eat. The Soldan, called Melechnafer, who had long before some intelligence of the comming Melechnafer

40 of the Tartars, affembled all his power, and came before the Citie of Aman, which is feated in the Soldan, the middelt of the Kingdome of Syria. Calan understanding that the Soldan meant to give him battaile, forbore to befrege any Citie or Caille, but hasted speedily to the place where the Soldan was, and pitched his Tents but one dayes journey from him in certaine Meadowes, where was plentie of forrage and feeding, where he rested his Followers and their Horses which were wearied with their trauell. Amongst whom was a Saracen, called Calphack (or Capchick) who had calphacks douferued the Soldan, and was fled from him to Cafan, for feare of imprisonment and punishments ble dealing. for his miffe-demerits. This Calphack had received fundrie favours and rewards of Casan, who reposed great confidence in him : yet, like a wicked Traytor, he disclosed the counsaile and purpole of Cafan to the Soldan and Saracens, acquainting them by Letters how Cafan meant to

50 abide in those Meadowes, vntill they had sufficiently rested their Horses which were wondrously wearied, and therefore counfailed the Soldan to fet upon him before his Horfes were refreshed, whereby he might eafily ouer-come the Tartarians.

The Soldan who thought to have expected the Tartars at the Citie of Aman, did hereupon The Soldans change his resolution, and with a chosen companie hasted with all speede to assaile Casan at vn- sudden on-set, awares. But his Espials and Scouts giving him notice of their approach. Cofan commanded his men prefently to be let in order and mantully to relift them. He himfelfe more bold then a Lion with such companie as hee had about him, rode to meete the Saracens, who had approached fo neere that they could not avoid the battaile. Cafan feeing that the relidue of his companie were fored so farre abroad in the Countrie for the feeding of their Horses, that they could not sudden. He dealth po-60 ly come to him, he commanded those that were with him to dismount from their Horses, and linkely.

by the rest following on with great furie, and finding the former overthrowne, fell themselves head-long over them : infomuch, that of all the Saracons there escaped few, which were not either ouerthrowne or elfe wounded to death, with the Arrowes of the Tartars.

The Soldan himselfe being in the Armie, fled as fast as hee could, which Cafin perceiuing, made his men get vp on their Horfes, and manfully to fet on their Enemies, being himfelfe the forem of among ft them that entred the Armie of the Soldan, who with fome small companie remayning fo long, fuftayned the brunt, vntill the Tartars came in Troupes well ordered to fight. and the 1 came the whole Armie on both fides to battaile, which endured from the Sunne riling He outs-com- till the Ninth houre. But in the end, the Soldan with his Saracens fled, being not able to withstand the courage of Calan, who did wonders with his owne hand, and pursued them with his 10 people, killing on every fide vntill it was darke night, and made fo great flaughter of the Saracens, that the Earth was couered every where with their dead carkaffes. That night Cafar refled at a place, called Caneto, rejoycing exceedingly at that great victorie which God had given him against the Saracens. This fell out in the yeare of our Lord 1301. on the Wedneday before the Feast of the Natiuitie. 42. Then Cafan fent the King of Armenia, and a Leader of the Tartars, called Molar, with fortie thouland Horfe, to pursue the Soldan as farreas the Delart of Egypt, being twelve dayes iourney diffant from the place where the battaile was fought, and willed them to expect him or fome Messenger from him at the Citie Gazara. And they departed speedily before the Sunne rifing, to follow after the S Idan. But some three dayes after, Casan sent for the King of Arme- 20 nia to returne, because he purposed to besiege the Citie of Damascus, and willed Molay with the fortie thousand Tartars to pursue with speede after the Saracens, and to put what hee could take to the fivord. Yet the Soldan himselfe flying very swittly, and riding on Dromedaries both night Beduines are and day, in the conduct and companie of certaine Bedains, escaped into the Citie of Babylon very strangely. But others of the Saracem fled severall wayes, as they thought they could best save themselues, and a great number of them going by the way of Tripolis, were slaine by the Chriflians, which inhabited the Mountayne of Libanus. The King of Armenia returning to Cafan, found that the Citie of Aman had yeelded vnto him, so that the whole treasure of the Soldan, and his Armie was brought into his presence: which was so great that every one marvailed, why the Soldan carried fo much treasure with him when he went to fight. Casan, when he had gathered together all the riches and spoiles which they had gotten, bestowed them bountifully a- 30 mongit the Tartars, and the Christians his followers, whereby they were all made rich.

And I Friar Haython, the Compiler of this Hiftorie, who was present in all Expeditions and

Battailes, which the Tartars had with the Soldan, from the time of Haloon to this day, yet did I neuer see nor heare that any of the Tartarian Lords accomplished more in two dayes then did Casan. For the first day, with a small companie of his owne, he ouer-came a great Armie of his Enemies, and did fuch exploits in his Perfon, that he wanne fame and commendations about all the rest. On the second day, such was his largesse, and so great this liberalitie of his heart, that of all the infinite wealth and treasure which hee got, hee kept nothing for himselfe, but a Sword and a Purse, in which was contayned certaine writings concerning the Land of Egypt, and the number of the Soldens Armie. And this was most maruailous about all the rest, how in so little Calans dwarfish a body, and of so bad presence (for he seemed like a Monster) there could be so much vertue and flature and ill- rigour contayned : for among neere two hundred thousand Souldiers, there could hardly one of fauoured tea- lesse flature, or of worse aspect be found. Therefore, because this Casan lived in our time, it is fitting wee made the more ample narration of his Acts. And in regard that the Soldan who was ouerthrowne by Casan, is yet living at the writing of this Historie, they which intend to destroy, or any wayes to endamage the Saracens, may receive many advertisements out of these

> After some few dayes rest, Casan directed his course towards the Citie of Damascus: where the Citizens hearing of his approch, and fearing left if hee tooke them by force, they should die without mercy, by the aduice of the wifest amongst them, fent with one consent their Messengers vnto him with offer of their Citie, which hee willingly accepted, and after a while rode towards the River of Damascus, on whose Bankes hee pitched his Tents, forbidding any damage to bee done to the Citie. Then the Citizens fent him divers gifts, and plentie of victuals for his Armie. There Cafan made his abode fine and fortie dayes with all his Followers, except those fortie thousand Tartars which were fent with Molay, who stayed his comming at the Citie of Gaccara.

> 43 While Cafan reposed himselfe neere Damasco, there came newes vnto him, how a Kinsman of his called Baydo, had entred into the Kingdome of Perfia, and committed great spoile there in his absence : and thereupon hee resolued to returne to his owne. Leauing therefore his 60 chiefe Captaine Cotolufa, with part of his Armie for the cultodie of the Kingdome of Syria (whom hee willed Molay and the rest of the Tartars to be obedient vnto as to his Lieutenant) he fet Rulers and Gouernours over all the Cities , and committed the government of Damalcus to the Traytor Calfach, being not yet acquainted with his tray erous disposition. Then calling to him the King of Armenia, and acquainting him with his purpole, hee told him that hee would willingly have delivered the Lands which hee had conquered into the Christians hands, if they had come to him, and that if they came hee would give order to Cotolnia to reflore them the Lands which they had formerly helden; and to yeeld them convenient supply for the repayring of their Castles and Fortresses. These things thus ordered, Casan tooke his iourney towards Mesopotamia, but when hee came to the River Emphrates, hee fent word to Cotolusa, that leaving twentie thousand Tastars under the command of Molay, hee should come speedily to him with the rest of the Armie. Cotolusa did as was commanded him, fo that Molay remayned Lieutenant in Syria for Cafan, who eft-soones by perswasion of the cassassis wes-

But in the Sommer time , Caffach (who had formerly hatched Treason in his heart against Cafan, fent word fecretly to the Soldan, that hee would reftore him Damafens with the other Townes which Cafar had taken. The Soldan liked hereof, and couenanted to give him Danufco in perpetuall keeping, and part of his treasure with his sister to wite. Infomuch, that shortly after, Calfach became Rebell, and caused all the strong places to rebell against the Tartars, bearing themselues bold on the heate of Sommer, in which they knew the Tartare could not ride nor yeeld any aide vnto their frie ds. When Molay perceined that they rebelled every where, hee durit not stay any longer with so small a companie, but tooke the shorter way 20 towards the Kingdome of Mesopotamia, and signified thence to Casan all that had hapned in the Kingdome of Syria. Who feeing hee could not any way redreffe it at that feafon, by reafon of heate, yet when the Winter approached, hee made very great preparation on the bankes of the River Euphrates, and fent over Cotolufa before with thirtie thousand Tartarian Horse-men, directing him that when hee came to the parts of Antiochia, hee should call vnto him the King of Armenia, and the other Christians of the East, and of Cyprus, and with that ftrength should enter into the Kingdome of Syria, whiles hee prepared to come after with the strength of his Armie. Cotolufa did as hee was commanded, and with his thirtie thou-

who came vnto him with his Armie. The Christians also in the Kingdome of Ciprus having 30 heard of the comming of Cololufa, came speedily with their Gallies and other Vessels to the Ile called Anternda, among whom was the Lord Tyron brother to the King of Cyprus, Mafter Tyron. of the Holpitall of the Temple, with their Brethren of their Societie. And thele being all readie to vnder-goe the seruice of Christ, there came a sumour that Casan was dangerously sicke, that men dispayred of his recourrie. Whereupon Cotolusa with his Tartars returning towards Casan; the King of Armenia returned also into his Countrey; and the Christians at the Ile of Anterada to the Kingdome of Coprus, by which meanes the businesse of the Holy Land was vt-

But of Syria. the Saracens fearing the comming of Casan, and doubting that they should not be able to withstand him when they had reaped and gathered their Corne and other fruits of the Earth, and had housed their cattell in strong holds, they set fire on the rest, that the Tartars when they came The Saracen might not find victuals for themselues, nor for forrage for their beasts. When Casan understood burne and what the Agarens had done, and how they had waited all the Land, confidering that his hor- waste their fes could not there be fed nor fuftayned, he refolued to remayne that Winter you the bankes of trey. the River Empirates, and to beginne his Journey at the beginning of the Spring, when the graffe began to sproute. For the Tartars are ever more carefull of their Horses then of themselves, being contented with the smallest pittance of any kind of nourshment for thems: lues,

Then Casan sent for the King of Armenia, who came to him without delay, and lodged 50 himselfe on the River. Cafan extended three dayes Tourney in length even from a certayne Cafile called Cacabe, to another Caffle called Bir, which Caffles appertayned to the Saracens , yet Cictabe, yeelded without any affault vnto Cafan. But while Cafan abode there, expecting the conue- sir. nient feafon for effecting his desire on the Saracens, and to deliver the Holy Land out of their hands, the Deuil caft a new Obstacle in his way, for he had newes againe that Baydo ha lentred, Bydorch: and made more spoyles on his Land then before; so that it was necessary for him to returne to agains, his owne, whereat being much grieued, in respect that he was constrayned so long to de'ay the businesse of the Holy Land, he commanded his Captayne Cotolusa with fortie thousand Tartars Cotolus de to enter into the Kingdome of Syria, and to take Damafee, and kill all the Saracens; and that the man the King of Armenia should in one his people with Cotolufa. Cafan then returned into Perfia, L. mennix

Thence they went to the Citie of Damafens to befiege it, but the Citizens fent their Meffengers, defiring a Truce for three daves which was granted them. The Scouts of the Tartartheing almost a dayes Journey beyond Damascus, tooke certayne Saracens whom they fent to Cotuloff that he might examine them. Cotuloff being advertized by thefe that there were about twelve thousand Saracens Horsemen, with in two dayes lourney from thence, which expected uaily the comming of the Soldan. He rode prefently with all speed, hoping to take them at vnawares : But it was almost night before Cotnlossa and the King of Armenia could reach thither, and they had Intelligence that the Soldan was come newly before them. Therefore being deceiued of their expectation to affaile those twelve thousand alone, some aduited them for the best to repose themselves that night being now somewhat late, and to set vponthe Enemie in the The obstinatie morning. But Cosulossa despiting the Soldan, and his people would not hearken to any aduice, but commanded his Armie to bee forthwith put in order : which the Saracens perceiuing, kept their standing, being on the one side fenced with a Lake, and with a Mountayne on another side. and knowing that the Tartars could not come to affault them without danger, they would not goe forth to fight, but remayned in the place where they were, and when the Tartars thought wary Warrior, without any impediment to have assailed their Enemies; they found a small River betweene them, which in tome places had no passage ouer: by meanes whereof much time was spent before they could paffe ouer the River; but after they had paffed the greatest part over the River.

they let manfully on their Enemies. Yet the Soldan stood still and would not remove from the place he was in, betwixt the Lake and the Mountayne; which Cotnlossa perceiuing, because the darke night approched, he withdrew his company for that night and lodged them neere the Monntayne: only about a thousand Tartars, which could not passe the River, were not with him that night. The day comming, the Tartars againe couragiously fet vpon the Soldan, but as before, he would by no meanes come forth to fight, but defended himselse in that place of advantage, So the Tartars continuing their affault from the morning vntill the ninth house, beeing thirftie and ouer-wearie for lacke of water they retyred themselves in good order, leaving the Solden and came to the Plaine of Damaseus, where they had plentie of pasture and water at will. where they determined to abide vntill they had fufficiently reposed themselves and their But the Inhabitants knowing, that the Armie of the Tariars was spread abroad in that Plaine, opened the Sluces of the River in the night time, whereby the waters role so high in 30

Afterwards, the Tartars by reason that many had loft their Horses, returned softly by small lournies to the bankes of the River Euphrates, 42 yet none of their Enemies durft follow or purfue them, but the River beeing rifen and fwolne through the abundance of raine that fell, many of the Armenians, as also of Georgians, perished therein, more then of the Tartars, whole Horses knew better to swimme: fo returned they into Persia ruined and difgraced, not by the power of the Enemie, but by accident partly, partly by suill aduice. A great cause whereof was the obitinacie of Cotolusa, who would not regard any aduice that was given, for if he would have harkened to the countell of the wife, he might early have prevented those dangers.

And I Frier Hapthon the Compiler of this Historie, was present at all these proceedings : and He aydeth him if happily I treate more largely thereof then shall be thought convenient. I crave pardon in regard that I doe it to this end, that on like occasions happening these courses may bee called to minde. For these actions that are ordered by counsell, haue commonly good and commendable events, but the rash and improvident Enterprizes, doe vsually faile of their wished successes. After that the King of Armenia had paffed the River Euphrates with some loffe, he refolged to goe to Cafan before he returned to his Kigdome of Armenia, and therefore hee went fireight to the Citie of Ninine in which Cafan then refided. He entertayned the King with much honour. kindneffe, and magnificence, and being compationate of his loffes to make him fome recompence of especiall fauour vnto him, he granted him a thousand Tartarians, continually in pay at his charge for the defence of his Kingdome, and also granted him out of the Kingdome of Turbie, a yeerely pension, for the maintenance of another thousand Armenian Horsemen veerely at his pleasure, the King thus recompenced, having taken his leane, returned to the Kingdome of Ar. 60 menia, which Cafan had enjoyned him to watch warily ouer, vntill God pleafed to enable him personally to goe to the reliefe of the Holy Land.

He King of Armenia returned fafely to his Kingdome, but after hee came thither hee found little rest there, for after it so pleased God, that Casar was surprized with a grieuous infirmitie, and hauing gouerned wifely in his life, hee was no leffe willing that his wildome should bee commended in his death. Therefore hee made his last Will and Testament, appointing his Brother Carbanda (or Carbaganda) his Heire and Successor and having ordered all things concerning the Affaires of his Kingdome and his House in prudent manner, he made many good Ordinances and Lawes which for a memoriall he left behind him. being at this day inuicably observed by the Turtarians. Then dyed Casan, and his Brother Corbanda fucceeded in his Kingdome.

But after his Mothers death, delighting in the focietie of Saracens, he forlooke the Chrithan Religion to become a Wahometist. Besides this great Emperour, there are three other great Kings or Princes of the Totare. which rule each of them ouer many Nations, yet are they all subject to the Emperour, and acounty knowledge him their naturall and Leige Lord. And the differences which happen betweene them are decided in the Emperours Court, and determined by his Judgement. The first of these 20 Kings is called Chapar, another Hochtay, and the third Carbanda. This Chapar hath his Dominion in the Kingdome of Turquestan, being the neerest to the Emperour. It is thought that he is able to bring into the field foure hundred thousand Horsemen, and these are bold and good Warriours, but not fo well furnished of Horse and Armour as were expedient. The Emperours subiects doe many times make warre vponthem, and they on the other fide doe often invade the people of Carbanda. The Dominion of this Chapar was in ancient time subject for the greatest Hochtay keepeth his Seat of Residence in the Kingdome of Cumania, in a Citie called Alaro. These make warre sometimes on the Subiects of Carbanda, sometimes against the Hungarians, and fometimes amongst themselues. But Hochtay who ruleth at this present holdeth his Dominion peaceably and quietly.

Carbanda hath his Dominion in the Kingdome of Afia the Great, and maketh his chiefe abode in the Citie of Tauris, beeing able to bring three hundred thousand Horsemen to the field. But these are gathered out of divers parts being rich and well furnished with necessaries. Chan par and Hochtar doe sometimes make warre upon Carbanda , but hee neuer medleth first with them: neither moueth warres against any but that he sometimes invadeth the Soldan of Egypt: against whom his Predecessors have fought many Battailes. Chapar and Hochtay would willing. ly take from Carbanda his Dominion, if they were able to effect it.

The reason whereof is this, Asia is divided into two parts, the one part whereof being called The division of the Lower or Deepe Afia, is inhabited by the Emperour, and those two Kings called Change and Hoshtay. The other part being the higher, is called Afathe Greater, in which Carbanda inhabiteth and hath Dominion. Now there are only three wayes by which men may passe out of the Deeper or Lower Afia, vnto the high Countrey called Afia Maior, The one is out of the Kingdome of Turqueftan, to the Kingdome of the Persians; another way there is called Derbent, which lyeth neere the Sea where Alexander built the Citie called the Iron Gate, as in the Hiftories of Cumania appeares; the other way is to goe over the Sea, called Mare maius, which way lyeth through the Kingdome of Barca,. By the first way the subjects of Chapar cannot passe to the Territories of Carbanda, without great danger and difficultie, because they should find no so feeding for their Horses in many dayes trauailes, the Land being so dry and barren, that before they could come to any fruitfull inhabited Countrey, their Horses would be started, or at least fo faint and wearied that they might be eafily ourcome, and therefore that way they will not take. By the way of Derbent the people of Hochtay may palle into the Countrey of Carbanda. only fixe moneths in the yeare, which is in the Winter time. But that way Abaga hath caufed great Trenches and Fortifications to bee made in a place called Ciba: and is alwayes kept and especially in the Winter with a Garrison of armed men to defend the passage. The people of Hochtay have affayed many times to paffe that way by itealth and fecretly : but they never could, neither can by any meanes doe: for in a Plaine called Monga, there are alwayes in the Winter time certaine Birds about the bignesse of Phelants having very faire feathers to behold, 60 The Birds cal- and these Birds (which are called Seyferach) when any people come into that Plaine, straight flye away ouer those Watchmen and their Trenches, whereby the Souldiers there are eft-soones affored of the comming of their Enemies, and preuent the furprize; and by the way of the Sea called Mare main, they neuer attempted, because that way goeth through the Kingdome of Barca, which is so mightie in people and so strongly situated, that they are without hope to Barca in the prevayle there, and by meanes hereof hath Carbanda and his Predeceffors beene fecured from Latine Copie the power of so potent Neighbours. They marrie many wines, Polygamie. and the custome is, that the Sonne must marrie his Step-mother after the death of his Father : and the Brother is married to his Brothers Wife after his deceale. In matter of Armes they are very good, and more obedient to their Superiour then other Nations are : and doe eatily know by certaine fignes in Battaile the will of their Commander : whereby the Armie of Tartarians Warfare, is easily ruled and commanded. Their Lord bestoweth not any stipend on them, but they live on hunting and fuch prey as they can get : and their Lord may take from them when hee lift whattoeuer they have.

When the Tarrars ride upon any enterprize, they take with them great flore of Horse dring 20 king their Milke, and feeding on their fielh which they reckon very good food. And this advantage they have in the field that they will fight with the Enemies when they lift themselues, and yet they cannot be compelled to fight but at their pleasure. Their manner of fight is very dangerous, to that in one conflict or skirmish of the Tarters there are more flaine and wounded then in any great Battaile of other Nations, which hapneth by reason of their Arrowes, which they shoot strongly, and surely out of their Bowes; beeing indeed so skilfull in the arte of shooting, that they commonly pierce all kind of Armour, and if they

30 happen to be routed, yet they flye in troupes and bands fo well ordered, that it is very dangerous to follow or puritie them, because they shoot their Arrowes backwards in their flight, wounding and killing oft-times both men and horses that pursue them. The Armie of the Tartars maketh no great shew, because they goe trooping close together, fo

They are much more skilfull in conquering of Countries then in keeping of them. When they are weake they are humble and gentle; flout and proud when they are growne the stronger. They cannot endure lying in other men, yet themselues are much given to lying, valesse it be in two especiall things. done by him, or denie any faire Act which hee hath committed : The other is, That who foeuer hath done any offence, though it deferueth death, he confesseth it presently to his Lord if he be examined thereon. This may fuffice at this time, concerning the manners of the Tartars, because it were long to rehearse all the different customes and kinds of behaviour.

The other Chapters which follow, pertayning rather to aduice fitting those Times, and the boly Land . affaires, then the Tartarian Historie, I have omitted. And in the next place will present some Extracts of our Countriman, that famous Traueller Sir Iohn Mandevile, whose Geographie Ortelius commendeth, how socuer be acknowledgeth his Worke stuffed with Fables. For my part, I cannot but deplore the losse of such a Treasure, but know not bow to recover or repayre it (at Ramusio bath done for Polo) and

50 here have beene forced to deale with him, as Historians doe with our famous Arthur, daring to say little, because others have dared so much and such increasabilities. For his merit, and for his Nation I have given a touch of him, these few Latine Extracts; referring him that hath a minde to reade him, to Master Hakluits first Edition of his Voyages, where bis storie in Latine is to be seene at large. I suspect that Some later Fabler ont of the Tales of Ogerus the Dane hath Stuffed this Storie; Some of which, for Ogerus Done, a taste, I have here left remayning; not that I take pleasure in iyes, but that thou maift see, from what of whom they Foundant I fine of the control of th Huskes poore Christian Prodigals (prodigall to beleeve fuch lyes) were fed with in stead of Bread; not onely in the Church by Legends, but in their private studies, by Arthurs, Orlandos, Beuiles, Guyes, 60 Robin Hoods, Palmerins , and I know not what monstrous changeling-births of Historie. Such was this Ogerus: and in great part such was Odericus a Friar and Traueller, in whom perhaps some Friar Odericus in M. bath travelled, with him at least in this Author (whose age was before him, and therefore could not cite Hat publish d. ought out of him.) Neither is it for nothing (though for worse then nothing , a lie is both) that Friars are in this storie so often mentioned and prayfed: I smell a Friars (Lyars) hand in this businesse. Our

Here you may finde lyes by retaile effecta, afficta, affixa, to. this Mandevile : who there, is made a maunde vile full of fuch pedierie, unworthy the fight.

Briefe Collections of the Trauels and Obsernations of Sir Ionn Man-DEVILE; written by Mafter BALE, Cent. 6.

Ohn Mandevile, Knight, borne in the Towne of Saint Albons, was so well given to the studie of Learning from his childhood, that he seemed to plant a good part to the fludie of Learning from his childhood, that he feemed to plant a good part of his felicitie in the fame; for he fipposed that the honor, of his birth would not thing qualie him, except hee could render the fame more honorable by his knowledge in good Letters. Hauing therefore well grounded himselfe in Religion by reading the Scriptures, he applyed his studies to the Art of Physick, a Profession worthy a noble wit: but among it other things, hee was rauished with a might te desire to see the greater parts of the World, as Asia and Africa. Having therefore provided all things necessaries for his journey, hee departed from his Countrey in the yeere of Christ 1332. and as another Olyffes returned home, after the space of foure and thirtie yeeres, and was then knowne to a very tew. In the time of his trauaile he was in Soythia, the greater and leffe Armenia, Egypt, both Lybias, Arabia, Syria, Media, Mesopotamia, Persia, Chaldea, Greece, Illyrium, Tartarie, and diners other Kingdomes of the World; and having gotten by this meanes the knowledge of the Languages, let fo many and great varieties, and things miraculous, whereof himfelfe had beene an eye wit effe, should perish in oblinion, hee committed his whole Trauell of three and thirtie an eye wit sene, mount perint in contain, years to writing in three divers Tongues , English, French, and Latine. Being arrived agains in 30 England, and having feene the wicked neffe of that Age, hee gave out this speech : In our time (faid hee) it may bee spoken more truly then of old, that Vertue is gone, the Church is vnder foot, the Clergie is in error, the Deuill raigneth, and Simonie beareth the sway, &c. Hee dyed at Leege, in the yeere 1372. the 17. day of November, being there buried in the Abbey of the Order of the Guiltelmites.

The Voyage of NICOLO di CONTI a Venetian, to the Indies, Mangi, Cambalu and Quinfai , with some Observations

This is taken out of Ramufor discourse of this voyage.

Icolo di Conti a Venetian, haning trauelled quite thorow India, after fine and twentie yeeres returned home; and because to saue his life he had made denyall of his Faith, bee went to the Pope (then Eugenius the Fourth, An. 1444.) being at Florence to obtaine absolution; who ensoyned him in way of penance, truly to make Narration of his Voyage, and whole Peregrination to his Secretarie Poggius, who writ it in the Latine tongue. 20 Ramusio sought for it in Venice and other Cities of Italie in vame, and at last beard that it was translated into Portugall by the care of King Emanuel, An. 1500. a Copy whereof he procured from Lisbon, but so corrupt, that he doubted to publish it, which get for mant of better he did; and we out of him thele Observations.

Nicolo di Conti a Venetian being a young man, then at Damasco, and having learned the A. rabike Language, went with his merchandise in a Carauan of fix hundred Merchants, with whom he travelled into Arabia Petraa, and thence into Chaldea, till he came to Eufrates. In the Desart deuills. Desarts of Arabia, once about midnight they heard a great noyse, which they thought were the wilde Arabs comming to rob them, but faw a great multitude passe by neere their Tents without hurting them, which some of the Merchants said were Deuils which hanted these Desarts. 30

where the Sea ebbeth and flowerh. After fine dayes fayling therein, he came to Calcum, and after to Ormaz; thence to Calatia a Port of Perfia of great traffick, where he remayned to learne the Persian tongue. Afterwards clothed in the habit of the Countrey (which hee vied to doe in all his journey) he went with certaine Moores and Persians, having sworne to be faithfull to each other, and fayled to Cambaia, and after to Pacamuria and Dely, where flore of Ginger growes. Thence they went farre into Sea, and came to Bisinagar fixtie miles about, at the foot of a high Mountayne; in which are one hundred thousand men fit for armes; they marry as many wives as they will, which are burned with them when they die. The King is the mightieft King in India, and hath twelue thousand Women, foure thousand of which attend him on foot whither 40 focuer he goeth, and are busied in the service of his Kitchin; foure thousand others ride on Horfes, or are carried in Litters; two thouland are to burne with him, which is holden a great honor. Pelagonga is subiect to him, eight dayes lourney thence and ten miles in circuit : from whence in twentie dayes by Land hee came to Pudiferania (leaving in the way Odeschiria, and Cenderghista, where red Sanders grow) and thence went to Malepur where Saint Thomas is buried in a great and faire Church. The Inhabitants are Nestorians, which are Christians dispersed

fred thorow thorow all India, as Ienes amongst vs. And all this Province is called Malabar, At the end of that Country is Zeilam a famous Iland, two thouland miles about, where are Rubies, Saphires, Cats-eye flones; and store of good Cinamon; the Tree like a Willow but thicker, the boughs growing more in breadth then height, the leaves like those of the Bay Tree, so but greater : the Barke of the boughs is best, that of the Trunke is not good : the fruit like Bayberries of which they make good Oile to anoint them. There is a Lake in which is a Citie of three miles circuit, gouerned by Bramines, which frend their lives in the studies of Philosophie, and are much given to Aftrologie. After that is a great lland called Sumatra, which the Ancients called Taprobana, where her stayed a yeere. There growes the best Pepper, the Tree like to Liy. In a part of the Iland, called Batech, they eate mans flesh. Thence he sayled to Ternassari and thence to the mouth of Ganges, and up the streame (which is very great) to Cernouen, and to Magrazia; whence crosfing ouer Land he came to Racha, and thence in feuenteene dayes to Ana fifteene miles about, where they are much given to spend the Time in drinking and fellowship both Men and Wo- 60 men. There are certaine old women which get their living by felling Bels of gold, filuer, braffe, of the bigneffe of Nuts, which they put in mens yards betwixt the skin and flesh, when they are of age to vie Women, and in thort time cure the place; and the men much please themselves to heare the found of them as they goe. Mangi is fill of Elephants of which the King nourished ten thousand: they ferue him in Either this sothe warre, and carrie Caffles in which standeght, ten, or twelve men with Lances, Bowes and ry is not rue. They take them with a tame female Elephant, yied to feed in a place encompassed with orthis Margi 2 wall with two gates to goe in and out; into which in the coupling featon the male enters is not China at one gate, and thee flees out at the other, many men attending with devices to take him, both but Polos Micr. gates being shut; and with fasting, and accustoming other tame Elephants to him, tame him or some other

The men of this Countrey have but one wife, and all both men and women paint or embroider their skinnes with Iron pennes, putting indelible tinctures thereunto. They worthip Idols, to yet when they rife in the morning, they turne to the East, and with hands iowned, fay, God in Trimtie keepe vs in his Law. This Countrey produceth Serpents as groffe as a man, fixe cubits long, without feet, which they eate for great dainties; as they doe also certaine red Ants. There is a beaft headed like a Swine, tayled like an Oxe, with a horne in the forehead like an Vnicorne a cubit long, of the colour and stature of an Elephant; with whom hee continually fighteth. The horne is much esteemed against poylon. In the furthest parts of this Countrey towards Cataio, are white and blacke Kine, some haired and tayled like Horses, some with haires like feathers of which they make Fannes.

Beyond Mangi is the greatest Province in the World, called Cataio, the Lord whereof is called the great Can which fignifieth Emperour: and the chiefe Citie is called Cambalu, which is 20 foure square and hath eight and twenty miles in circuit. In the midst thereof is a Fortresse, and in it a Palace for the King; and at every of those foure corners is a Cattle, each foure miles about, in which are Armouries of divers forts, and Engines for battery. From the Palace is a way on the wall to all those Castles, that if the people rebell he might betake himselfe thither. Beyond Note, this Citie fifteene dayes journey is Quinfai another great Citie, which within this little while hath beene new made by this King. It hath thirty miles compaffe, and is more peopled then the former. In these two Cities it was told him that the Houses and Palaces are after the manner of Italie, and the men richer and wifer then in other places.

After he was gone from Ana, alongst the River to the Sea in seventeene dayes he arrived at Zaiton, a great Port, where he tooke Sea, and in ten dayes came to a great and populous Citie, Zaiton. 30 called Pauconia, which is of twelue miles compasse where he stayed foure moneths. There are Pauconia pera few Vines, which runne vpon Trees, and they make no Wine of them. There grow Abre- haps P. anin. cockes, white Sanders, and Camphire, &c.

But of India, whereof all his Relations are, wee have already given you better, vic. that is more punitual, methodicall, and credible Authors. Tet before we leave him, let us observe what Aneas Sylvius, or Pope Pius Secundus harb, cited out of him. Hee fayth, that hee fayled the Indian Anisylde 2. 40 Sea amoneth beyond Ganges, and then came to the River Ratha, which being sayled in sixe dayes, bee Asia sails cite. found a Citie called by the same name. And thence after seventeene dayes passing desart Hills be came into champaine Countries; which having passed in a fortnight with great labour, hee found a River greater then Ganges, called Dana: and having sayled therein a moneth, came to a famous Citic fifteene miles in circuit, named Dua, where the women are exceedingly libidinous, the men contented with one wife, The Prounce is called Macin, full of Elephanis, ten thousand of which the King keepes for Macinum heree one wis. The resumes a case or activity has a separation recommend which is the market and the simplest carried on a white Elephan, mearing a golden Change diffinguished with by appeared genuine, and have no to be feet. These things hash thu Nicholas (sarth Sist. 4 And vectors 50 uius) of Macin, noting without doubt, the Region Serica. For our age placeth the Easterne Scythians many things in Cathay. That of Dua greater then Ganges, and that of ten thousand Elephants nonrified by a more incredi-King not knowne by fame, are hard to be beleeved: but longingaitie cannot easily be confuted.

TO THE READER.

Relate, I here present thee a piece of a Hissorie, so much as abuse on Tatteria, and China. Alhacen, a searned Mahumetan was the Authour; whether an exall Hissorian, curry where storaily to be understood; or whether in some part he be parabolicall, and presents a Tameslane like Xenophons 60 Cyrus, (in some things rather what be should have beene, and what the Authour could say, then what be was) I undertake not to determine. The Abbat of Mortimer takes it for a sust Storie, and so doth Master Knolls in his Turkish Historie. If it be an Historie partly parabolical, yet doth the accorum exact of the Authour a verisimilitude every where of addions and places (sufficient to procure our pardra, if not thanker) the veritie of a great part being enident in other Stories. It is true that fonce things learne fulfe for want of truth in our intelligence, rather then in themselves. And so bath it fared with attibe subject of this Booke) Tartarian and Chinesian affaires: of which we had as little knowledge as of Tameilan, further then terrors of Tartarian Armes and some mens special occasions and tranels baue given vs light. Even the Sunne rifeth in those parts whiles it is not day-breake with vs. and beth attayned almost his Noon-point before we see him : and worthy wee are still to abide in a blacke might of ignorance, if we welcome not what light we can get (if we cannot get what wee would) from 6 remote an East. Once; Tattarian affaires (as it happens in Conquests) were changeable, and their New Moone was quickly at the full; divers chances and changes succeeding after Poles dayes to these: such wealth whetting the Tartars to get and bold, and no leffe the Chinois to recover, the China State being unquiet so long as the Tartar greatnesse continued, and freed (for the most part) with their dimini- to forme, and division into divers Estates. As for these times of Tameslan (if this Story be exact) it is libe the Can held the North parts of China from Quinfay forward, with Cataio; and the King of China the rest; then Nanquin being the Seat Royall, as fince the expulsion of the Tartars Paquin. Or perbaps the Quinlay heere mentioned, is that which Conti bath in the fermer Page told vs. was lately built by the Can : and not that which Polo speakes of; in Catay and not in China : which clearest this doubt of the Cans residence and rule in China. To reconcile all coubts is for mee too hard a taske, because Cataio and China are even still bemysted, and leave their surveyers perplexed, bounding the fearch of the most curious in fearching their sust bounds, bow farre they are the fame or differing; wherein our lesuites will more amuse and amaze vs (where wee will cleare our selues as well as we can) when wee come to them. I have premifed Conti, though Tamerlane be a little Elder for his Religions fake, & and to recreate with a little Relation , before this longer Storie.

with an infinite number of Noble deeds left vnto the memoriall of posteritie. Very true it, is, that he had not an Homer, but a great and worthie person, learned as well in naturall Philosophie, as in Astrologie, who was in the time of this Prince, a companion and familiar of his Conquests , named Alhacen, an Arabian by birth , and of Mahomets Religion. This Authour then being fallen into my hands, in my Voyage into the East Countrey, Icaused the same to be interpreted vnto mee by an Arabian, who did speake Frank (as they terme it) that is to fay, Italian, and some time I spent, in affociating my selfe so with this man, who com- so mended greatly vnto me the elequence and granitie of this Authour, wondering at his digreffi-Yeeoftenhaue ons, and entring againe into his matter fo well to the purpose. It grieved mee much that I had not the perfection of this Language, to be a helpe vnto the richer of this Historie, for to deliframe in the uer it vnto my Nation with some grace : but I tooke thereof as much as I could in his Language, the franker ta- which was corrupted, as is the Franke Tongue (so they terme it) which is a kinde of Italian, the France to the France mingled with Slavon, Greeke, and Spanifo Tongues very common at Constantinople, with the Ahigh figures all the rabian and Turkifb Tongues: so as I could not gather but onely the trueth thereof, and not the W. ft of Europe drifts and grauitie of the Declaration, wherein the Authour had collected it for posteritie (and as he faid) by the commandement of the Prince, who was a louer of learning, and excellent The Tartarient in the knowledge of Astrologie and Divinitie, as the custome of those Nations is to some them frange kinde ordinarily together, studying vpon the vertue of names, and of the turning of letters, euen in 60 of Aftrologie, their placing, writing them underneath Starres, whereof they make fentences, by meanes whereof they wrought miraculously in the things of Nature. This is that Zoroastrien and Bastreen Science, that of Balaam, and fome others in my opinion, which hath fucceeded vinto to many

Arabian Astrologians. Now then, this Prince was endued with such knowledge, as made him admired of the people where he commanded, who are for the most part great wonderers, infomuch as this cauled him to be accounted a Prince accompanied with the Divine vertue, confidering the juffice he yfed in all his actions. This hath proceeded even fo farre that fome Italians have written foolish things thereof, as of certaine kinds of Tents which he caused to be pitched, when he befieged any Citie; one white, fignifying peace, it yeelding vnto his mercy; another red, fignifying cruelty to follow; and the third blacke, fignifying mourning to enfue. But I finde not this in our Author, and I beleeve them to be fables.

So his Father Og was Prince of * Achetay, wealth, abounding in fuch kinde of wealth. And being come vnto the age of fifteene yeeres, his father . Hee gaue vnto his forcin Heiten: fonne Tamerlan (which fignifieth Heavenly grace in their Tongue) two fufficient personages of whom these for to guide and affift him in the government of his Estate: the one was called Odmar, and the Tattars are full other Alz, persons in great dignitie and credit with his father. The Mojeomite did not observe that order, but did fight by double Rankes with Lances, and there was a space to helpe themselues therein, and to breake them, notwithstanding those Nations doe not breake them at all, and they feemed to bee a greater number then wee, making a great noyle. The Moscounte lost some seven and twenty thousand Foot-men, and betweene fifteene and fixteene thousand Horse-men. This same day was Odmar the safegard of his Prince; but he loft Hally, who was slaine by the blow of an Arrow. The Prince did slacke no time after fo great a victory : He set forward, and came into the borders of the Moscouite. whom he enforced to capitulations, that they should become Tributaries of a hundred thousand Duckets, and should pay all the charges of the War, amounting vnto the summe of three hundred thouland Duckets, he then would lend backe againe all the Prifoners, and withdraw his Armie; 30 that for recuritie hereof they should give him pledges, which should be changed every yeare; ynto all which they agreed. So was this Warre ended to his contentment, returning with glorie vnto the Prince his Father.

Now Tamerlan was received into all his Countries with much honour and triumph. The great Cham of Tartaria, Brother vnto his Father, sent Presents to gratifie him, making offer vnto him of his Daughter in Marriage, and that in marrying of her, hee would cause him to bee acknowledged as Emperour throughout all his Kingdomes, as his next heire, himfelfe being now old, and out of all hope to haue any more Children. Hereupon hee presently tooke his Journey towards him, being in the City of Quanicay, where he was received with all kind of Triumph and Magnificence; there did he shew himselve brave in all manner of gallant Showes and Com- 30 bats, as well in jeft as in earnest. And as these Nations are full of vanitie, and desirous to make hew of their strength and agilitie, Tamerlan carryed away the Prize therein, whether it were in shooting neere with his Bow, or in changing Hories in the middelt of the courses, or in breaking an Iron in running at the Quintaine; he made enery one wonder at his dexteritie, and was crowned the fixt day after his comming thither with the joyfull confent of all the Subjects of the Emperour his Vncle, and of all the Court. After that, he married the Emperours Daughter, de-Marriage with firing first to bee crowned before the Marriage, to the intent that none should thinke that the the great char Crowne came voto him by meanes of her, but by succession, the Daughters not at all succeeding into Empires. It was also to assure his estate, and having remayned in that place by the space of two moneths, hee returned from thence with his Wite to Samercand, in which Citie hee de-40 lighted greatly to remayne, because the situation thereof was very faire; and for that the Citie is accompanied with a faire River, which caufeth great Traffque, and maketh it richer then any Citie within that Countrey. Odmar alone was called by him, at fuch time as the great Cham his Vncle did impart vnto him his Affaires : and among ft other matters, he propounded vnto him the Enterprize of China, promifing him affiftance and ayde, and giuing him to vnderstand how necessarie it was to undertake this Warre for the better assuring of his estate, seeing the King of China had much gone beyond his ancient bounds. He hal in his Court a Christian whom he loued much, and every one greatly respected, named Axalla, a Gennoic by birth, brought vp from his youth about his person. This man principally did stirre him vp vnto great Enterprizes, and not withstanding his Religion, hee trusted 30 him. Now he had all Religion in reuerence, so as it did worship one onely God, Creator of all things. He often said, that the greatnesse of Divinitie consisted in the sundry kindes of people which are under the Cope of Heauen, who ferued the same diversly, nourshing it selfe with diverfitie, as the nature was divers where it had printed his Image, God remayning, notwithftanding, one in his Essence, not receiving therein any diversitie. This was the reason that mooned which is of all him to permit and grant the vse of all Religions within the Countreyes of his obedience, alwhich not all mines provided (as I faid before) that they worshipped one onely God. He determined to make Warre with the King of China (who is called the Lord of the World, and Childe of the Sunne) Boile. Warre with the Aing of Come (Which Sealed the World begin the Jame, hee fent who the faid moueable populations of King of China, for to demand right for fome Countreyes (which they call Hordas) abiding places, which this Prince of China had vsurped long before, and even the passages of a River 69 A will builded called Tachy, which is beyond his limits, which are Walls which are betweene the Kingdomes of brehe Kingoi the great Cham, and of our Tamerlan, builded of purpole by this King of China, to defend him from the Roades of the Tartarians, and forces of our Prince, to as this was begun with the aduice of the great Cham, and for his benefit as well as for the Princes. Therefore to accomplish his Enterprize. in the meane-time that he attended for the returne of his Embaffadors, he caused his forces to come forwards from all parts, appointing vnto them for the place of meeting his owneat port built be the Hords of Baschir, where all his Armie assembled and other ayding troupes of the great tote, and per-Cham in the Deferts of Ereimal, at a certayne day, in which place he should joyne with all his hapsnow by Army. This Answere being heard, our Prince marched directly vnto the Army, and gaue order for une dpart of the consevance of victuals from all parts, fent to haften forward his Confederates, emparted the their Empire Answere vnto the Emperour by Embassadours dispatched from him, caused the boldnesse of the conquired be-King of China to be published, to make manifest vinto all the World the just heffe of his cause; fore by Cublai, 20 Before his departure he went to take leaue of his Father, who endued with a fingular and Fabet seems the

Sames made uerning of his Kingdome in his abience, committing the charge thereof vnto Samera man well Gouernour of 3C practited in Affaires, and he who had the charge of our Prince in his youth. So then lie marched Sachetay in Taforward in the middeft of his Army, which confifted but of fiftie thousand Horse, and one hundred thousand men on foot, relying principally on the Forces of the great Cham his Vncle; Who Tamerlan his about all defired this War : he did not forget to give in charge, that the rest of his Forces should Armie marbe readie vpon the first Commandement, as soone as he should be joyned with the forces of the thing against great Cham, and marching forwards he had stayed by the way by reason of some difference retire the King. which had surprized him through changing of the Ayre, as the Physicians affirmed. But yet, notwithstanding the forces which Catiles, Captayne of the Army of the great Chair conducted. went daily forwards. Now the newes was spred into an infinite number of places of his distemperature, yet did he not neglect to fend vnto the great Cham, and often aduertize him of 40 the estate of his health, to the end the same should not cause any alteration, the which hee did fore-fee by reason of his preferment vnto this Empire, by the great Cham his Vncle: and hee was in doubt of a certayne Lord named Calix, who was discontented therewith, and had not as yet neither gratified nor acknowledged him as all the other fubiects had done. Now concerning his delay, it was by fundry diverfly interpreted; some said that hee had hin aduertized of some vproare to be attempted, when he should be farre seuered from thence, and had passed ouer the Mountaynes of Pasanfu, and that Calix stayed upon nothing else, infomuch as the Companies of the great (bam were gone forwards, even beyond the Mountaynes, having passed the River of Mean, and were encamped at Boupron, the which Calix understanding, The confortathought he should have the meanes to worke his enterprize. Thereupon having affembled great cit of Calixa-

50 store of his most faithfull followers, he tooke counsell with them, that this was the meanes to let in his abouerthrow the purposes of Zachetay, who would reigne ouer, and bring them under his Empire: sence, & that feeing their Prince had bin so badly minded as to do the same of his own mind without calling of them which had interest in that election, that now was the time to assure their libertie, which was in doubt to be loft, & caufed also a rumor to be spred of the ficknes of this Prince. that the great Cham was old, the greatest part of his forces, far separated from him , forthwith dispatching a Messenger vnto the great Cham their Prince, to assure him that they bent not their forces against him, but were his faithful and obedient s. biects: but they armed themselus, because they would not be gouerned by the Parthians, their ancient enemies. Thus Calix thought greatly to trouble him, when he rose in Armes against him, and did thinke that he had already affaulted 60 the Wall which the King of China had made against the Tartarism. As soone then as the Prince was adjustized of the pretences of Calax thus discouered, hee marched one dayes Iourney forward, to the end he might approach vnto Calibes, and impart the same vnto him, what face so-

Prince of Thanais, without whom he could not doe any thing, for that heeled the Auanteard. Thus was the Army deuided in two parts; the King of China remayning long before he was adnertized of all this, and thought he had all the forces both of the Tartarians and Parthians you Good direction his Armes, to as this was of no small importance to favour our Affaires: for Tamerlan had eigecially given commandement, that the passages which are easily gotten, might as diligently bee kept, to the end that the King of China should not be advertized of the tumult. Then Tamerlan fer forward his Auantgard vider the leading of Odmar: hee promifed with himfelfe fhortly a happie fuccesse in his Affaires, and aduertized the Emperour of all: but it came vnto him when he was ficke. And furely it was high time for Tamerlan to march forward, or elicali had beene revolted, fo leaving his Footmen, he made great lournies. Now during the time that he had bin 10 aduertized, and made his abode to confult, which was the space of two monet is: Calix having presented himselfe with a hundred thousand fighting men before Cambalu, a very great Citie. and chiefe of the Prouince of Catago, the Inhabitants thereof came out to meete him, and did also receive him with all the joy that might be.

Now whilst our Army marched towards Cainda, and from thence vnto Calatia, whether our Army went eafily, looking for the Forces of his Natine Countrey of Zachetay, to come and joyne with him : he did not yet forget to fend forward daily of our Souldiers towards Cambain. so as they supposed all our Forces to be on the necke of them already, which gaue great terrour to as they supposed an our roccessor or on the necker or them arready, which gain great terrour write the people. Cather perceitaing that the people did repent, here thought beft to withfliam himselfe out of Cambalas, determining to oppose himselfe against Tamerlus, and fent for his 20 power from all places, putting all vpon the event and hazard of a battell. He drew out of Combala full fiftie thousand men, as well Burgesses, as Souldiers which were there in Garrison, hauing wonne all the Captaynes which the old Emperour had placed there in Garrison, amounting to the number of thirty thousand men, and him that commanded ouer them, who had conferted vnto the revolt of this great Citie. To make it short, having affembled all his Forces, he had fourescore thousand Horse, and a hundred thousand Footmen, the which hee had gathered together from all parts. Our Army then marched with all diligence, in fuch fort as certaine Scouts which were two thousand Horse, had newes of the Armie of Calix, the which came forwards directly towards vs, whereof they caused the Emperour to be certified speedily, who sent this ther two thousand Horses more, to the end they should keepe the passage of a River called Brore, 30 by the which our victuals were conveyed vnto the Armie, and allo for to winne alwayes time, the Prince knowing right well that the motions of Ciuil Warres bee furious at the beginning. and that it is the best to result them slowly, drawing them alwayes out at length if it be possible. For the people in the end acknowledging their faults, their meanes and money fayling them, and oftentimes victuals also. On the contrary side in a Royall Army none of all this doth happen, where all things are fauourable, and the Souldiers well disciplined, obedience and order beeing wisely observed. Then had the Emperour the guiding of his owne purposes, for he had received commandement from the Emperour his Vncle, to hazard therein all for all, deliuering vp into his hands the lafegard of his life and estate, that he might thereby end his dayes in peace, willing him likewise to punish this arrogant fellow and his partakers. By this meanes came forces from 40 all parts vnto Tamerlas; but on the contrary part, the Enemies Army was then in his chiefest force, and began to feele the want of victuals.

Calix was of the age of fortie, he was a Captayne renowmed with the great Cham, hee was one of the chiefest in dignitic and place, and they had alwayes respected him within Tartare as a perion most worthy of the Empire, if the glory of Tamerlan, and his reputation had not so far excelled. The Armies began to be viewed the one of the other about eight of the clock in the morning, where there were very many skirmishes before they came vnto the mayne Battayle (according to the fights of these Nations) it was a great Plaine wherein they met at that time, with like aduantage on eyther part; Odmar led the Auantgard, wherein there was fortie thoufand Horse, and threescore thousand Foot-men; he made three Squadrons, whereof hee set for-50 ward one before him that began the Battayle. Tamerlan marched in the same order, but his Squadrons were much stronger, the Foot-men both of the Auantgard and of the Battayle were on the right and left wings. Tamerlan had drawne out fixe thousand Parthian Horse, and two thousand Tartarian for the Arier-ward, and had committed the charge thereof vnto a faithfull Seruant of his called Axalla (a Gennois borne) a man of great judgement, his vnderstanding being good and quicke, and a Captayne in great estimation amongst the Souldiers, although hee worshipped God in another manner then weedid, and was a Christian. And hee had many of them with him, whom he caused to come from the Georgians, and from Pont Euxin, who fought with great agilitie; this day did heeshew his great sidelitie and courage vnto his Prince. (alix on the other-fide, who was a well spoken man, was encouraging his Souldiers to fauour his fortune, and the libertie of his Nation : he had divided his troupes into three mayne Battayles 69 onely, his Foot-men upon the right hand, his owne person was in the middelt of the mayne Barrayle, with many Foot-men which compaffed him round about (according as wee vie to

In the end, valiantly fighting, he fell into Axallas hands, which with one voyce he proclaymed through all his Campe, which ouerthrew the courage of all his Souldiers. Hee was kept vntill cally taken the next day, and was judged by all the Couniell worthy of punishment; whereupon Tamerlan prisonerby cauled his head to bee smitten off, the which hee sent to bee presented who the Inhabitants of Cambalu: he caused the like to be done vnto all the chiefe Leaders, not for crueltie, but for necefficie, knowing very well, that the meanes to cut off the Foot of civil warres, is to punish the Heads of the same, for they be Hydras which grow vp too fast.

Cataio, Cambalu ; TAMERLANS expedition into China, entring the Wall, conquering the King, and disposing of the Countrey, and returne to Cataio.

Fter this the Armie marched into the Kingdome of Cataio, a Countrey rich in graffe, and in all kinds of pastures, abounding with great quantitie of Beasts, and People, which knew not what warre meant. The Prince gaue commandement that these people should not be accounted as Enemies, but his good Subjects, that hee would vie all the Cities well, as Cangi, Sochgi, Gonza, Tagni, Togara, Congu, which had revolted, and were come to sue for pardon at his hands, in humbling themselves before him; the which he granted 20 vnto them, enjoyning them onely to prouide fufficient victuals for his Armie: which was of no small importance for the appealing of others, who had put all their hope in extremitie, which is in loging their owne lives to make others doe the like and efpecially the Inhabitants of fambals had taken this resolution : but being informed of the Emperours clemency, changed their opinions. In the meane while our Armie daily approched, and at fuch time as we came neerest, the more did the feare of all the Citie increase, infomuch as the Prince was advertifed daily from those which favoured his fide, of all things within the Citie, and he was affured that every one determined to obey the Conqueror, and to doe what foeuer he commanded. The which being knowne vnto the Prince, he left all his Armie at Gonfa, and himselfe went directly vnto the Citie of Cambalu, where all things were made quiet, by the meanes of thirtie thousand Soul- Theordinarie 30 diers, being the ordinarie Garrison, whom hee caused to enter thereinto before him, and two Garrison as houres after entred into the same himselfe, being received with great magnificence not yeelding Cambalu of as yet to pronounce the word of pardon, referring all vnto the Emperour, and to the ordinarie course of Iustice. He stayed for the returne of one of his Fauourites, whom he had sent vnto the Emperour, to carry him newes of the victorie, and of the death of Calix, and that the chiefe of this Faction remayned prisoners with him; also to know what Justice the Emperour would appoint to bee inflicted on those Citizens, which were the first beginners of the regult of this Citie: for the Prince being defirous to be efteemed mercifull, and to win love within this great Citie, would not execute justice of himselfe, nor in his owne name, but by the Emperour his Vncle, whom hee did gratifie herein, leaving the authoritie wholly vnto himselfe, and by this 40 meanes hee was not efteemed cruell. Thus the Prince after hee had remayned here eight dayes. departed. He was not many dayes journey from the Citie before he received tydings, how the great Cham his Vncle, willed that justice should bee executed on them which were the first Moouers of this revolt; the which was executed accordingly in the name of the Emperour, and by his speciall ministers; in such fort, that as the people accused the crueltie of the Emperour, they commended the mercy of Tamerlan. Thus was this warre brought vnto an end, to the great honour and reputation of Tamerlan.

As soone as our Prince was returned vnto his Army where hee found Odmar, who there attended his comming, hee was received of his Souldiers, and with a loud voyce called by all his Captaines and Souldiers; Most great Emperour and most victorious, as they are accustomed to Tamerlan wel-50 doe amongst the Tartarians. The Princeafter he had long discoursed with his Captaines both of commed vato the beautie and greatnesse of the Citie of Cambalu, hee arrived at his Tent, where after hee had his Armie, declared vnto Odmar in what fort all things had passed at Cambalu: he asked his aduice, whe strange acclather nee should goe and visit the Emperour his Vicle. Odmar well perceived that the Prince defired it, and called vnto his remembrance the honour which hee had received when hee was at Quinzai, and that hee would have beene very willing to spend the Winter with the Empresse, staying for the Spring for to returne vnto the enterprise of China, with a long speech distwaded him. The Emperour answered him, that he had ever knowne his fillelitie and love, and that the came of his fadnesse was, for that hee did not find in himselfe abilitie to recompence the same : and that when he thought to give himselfe some ease, then was the time hee must in stead of the

Now, the rumour was alreadie

Thus enery one returned into his Tent, where they abode yet eight dayes more. The Prince fent back againe Zamai vinto Sachetar with fome fine and twentie thouland Horfe, and fiftie thouland Foot-men, for the safetie of his estate in those parts. Thus after prayers were said, 30 all the Armie being affembled together in the presence of the Prince (according to the custome of our Emperours) cur Armie began to march forward. Hee forgat not likewile to dispatch one vnto the Emperour his Vncle, to give him understanding of all this resolution, the which hee very well liked of. The Prince by the same Messenger did beseech him, to fend voto him in the Spring of the yeare some fiftie thousand men to repayre his Armie, and certayne money by the King of also for the payment of his men of Warre, which hee granted him. Moreover, the condulenguis ling. Eting of good flore of warlike munition, and plentie of victuals for to renew ours : for this warre was principally enterprifed for the profit and greatnesse of the Tariarians, and for the importance which the loffe of the Lordships of Paguin and Quifu was vnto them, whereby the King of China had greatly strengthened and affured his estate, in fo much as hee might at his 40 pleature enter upon the Tartarians, and the Tartarians could not enterprile against him without great forces, for that hee had caused a wall to bee made betweene the spaces of the Mountagnes, which was fortie leagues long, so as they were defended hereby from the ordinarie incursions. the which continually did greatly enrich them, because they brought much Cattell through the Maner, which fame, wherein the Countrey of China doth greatly abound, by reason it is fittated in a tempethe Taster has rate ayre, being neither too hot nor cold. This was the cause that made the Emperour his Vicle mag gotten to delire this warre; whom our Prince, according to his dutie, would to the vttermost of his in Polas dayes, power gratifie, as also his new Subjects.

So wee began to march, and in thirtie eight dayes wee arrived at Cipribit, the Armie having the Change re- found great discommodities: there had wee newes of Calibes, who was very glad to understand cour; the Tar- how the affaires had passed : hee came to visit the Prince, who shewed vnto him a very good tarismilii hol- countenance, and gaue him particular underthanding of his determination, and underthood at ding Quinta large of Calibes, all that had pailed within the Kingdome of China. The next day the Prince ex tome other parise of Many mounted on horse-back, and came vnto Pazanfou, where the forces commanded by Calibes were or china, as at that prefent, the which had often fought with and tryed the forces of the Chinais: but found this floric (if shem much interiour vnto their owne. The Emperour caused a generall review to bee made of all the forces which were vinder Caliber, and after he beheld the countenances of these Souldiers at the forces which were value powers, and to receive money, every one crying, throughout all their rankes, he cauted them to muiter, and to receive money, every one crying, every port.

The Prince of God fame the victoriom and invincible Emperour, according to their cultome.

The Prince of Thursis (who commanded the Armie in Cauber abience, going to meet a sorten-netial ortio [180] with great diligence had marked the Wall, and the places by the which hee might enter by 62 the Mountains force, and fent many Spyes into the Country of China, by certayne little wayes that were withperor feruice, in the Mountaynes, who aduertifed him of all. Hee had also gayned through his courtesse a Lord of the same Mountaynes (called the Lord of Vauchefu) who ruled a great Countrey, with whom he had fo well profited, that he made him defirous of a new Master, and to submit hims telfe vnto the Emperour, receiuing daily great discommoditie by the warres which the Tortarians and Chinois made : to as he comming to visit the Prince of Thanais , hee assured him of his defire to doe the Prince feruice, and to helpe him in the warre against the Chinois, the which the Prince of Thanais had wifely concealed from Calibes. But as foone as the Prince was arrived. he imparted the same vnto him, the which made Tamerlan desirous to have some speech with him, to that as foone as the Prince had received commandement from the Emperour, hee fent vnto Vauchefu to advertile him of the Princes arrivall, and of the commandement which hee had received: whereof the other was very glad, and having appointed a day, the Prince tooke Ic his journey (without flirring of the Armie) into the campe of the Prince of Thanais, which was neere vnto the River of Languenne, whither hee had caufed this forefaid Lord to come,

Then the Prince after he had heaped upon him gifts of faire Horses, rich Furres, and other rare things, he willed him to vtter that which he had to fay vnto him. This Lord fpake then in this manner : Know my Lord , that it is but leffe of time to thinke , that with your Armes you should The speech of bee able to force the Wall, which the Chinois have built against the incursions of your subjects, the De- the Mountaine fendants have too much advantage therein. 20 your Person is onely of all the World worthy to command them : but all this will bee but in vaine apainst the Wall of the Chinois, where I assure you there are fiftie thousand men to keepe it, and you cannot stay there so short a time, but there will come thither siftie thousand more, led by the Xianxi who bath such a commandement. The King of China will bimselse march forward also. who will gine youbattell with two hundred thousand Horse and as many Footmen. After you have fought, I believe that the fortune and valour of your men may obtayne the viltorie, the which will cost you deare: but for to shew unto you how much the reputation and mildnesse of your men hath baund mee onto them, I will show you a meanes by the which you may cause siftie thousand men to onter into the Kingdome of China, whom I my selfe will condust; and they shall bee on them which keepe the Wall, in a manner as soone as they shall perceive it. In the meane time you shall cause your 30 men to goe unto a place that I will tell you, which will bee very discommodious unto the Chinois. by reason of a Mountaine oner against them, which you must cause them to winne : for I assure my selfe, that when they shall perceine your Souldiers to bee passed, they will lose their courage, and you may casily winne the passage for to fauour those men of yours which shall bee passed oner with mee. And for to hew unto you the affection and fidelitie of that I peake, I will deliner into your hands an onely Sonne I have, and two little Daughters with my Wife : I have also one Brother, who I am affured will follow mee to doe you feruice. The Prince having heard this Lord speake, received great ioy thereof, hoping that his affaires thould happily succeede, and this hee kept very secret, for even the Prince of Thanais knew not the meanes that this Lord had, feeing there was onely present the Prince and an Interpreter, and the Prince after hee had thus spoken vn-40 to him, gratifying him with all hee could poffibly, this Lord retyred himfelfe, accompanyed with the Prince of Thanais, who conducted him backe againe with all the honour that might bee. So the Emperour returned from thence into his quarter, and the next day after hee had imparted the whole vnto Odmar, and heard Calibes concerning that which hee had learned of the departing of the King of China, and of his preparation, which was great. This enterprise seeming hard vnto him, after due reuerence yeelded vnto the Prince, hee spake vnto him in this manner : Know my Lord, that I am your Slaue for to obey you : but feeing calibes Orariyou require mee to give you an account of all that I know of the estate of the Kingdome of onvato Prince China, for that I have remayned these fix moneths upon the borders by your commandement, Tomerlan, to hinder them from passing the same, whereby they might hurt your enterprises, I can af-

50 firme vnto you, that the King of China, who raigneth at this present, is of great reputation, and hath increased the limits of his Kingdome more then any of his Predecessors. His strength consisteth in this Wall opposed against vs, the which hee hath caused to bee made by reason of the ordinarie roades of our Nation. I am of opinion, that there bee betweene fiftie and threescore thousand men at the guard of that Wall, men for the most part trayned up in the Garrifons of the King of China, and his best Souldiers, and I know no good meanes to force this Wall without great hazard and much losse of your men. I have understood, that towards the Lake Hogeen you may finde more calle entrance into the Kingdome : after every one had decla- The Lake re i his opinion, hee faid; that hee hoped the great God (the Vnitie, of whom hee would Hogen. maintayne against such Idolaters) and his suft right should answere the reasons which doe con-60 tradict his purpole, and the valiant arme of his Souldiers shall quite overthrow what severe opposeth it selte against the same; and concealed from his Souldiers that which hee held as affored to execute it, to the end, the honour of a happy conducting might be afcribed vnto him onely.

Now, our Prince having fat sfied every one of the Kings and Lords that did accompany him, bee appointed the meeting place for his Armie to bee at a certayne place, where hee meant to choose fiftie thousand fighting men, and deliver them vnto the commandement of the Prince of Thanais, vinto whom he joyned the Lord Axalla 2 Genuois (for that hee knew him to bee difcreete) for to accompanie him, commanding him to give credite vnto him, for his experience and ridelitie. The day appointed being come, the Lord with his brother came to the Emperor. having viewed the place againe, and found it to bee forceable and fit to passe, assuring the Prince once againe of the happy fuccesse of their enterprise, and the Prince beeing assembled with them to conferre together, resolved in the end, that his person with all the army should approach vnto the walles directly ouer against Quaguifon, in which meane space the Fiftiethousand fittle thousand men should march forwards vnto the place appointed, and where they were affured to passe, conducted by the Chinois Lord, vinder the charge of the Prince of Thanais and Io Axalla. The Emperour hauing not failed to deliuer vnto them the best fouldiers of his armie. and having fet downe the order by them to bee observed, hee willed that the Lord Axella should leadetwentie thousand of them, and should march the first, the rest led by the Prince Prince of That of Thanais, and that every one should have one of those Lords to guide them, that by their nais and Axalla meanes the enterprise might bee more safely directed. So having marched ten leagues, they arrived at the passage, the which was won, not finding any man there to resist them : and having taken a light repalt, they beganne to march forward other ten leagues which yet remained, where the Chinois were, who suspected no such thing, having onely an eye vnto them na, by the con- which marched for to force their walles, affuring themselves to have the mastry, considering their advantage.

But it fell out much otherwise, for even at the very same time the Chinois did perceive the Princes armie to approach vnto their wall, as foone did they discry Axalla with twenty thousand men, who advanced forward being followed by the Prince of Theraise with thirtie thousand fouldiers chosen out of the whole army, who without any communication fet vpon the Chinois, which came prefently vnto them, having left a certaine number of their Campe for the guard of the wall : but they were prefently won by the footmen led this day by Odmar, who passed ouer so as the Chinois were cut off betweene our Armies. When Axalla began the battaile, he ouerthrew them in a manner all, the Prince of Thenais not hazarding himfelf therein:there was great riches gotten this day, the King of China his Coulin (whom he called King) was taken priloner: There was a great quantity of gold amongst 30 them, as well on their armes as on their horse and furniture: they shewed no great stoutnesses.

The newes heereof being come vnto the King of China, who at that present time was at Quanton, brought wnto him great aftonishment, for that hee judged it a thing that could not possibly come to passe, you might have seene every one filled with fright, teares and cries, bewailing the lofte of their friends. The King gathering together fouldiers from all parts (as the custome is of these people) caused all the Priestes and such as had the charge of holy things to come vnto him, and after exhortations vsed, he(as their head) commanded them to offer facrifice vnto their Gods, of whom the Sunne is the principall commanding in heaven (whom they hold opinion to bee the chiefest caufe of their being, accounting it immertall and impassible, moung it felfe ones, for the benefit of liming creatures) this did hee command to bee 43 observed through out all his Cities; and the second thing was, that every one able to beare armes should mount on horsebacke, and come vnto the King at Paguinfon, whither hee doubted that we would go, because it was one of the neerest townes upon the borders.

I have forgotten to declare that this Lord who had the charge to conduct fiftie thousand men vnto the frontiers, at fuch time as they which were there had need thereof, was foone in a The Emperous readinesse, and came to oppose himselfe against the Princes Armie which entred, and being skilfull in the wayes of the countrey, troubled much the Armie : for a great number of his men were on horsebacke. The Prince determined to beate downe all the wals, the better to affure his returne, as also all the fortresses which were there vpon all the passages, all of them having The mountain yeelded themselues after his victorie, the wing himselfe very courteous vnto the people of these 50 Lord rewarded mountaines, he gaue vnto this Lord a small portion of land, wherein there be seuen or eight good townes, Archy, Ymuly, Faliquien, Fuly, Cohensen, Qualy, Puly Quianlu, who came and delivered vp their keyes vnto him, being neighbours vnto this Lord, and gaue him the gouernment of the frontier prouince of Xianxy, shewing himselfe to be a Prince of his word, and acknowledging the notable services the which this Lord had done him. He referred the honouring of his brother untill he had meanes to doe the same : the Prince had received newes how that the King of China allembled his forces & marched forwards, and that he was there in his owne perion, & that he strengthened also his Cities which are sufficiently fortified, and vpon these doub's hee thought good to have the advice of his Captaines, and after fundry opinions, his refolution was, to leave nothing behind him, and to assault some famous Citie, and take it, by meanes where- 60 of he may nourish his Armie, and secondarily call the enemie vnto battell. The which the conqueror should alwaies seeke, & the defender the latest he can hazard the same. For that it is a very doubtfull thing to commit themselves vnto a battell, his dutie being rather to delay, vndermining the conqueror by lengt hand by wearinesse, and light skirmishes, then to fight in open field.

CH AP. 8. S. 2. Tamerlans march in China. Description and siege of Paguinfu. 140

It was concluded, and the aduice of enery one was, to conquer the Countrey by little and lierle fo as their enterprise was to draw directly vnto Paguinfou, which as it was a great Citie. and one of the chiefest, so is it also frongly fortified, and well replenished with people

Then he dispatched Odmar with fourteene thousand Horse, to advance forward and summon the same, as for to hinder victuals from being convayed thereinto out of the champaine Countrev: to the end that the Cattell remayning in the fields, should be a meanes to maintayne and nourish his Armie. I had forgotten to tell you, that for the acknowledging of the Lord Avalla Avalla made his feruices, the Prince had made him Captaine generall of all his Foot-men, which was one Captaine ge of the principall honours of the Armie. Hee caused the said Lord Aralla to march after Odmar, neval of all to with all the Foot-men, which was very neere a hundred and fifty thousand men, well travned the foot-men;

up in the warres, and good expert fighters. He marched himfelfe immediatly after with all his Horsemen, Artilleries, Engines, and other munitions belonging vnto warre, directly vnto Pa. Paguinfou bequinfon. Odmar did ride twentie French leagues this day, fo as he arrived there contrary to their beged expectation, looking rather for the King then for the Enemie, and having taken much Cattell: wherewith the Countrey greatly aboundeth, he pitched his Tents, leauing the Citie betweene him and vs , and stayed for his footmen, who marched forwards in the meane space, sending continually vnto the warre, for to wearie the Enemie. This endured three or foure dayes, vntill our footmen led by this braue Christian Gennois, shewed themselves in the Playne of Paouinfon. Then the Citie was summoned to yeeld obedience vnto the Emperour, or else they 20 should receive the Law of the Conquerour. They made answere, that they were determined to line and die in the feruice of their Prince.

Now you must understand that it was fortie yeeres, or thereabouts, fince the Father of the Note these King which raigneth at this present ouer the Chinois, had conquered it from the Empire of the changes of Tartarians, and having driven out all the Inhabitants, they had planted therein new Colonies, the Tartarians the Tartarians Tartarians, and nature out as the first remembrance, but only they of the flat Counthe Tart

And thus the Citie of Paguinfon is belieged, and our footmen camped round about within an Arrowes shot of the walls. They within the Citie did vie great endeuour for their defence, and our Prince omitted nothing for their offence.

Axalla having viewed a great and strong Suburbe, which was in length almost halfe a league. Supposed that those of the Citie kept no watch there: that this must needs bee, for that they would not make him obstinate; he had a determination to winne it in the night, and having imparted it vnto the Prince, vpon the first watch all his men were ready, all of them having made prouision of Ladders, and of such things as are necessary for winning thereof with handblowes, and having affaulted it on fundry parts, after the fight had continued two houres. 40 Axalla remay ned the Conquerour, and cut in pieces eight thousand men at the least which were A great Subwithin the same: the spoyle was great, there were many of Axalla his men slayne of one side, urbe wonne by which was that by the which they doubted to be affaulted. But on the other fide, by the which Axalla in the it was taken, there was scarce any one slayne. The taking of this Suburbe did greatly assonish night those of the Citie, who had marked the lustinesse of our men, and beganne to enter into doubt of their fafety, which vnto this day they accounted as most affured. Now you must vnderstand The figuation of their ratery, which was of hard accesse, being seated upon a Playne, the which was of the chit the situation of the Citie was of hard accesse, being seated upon a Playne, the which was Pagains enuironed round about with Mountaines, one of them onely approaching the Citie, which ouerlooked it on front vpon the North fide, where was a Valley by the which they possed, and there did runne a Riuser: on this fide wee the Suburbe fituated which had been taken, foa as the means to fuccour the Citie was flopped, our Souldiers keeping the paffages of these Mountaines, the 50 which were in the old time the borders of the Kingdome : for Pagninfon was once gouerned by the Tartarians, which kept it for a defence against the Chinois, but had loft the same, and these Mountaines were the limits of China against the aforesaid Tartarians, who governed Paguinfor at that time, fo as these Mountaines were of hard accesse, and there remayned no other way but on the fide of the Suburbe, the which a River compaffeth about, running all along the fide of a bordering Mountaine, upon the which wee caused many bridges to be built, for to haue thereby a way for to forcour our Souldiers, which kept the pallages of the Mountaines on the enemies tide.

In this meane time the King of Chinaes Armie approached which was very great, as they brought vs word daily, the Prince determining to goe in person and meet with the Enemie, ac-60 companied with his principall Horf-men, and to leave the greatest part of his Foot-men at the siege, whereunto he had a great desire, omitting nothing that might wearie the belieged, who defended themselues couragiously. fand of his best Souldiers, he wonne the wall, and lodged there, the Prince having so commanded him to doe, to ftop the heat of the Souldiers from going any further. Now the Princes purpole was to compound for the Citie, and not to force it, for two reasons. The first was, for the

he feared, the Citie being great and rich, that when the Souldiers flould facke it, the Enemie who wasbut thirty leagues from thence, should come vpon them, and by this meanes his Armie should be found in diforder, also rich Souldiers neuer serue well: The other was, for that hee would draw out of that Citie which was rich and wealthy, those commodities which were ne-ceffary for the fure accomplishing of his enterprise, seeing it was necessary to have such a Citie for to make a Store-house of necessary things for the Armie. Thus although the wall was won, In the Enemies wanted not courage yet to defend themselves valiantly, looking for ayde according to the newes they had received, that the Kings Armie marched forward. Whileft thefe things were in doing, one of our Engines shooting a bullet, flue the Gouernour, whereupon they did refolue for to yeeld themselues vnto the Princes mercy, sauing their lines, and the Souldiers en-ioying their horse and weapons. The conditions were agreed upon, and there came out of the Citie eighteene thouland Souldiers, the Inhabitants remayning in a manner all : there were therein thirtie thousand Souldiers at the beginning: the siege continued two moneths. The

was given the government of the Citie with the Countrey already conquered. But hee befeeched the Prince that it would please him to bestow it vpon some other, and for himselfe heere- 20 ferued the hope of his Master, wherein hee should have part. This answere did greatly content the Prince, for hee greatly defired the fernice of Axalla. Vpon his refufall this charge was beflowed vpon the Prince of Thanais, with the Title of Vice-roy. Now, as I have already told you, our Prince after hee had given such order as was necessary, and advertised his friends in all parts, and aboue all the Emperour, he marched forward, having contented his Souldiers, and made a generall muster of his Armie, as well of the horse as footmen, the which hee found to be diminished of ten thousand men onely. Now, our Prince after he had folemnely called your kind of godli- the Immortall, Inuincible, and Incomprehensible God, and spent one whole day in prayer, wee enterprised to goe on forward, and to goe directly vnto the Enemie, who was at Sintebu, with all his owne forces, and of all his Allies. As foone as he received newes that our Armie was pal- 10 fed ouer the River of Chalifu, the King of China marched directly vnto vs with great magnifichina his mag. cence: there was nothing to bee feene but gold and precious stones in his Armie: hee himselfe was commonly in a Chariot, wherein there was fuch a quantitie of gold and rich ftones, that enery part was full of Diamonds, Rubies, and Pearles.

The King of China was of the age of three and thirtie yeeres, who for the most part had beene brought up in pleasures, and not in militarie exercises, nor under the bloudie ensigne of Marie

loden with Iron, boyfterous and furious, not with gold, precious flones, and with fuch kinde of riches: to as he was very infolent in threatnings, brauadoes, and in defying vnto the battaile;

He often faid that we had surprised him, and had not warned him to prepare himselfe, and that parts, to doe in this manner. Hee had two or three Kings also with him, his Neighbours and Allies, who marched with the same preparation. The rumour of these riches gaue great courage to the Souldiers, for they were couetous of iust gayne, as is that gotten by a battaile. So both our Armies went forward each to approch the other, and there was a Citie yeelded vnto the Prince called Tunichenoy, the which helped our Armie greatly. The next day, to the end wee might give occasion vnto the Enemie for to approch neerer, we sent to summon, and at the same time to take possession of the Citie of Pamiba, the which in advancing forward wee left a little behinde vs. The King of China had put many men thereinto, and it was a Citie sufficiently well fortified : from Tianchenoy to Pagninubu there were ten leagues. He aduanced his Armie within ment of the Enemies comming. The Prince commanded his Armie to take the place for the battaile, which he had chosen in his indgement with most advantage, and having set downe vn-

to Odmar the order he would have to be observed, he defired to see the comming of this Armie:

so sending before him five or fix thousand Horse as Scouts, hee advanced forward, and Caliber with him. After he had feene this great confused Armie which continually came forward, hee commanded Calibes to retyre himfelfe as foone as they drew neere vnto him, and bring vnto him this great cloud, the which hee hoped soone to disperse. So the Prince returned backe vnto his men for to affure them of the battaile: hee caused all his footmen to bee placed all along by a great Mountayne, so as they had but one head for to doubt. And hee planted great store of Artillerie for the guard of his footmen. I am of opinion, that the Prince had about fix- 60 score thousand footmen, whereof many were armed after the Christian manner, and all they were commanded by fundrie Captaines; but all obeyed Axalla, who commanded them as Generall. Our Horse-men were in battaile array in a great levell Playne, having the Footmen on the

fand of his best Souldiers, he wonne the wall, and lodged there, the Prince having to commanded him to doe, to ftop the heat of the Souldiers from going any further. Now the Princes purpole was to compound for the Citie, and not to force it, for two reasons. The first was, for that he feared, the Citie being great and rich, that when the Souldiers fhould facke it, the Enemie who was but thirty leagues from thence, should come vpon them, and by this meanes his Armie should be found in disorder, also rich Souldiers neuer serue well : The other was, for that hee would draw out of that Citie which was rich and wealthy, those commodities which were neceffary for the fure accomplishing of his enterprise, seeing it was necessary to have such a Citie for to make a Store-houle of necessary things for the Armie. Thus although the wall was won, to the Enemies wanted not courage yet to defend themselves valiantly, looking for ayde according to the newes they had received, that the Kings Armic marched forward. Whileft thefe things were in doing, one of our Engines shooting a bullet, slue the Gouernour, whereupon they did refolue for to yeeld themfelues vnto the Princes mercy, fauing their lines, and the Souldiers enicying their horse and weapons. The conditions were agreed upon, and there came out of the Citie eighteene thousand Souldiers, the Inhabitants remayning in a manner all : there were therein thirtie thousand Souldiers at the beginning: the siege continued two moneths. The honour of taking the Citie and the happy successe therein was attributed vnto Axalla, to whom was given the government of the Citie with the Countrey already conquered. But hee befeeched the Prince that it would please him to bestow it vpon some other, and for himselfe heere- 20 ferued the hope of his Malter, wherein hee should have part. This answere did greatly content the Prince , for hee greatly defired the feruice of Axalla. Vpon his refufall this charge was bestowed upon the Prince of Thanais, with the Title of Vice-roy. Now, as I have already told you, our Prince after hee had given such order as was necessary, and advertised his friends in all parts, and about all the Emperour, he marched forward, having contented his Souldiers, and made a generall mufter of his Armie, as well of the horse as footmen , the which hee found to be diminished of ten thousand men onely. Now, our Prince after he had solemnely called voon the Immortall, Inuincible, and Incomprehensible God, and spent one whole day in prayer, wee enterprised to goe on forward, and to goe directly vnto the Enemie, who was at Sintelin, with all his owne forces, and of all his Allies. Our Horle-men were in battaile array in a great levell Playne, having the Footmen on the left hand, and on the right was the comming of the Enemie, fo as your the least disfanour that might happen, hee would retyre to bee affitted by his footmen. Wee had foure foore thousand horle: Calibes with the Scythians were in the Auantguard, and had the commandement of thirtie thousand horse, who should receive him at such time as he did draw on the Enemie, as he was commanded. It was divided into three troupes, each one confifting of ten thousand. Odmer had also thirtie thousand horse who should affist him. The Prince remayned in the Arier-ward at the one of the wings of his footmen, which held one of his principall forces : his purpote was to fuffer the threefcore and fix thouland horfe to maintayne the fight against the Barbarians. being led by two good Captaines, and if any of them remayned, the Emperor hoped after of to them to have a good market, by cauling his footmen to march forward, and himselfe with whom there abode twentie thousand of the best horse, which were sufficient without hazarding his Person for to give a new battaile, if so be that any disfavour should happen vnto them : for hee had understood that this was the custome of the Kings of China, to enclose themselves within the middest of their Chariots with their footmen, and not to hazard themselves but voon the extremitie. So the Enemie fayled nothing at all to march directly vnto Calibes, and all the Atmie marched after following of him and letting voon him, and hee euen as the Seythians are al-wayes accustomed to doe, with his six thousand horse in retyring gaue many charges, killing fome of them, and they likewife killing fome of his men. It was a beautifull light to fee this great Armie march, for it seemed to bee twife as great as ours, therein being an infinite number 20 of armed Chariots, wherein he puthis principall trust against the furie of our Souldiers; fo many gildings of gold and filuer as well in the trappings of their Horfes, as on their Armour, that it elittered, and was of vs all much admired. The Prince who with a troupe of horse did see the The beautie Armie march after Calibes, commended greatly the manner of cafting their men out of the andrichnesse rankes, for to compell this troupe vnto fight, and did fee this Armie come in good order, and he of the King of tryed with his eye to note the place where the Kings Person was, having neere him the Chinais Chinas Armie, Lord to instruct him, who knew well their manner of fighting. Now, they had neither Auantguard nor battaile, but onely an Arier-ward commanded by the King, and inclosed (as I haue faid) with his Chariots : the which being shewed vnto him by this Lord, the Prince turned himfelfe vnto vs, and in our language faid : Tet must wee this day differse this cloud here so gilded, Tamerlan his 30 and the King of China and my selfe must make a partition thereof.

Now, having feene the Enemie sufficiently advanced, and sudging that he had had seene them march a good league, he thought it not convenient to fuffer them for to take breath, nor for to put themselues againe into their order; he sent vnto Calibes for to will him to set forward the fight, and that if those whom he had led with him should be weary, they should come vnto him; but it was not in Calibes power to have this commandement ouef them. For as some as they heard this word of fighting vttered, they required the first charge, with a young Lord, who commanded ouer them, called Zioctabanes, who made appeare vnto the Chinois to what end their flight was, charging very stiffely upon the foremost of the Enemies, the which was an occafion to begin the first fight. And I affure you, there could not be seene a more furious thing, nor 40 any for to fight with more defire to manifest the valour of his Nation, and for to procure honour vnto his Prince. Now, this endured a long houre before the Chinois had ouerthrowne Calibes.

The Prince did see all patiently, saying alwayes, that the great multitude how consused seems The battaile it were, would carry it away from the order and valour of his Souldiers : you could not yet per- betweene the ceiue any alteration in the Princes countenance, Aduerfitie and Prosperitie were so indifferent King of China vnto him. His thirty thousand Horse were all Soythians, who observe not the same order the and Tamerian. Parthians doe. Now, before the Prince retyred with his men, hee did fee the first charge given, Calibes being wounded, retyred himselfe neere vnto the Prince, having with him two thousand horse ioyned together againe, and many more ioyning themselues together necre vnto the Prince, who commanded that they should cure Calibes, viewing the place of his wound, hee

50 caused him to bee conducted behind his footmen, and the other which were hurt with him also. Now, Calibes was not able to pierce through this Armie, being beaten back; but Odmar with almost all the Parthian horse-men, did handle them more roughly, for hee ranne cleane thorow them, and returned by one of the right wings of the Armie, where hee fought most valiantly, and having beaten them back even within the Kings Chariots, he thought that he should not doe wifely to goe about to breake fuch forces.

The King of China comming forward, and the horse-men which had beene broken by Odmar, joyning themselves together for his ayde, Odmar onely remayning in the battaile sent vnto the Prince for the footmen, and for to let forward the Artillerie, and that hee should assure himselfe of the victorie. The Prince, who had already set forward, kept aloose off, and sent 60 vato him fiftie thousand footmen, with a part of the Artillery, guing charge thereof vato Axalla, who forthwith fet forward, having commandement to fet vpon the Chariots, and to make an entrance : he fet forward the Artillery before him, the which did greatly aftonish the enemies : for the Gouernours of the horses, belonging to the Kings Chariots, could not hold them; it made also a great spoyle. As soone as he perceived this disorder, hee set forward, and

There were flaine two 10 Kings the Allyes of the King of China, and one taken Prisoner: there was inestimable riches King of China, gotten, as well in golden Vessellas precious stones, and the most rich and faire Charlots that could be feene.

The Prince would not see the captimed King untill the next day, beeing mounted on Horse. backe, and paffing through the Campe of the Battayle for to ftay the flaughter, and to ioyne together againe his men, to the end the accustomed watch might bee kept, whereof hee gaue the charge vnto Axalla; to whom he gaue likewise commandement to keepe the King of China within the middett of his Souldiers, having bin already dreffed of a wound he had received in his right arme. It was a strange thing to behold the Enemies Weapons, and the diversitie of streamers wherewith they were decked, the which seemed vnto vs afar off as beautifull, as the diversity of 20 colours plentifull. But to say the truth, the multitude was great which this King had, not withflanding there was much difference betweene their valour and ours : and it is reported, that hee had ranged in Battayle this very day three hundred and fifty thousand men, whereof there were an hundred and fiftie thousand Horse-men, the rest on foot: the greatest part of them were rude and barbarous people, which suffered themselves to bee slaine one vpon another, not marking their aduantage, nor hauing any Warlike knowledge, as our men haue: there were flaine of the Enemies some threescore thousand. Now the next day after the buriall of the dead, the Prince having given thankes vnto God for his victorie, cauted the wounded to bee cured, and amoneft the others Calibes, who by reason of the vntemperatenesse of the Ayre, rather then by the blow of the wound he had received, found himselfe very ill, yet would he not omit his dutie, to com- 30 mand alwayes his Auant-gard, the which was a great pleafure vnto the Prince, for he alone had Commandement ouer the Emperours Forces, beeing a Scythian, and greatly beloued of his

This King of China came with a very proud and haughtie countenance, and like vato the Em- a couragious man, approaching neere vnto the Emperour, hee demanded of Azalla by an Interperour Tamer preter, which was the Emperour, and being shewed him, hee spake fiercely vnto him after this manner: The Gods whom I worship, being prouoked against my Nation and people, and confoired against my good fortune, have made mee at this day thy Prisoner: but forasmuch, as it is 10 reported ouer all the World, that Tamerlan maketh warre for the honour of his Nation : thou shouldest be contented that thou hast wonne it this glory, that the Lord of the World, the Child of the Sunne, is in thy power, to receive fuch Law as it shall please thee to prescribe him. This hee faid in abraue manner, and without any other humbling of himselfe. The Emperour on the other-fide having faluted him very courteoufly, led him into his Tent,

He is furely a great Prince, and which hath had two hundred famous Cities within his Kingdome. There be many Mynes of Gold and Silver, much Muske, and also of an Herbe which the Christians call Rhubarbe. There bee in like manner within the Kingdome of China fifteene very large Prounces, the which have Gouernours. It is reported that hee hath threefcore and tenne Kings wearing Crownes, Tributaries vnto him. We call this Region China, the which they in 60 Tame, or Tamin their Language name Tame, and the people Tangis, the which we call Chinois. This Kingdome and Tamegus. doth abound in fish, and in great numbers of wild-fewle, by reason of the great abundance of running waters which doe ouerflow the Countrey, the which is reasonable temperate: they aabound greatly in Silkes, and the meanest are apparelled therewith, having small quantitie of

He is furely a great Prince, and which hath had two hundred famous Cities within his King-Adeleription dome. There be many Mynes of Gold and Siluer, much Muske, and also of an Herbe which the Christians call Rhubarbe. There bee in like manner within the Kingdome of China fifteene very large Prouinces, the which have Gouernours. It is reported that hee hath threefcore and tenne Kings wearing Crownes, Tributaries vnto him. We call this Region China, the which they in 60 Tame, or Tamin their Language name Tame, and the people Tangis, the which we call Chinois. This Kingdome and Tamegius. doth abound in fish, and in great numbers of wild-fowle, by reason of the great abundance of running waters which doe ouerflow the Countrey, the which is reasonable temperate: they aabound greatly in Silkes, and the meanest are apparelled therewith, having small quantitie of

Wooll, and not ving the same : they have much Cotton and Linnen in stead thereof. The men doe weare their haire long, the women combe them : they have as many Wives as they are able to maintayne, Next vnto the King, there is a Gouernour Generall whom they call Tuten, the which was the Brother vnto the imprisoned King. The Prince having affembled his council to to the end he might be aduited how he should vie his Priloners and the rest of the Victory : hee to the end ne might be admired how the thouse Brother was arrived at Quanton, the which hee Quanton had fortified, and that great flore of forces did ioyne themselves vnto him. This was the cause that the Prince having somewhat rested his forces, commanded two thousand Parthian Horse to convey the Prisoners vnto Paguinfou, and from thence after they had made abode there, to passe

To Ouer the Mountaynes, and to remayne at Burda (a Citie of olde time faithfull vnto the Empe- Burda. rours of Schrie) and there to keepe them faithfully. The purpose and resolution of the Prince was, that it behocued to affault Quantou, and to faut vp, it it were possible, the Kings Brother within the fame, being one of the principall feates belonging vnto the King of China, and a Citie greatly peopled and strong : it was forty leagues from the place where the battavle was fought. But Odmar being advanced thither, would not retyre before he had expresse Commandement from the Prince, who having fent thither, pitched his Tents round about the faid Cities having fummoned many small Cities, the which yeelded themselves wholly vnto the Princes mercy, making great lamentation for their King taken. Notwithstanding, the gentlenesse vied by the Conquerour made them to take all their losses with patience: and because it was also re-20 Ported, that he had vied the King moit friendly, and all the Prifoners : the Kings Brother had tent Embaffadours to obtayne leave for to know of the Kings health, and for to fee him, the which the Prince did willingly fuffer, to the end this other should not declare himselfe King.

who would have brought him more trouble then the other. He attended for the event of Quanton, and had his eye vpon the fuccesse of this siege. Now the Kings Brother having received newes of the Affaires of the belieged, he determined eyther to succourit, or to fight a Battle. and came straight vnto Porchio, and made a bridge of Boats, whereof there be great store in these Perchia.

Now being enformed when the halfe part were passed, which was fiftie thousand men good, Odmar finding them in very ill order, and nothing at all advertised of the Enemies nearnesse. 20 gaue the charge, and veterly ouerthrew them: there remay ned dead vpon the ground forme freter on the sum of the charge, and veterly ouerthrew them; there remay ned dead vpon the ground forme freter on the sum of the a great Marish wherein they were encamped. Notwithstanding our Foot-men having wonne passing of a Ris the banke of the River, beganne also to winne the Boats, and to sever them by the meanes of a uer, and sue great Boat, the which we with diligence caused to runne downe beeing full of artificiall fire, fo fifty thousand as at the fame very time that they which were within the Boate did draw neere , they retyred of his men. out of the same, having first kindled the fire within the Boate, the which with a great force rushed against the Bridge of Boats and overthrew it, and where it was resisted did burne. This did greatly aftonish them that were passed, to see their returne cut off. The Kings Brother was not yet passed vnto the other-side of the water, and he which first had gone ouer was the King 40 of Cauchina, who was flayneat the first charge, fighting very valiantly, in the fere-front. The Kings Brother did fee his men flayne and drowned, and could not remedie the fame. This fecond ouerthrow was of no small importance, although it was but the third part of the Kings Brothers Army, and that there remayned vnto him as yet a hundred thousand fighting menibut there was no great hope that he durft present himselfe before our Army. The newes hereof being reported at Quantionfon, they defired to make tryall of the Emperours elemency. Axalla dispatched one of his faithfull friends of his Countrey vnto the Prince, to carry vnto him these good newes : which was more welcome vinto the Prince, then the overthrow he had given vinto the Enemy, and agreed vnto all that Axalla demanded, referring all vnto his fufficiencie and fidelitie. The Kings Brother having fent to demand fafety for to treate, the Prince granted to much vnto them, for fuch as would come vnto him.

50 In this meane-time Quantoufon yeelded it selfe into the hands of Axalla, who caused the Garrison to come out of the same, received the Inhabitants into the Princes protection, and they which would might remayne therein vnarmed : and he entred thereinto with the joy of all the Inhabitants, who did determine to receive the Emperour into the same with all the magnificence that might be. He cauled thirty thousand men of War to enter thereinto; vnto whom was money deliuered for to maintayne them there, vntill fuch time as all the Foot-men should receive pay for three monethes due voro them, whereof the Inhabitants of Quantoufon did furnish the Prince, to the summe of eight hundred thousand Tentins, the which do amount vnto foure hundred and fifty thousand crownes or therabout. The Prince at this present sent me vnto Axalla, whom I found feathing of his Captaines and fouldiers, flaying for the commandement that I 60 brought vnto him, the which was to remaine within Quantoufon, and to cause all his footmen to fet forward directly vnto him, the which was done by the Prince, to the end it should strike a greater terror into the minds of the enemies, who feeing all his footmen arrived, he supposed

they wold nothing doubt (Quantoufon being taken) but that he would march forward, infomuch ued them with all humanitie, causing his greatnesse to appeare vnto them; and therewithall the agilitie of his Horsemen , to make them see with their eyes, that it would be the destruction of

An Embaffage the Chinois name, if he proceeded any further. So having faluted the Emperour with all reuefrom the King rence, they vetered their Embassage vinto him, which was that the Kings Brother had fent them vnto him to treat for two causes: the one, was for the liberty of their King, the other, for prefernation of their Country. The Prince having heard them, answered them, that they had reafor peace, and fon to trust vnto his mildnesse, and seeing at this present, they desired it, he would yeeld therethe Kings de- unto. Thereupon the Prince role vp, and caused to be said vnto them, that they should deliner their offers in writing, and that present answere should bee made thereunto. Thus went they out of the Princes presence with great joy, and as it were affured of Peace, and to recour their former prosperities. The conditions which they offered, were to leave Paguinfon, and all the Countrey beyond it, with all the Fortreffes of the Mountaynes; that they would pay all the charges of his Army, fince the day of answere made vnto his Embassadors; that they would Conditions a- give two Millions of Gold, for their King. This being prefented vnto the Lord, hee made anfivere thereunto, which was; that he would keepe that which hee had conquered within the betweene Tamorlan and the Countrey, which was his owne justly, seeing his armes had given it vnto him; that hee would to haue the River where he was now encamped to be his Frontier, fretched vnto Hochion, Tahancezug, Cauchio, Lulun, euen vnto Poschio bordering vpon the Sea; that the King of China should pay vnto him yearely three hundred thousand Crownes, the which should bee deliuered at Pa. guirfow, for acknowledgement of submission vnto the Empire, as well for his Successors as himfelfe: that they should pay five hundred thousand Crownes in ready money for the charge of the Army; that the King of China should be delivered, and all the Chinois Prisoners should pay ransom vnto particular men that took them, except those which carryed the name of Kings, who should pay one hundred thousand Crownes for peace with his Armes : that no Chinois should bee kept as slaue, nor sold for such hereafter, beeing vn ier the Princes obedience, that Traffique and Entercourse of Merchants should be free betweene both the Nations; that the King of China should deliver his Brother as Prisoner, and two Kings named, with twelve prin- 30 cipall men of the Countrey for affurance of the peace. They accepted of fuch conditions of peace as pleafed the Conquerour, hoping that time would bring againe vnto them their ancient liberty, and that for a time it behooved them to beare with patience the yoke of their bondage. Now the Prince had fent two thousand Horse, to setch the King of China, to the end that being at liberty, he might sweare to the peace solemnly, the which he having performed at Quantonfou, whither the Prince caused him for to come, he brought with him vnto Paguin, all the pledges, and among it the rest, the Kings eldest Sonne, and his Brother. The King beeing departed for to performe his promise, according to the Treaty by him confirmed, he was received, and as

In the meane-time the Emperour, after hee had prouided for the affurance of his new conquest, he left Odmar there to gouerne them, and gaue vnto him an estate of thirty thousand Horse and fifty thousand Foot-men, to furnish all the Fortresses and strong places, the Prince having led with him many of the new conquered people, defiring to have them for to dwell within his Country, and to fend other Colonies in their places, to affure himfelte the better of the lightnesse of this people, having noted them to bee inclined vnto Nouelties. Hee gave in charge vnto Odmar to make his principall abode at Quantoufou, and to fortifie well the paffage; and also commanded a Fortrelle to be made at Dermio, the better to streng then his Borders; and after he had left him all things necessary, he recommended vnto him the feruices of that Lord, who had manifested vnto him his great affection. The Emperour having well tryed his faith- 10 fulnesse in his Affaires as they fell out, he carryed with him a Brother of his, vnto whom he gaue great gifts within Sachetay.

it were worthipped within his Countrey, with all the joy that might be.

Then we turned our faces straight vnto Cambalu, having advertized the Great Cham of the happy fuccesse of our Affaires. The Prince remayned in deed King of China, holding in his posfellion, two of the fairest and greatest Cities of all the whole Country, having an hundred good leagues thereof vnto himfelfe, and many leffer Cities, having extended his Borders vnto a River, by which he might goe vnto the Enemy, but they could not come vnto him without paffing cuer the same : having good meanes to keepe it and with advantage. Now the Prince defired aboue all that the Idols which were within his Conquest, should be beaten downe, and commanded the worship of one God, establishing the same after the forme of his owne Countrey for he 60 made account that in short time all would bee reduced vnto our customes. Our Army wherein was much ficknesse, began to march, and on the third day having newes of forces which came towards vs, the Prince lent them a Commandement not to come any further forward, and that his Vnele, who had fet forward towards that place to have the good hap for to fee him, being determined to receive him at Cambalu with magnificence and triumphs, as hee well deferued. Now I will declare by the way, how Odmar being seuered from vs, all the Princes fauour was Tomerlan turturned vnto Axalla, vnto whom hee committed the whole charge of his Armie, infomuch as ned his funnt Axalla although he was alwaies in great reputation, notwithstanding the same was much en- vnto Axalla. creased by the Prince at Quantoufou, where the Prince did trust him with the Armie, in to weighty an enterprise as that was, and the which he forgloriously atchieued : likewise the manner of entring into the Kingdome of China, the intelligences hee had: fo as the report of his valour did flie throughout all the Empire. Calibes led the Auant-guard, and Axalla was in the

After certaine 200000.crowne daves journey, wee received newes of the Emperours arrivall at Cambalu, the Prince having of yeerley tent Left his Armie in a faire Countrey for to winter, where he dismissing many of our Souldiers, given vno Awes arrived within foure leagues of Cambala, whither all the Princes of the Emperours Court, len. came for to receive him, together with all the principall Inhabitants, for to gratifie our Prince for his happie Voyage. The Prince having received every one, according to his wonted curtefie, retayning notwithstanding convenient Maiestie, hee was beheld to the great contentment of all his Subjects. Hee had with him the Empresse his wife, who had not left him in his Voyage. The next day the Emperour did him fo much honour, as to come and meet him, The meeting 20 with all the magnificence that might bee. Hee gaue a present vnto the Emperour his Vncle, betweenethe

The Emperour was very denhis: but the Prince remayned on Horf-backe, whom the eyes of all the people could not be fa- balk in Cartho. tisfied with admiring. The Prince presented Calibes unto the Emperour, and making a recitall of his faithfulnelle, and the endeauour of enery one, hee caused the Emperour to give vnto him an lumified thousand crownes of encrease vnto his pension. Axalla was also presented vnto the Axalla rewar-Emperour, who being informed of his valour, hee was received with all the best favours that ded by the might be, and he gaue vnto him of the reuenues belonging vnto the Empire, an hundred thou- great Cam for might be said in gade vince in an art of gold in a Principalitie, that he might the better declare vinto him how much bis good fer-uice and faith-30 he effeemed of his fidelitie.

The differences betwirt TAMERLAN and BAIAZET the Turke; his returne to Samercand, and expedition against BAIAZET; the battell, and victorie, his caging of BAIAZET, and making him his Foot-Stoole.

His ioy and pleafare continued with vs all the Winter, where the Prince having receiued aduertisement how Baiaves Emperour of the Tarkes, had enterprised to joyne the Empire of Greece vnto his owne, and fully determined to beliege Constantinople: the which he understanding, and succour being required of him by the Greeke Emperour, he dispatched one towards Baiazet, for to declare vnto him his pleasure herein, and war- Amessagesen ned him on his behalfe, not to trouble the Empercur Paleologue who was his confederate. Now by Tamerian this motion came from Prince Axalla, who had wrought this league, being of kinne vnto Pa-vnto Baires. leologue, and alto thrust forward with desire to maintayne his Religion in Greece, where he was borne of the Genuois race. Whereunto being answered very proudly, by Baiazet vinto our Emperour, asking what he had to doe therewith, and that he should content himselfe, with enjoying The proudan-30 lawes vnto his Subjects, and not vnto others, feeing he was not borne his Subject. This answer for of Baixets being made, Axalla procured to be very ill accepted of the Emperour, and in fuch fort, that he determined to hinder this enterprite of the Ottomans.

Now the Prince had obtayned of the Emperour his Vncle an hundred thousand Foot-men, and fourescore thousand Horse, hoping to haue as many from Sacheray, besides the Lords who would accompanie him for to winne glorie, from whom he made account also of fifty thousand men more that they would bring vnto him, befides the other forces. Hee supposed that he had abilitie to deliuer the Empire of Greece from the bondage of the Ottomans. Thus the Prince departed, leauing the Empresse with the Emperour her father, for to serue him as a comfort of this age: it was not without a hard farewell of the Emperous pare towards his Nephew; but Heavyparding: 6c more grienous on the Princes part towards his wife, who had never left him fince the time they were married; but nothing with-held our Prince, where there was either glorie, or meanes to encrease his reputation, and profit the Common-wealth: saying often, that he was borne to this A notable sayend, and that he must take in these exercises his principall delights: for every other thing where - ing of I ware in he did exercise himfelte was but borrowed, being appointed and called of God to purify the lan.

pride of Tyrants. Neither will I here omit a dreame, which our Prince had the night before hee departed from Cambalu, which was, that he did fee as hee thought, a great multitude of reuerent men, who put forth their hands vnto him, requiring his fuccour against the violence of certaine Tyrants, who did afflict them with fundry kinds of torments: he faid, that he did neuer fee more reverent countenances, & that some of them were apparelled in white, and others in cloth of gold, lome having as it were Crowns of gold vpon their heads, and it feemed vnto the Prince. that he gaue them his hand, and lift them very high. This dreame he recited vs the next morning. but no body was able to give him the interpretation thereof, & himfelfe thought no more of it. The Prince was accompanied also with Calibes, & he commanded the Prince of Tanais, to take

The Chinois Lord was licenced by Odmer to goe with 20000. men of the fubiects newly conquered, being defirous to flew himfelfe ynto the Emperour, as also for to learne our manners and fashions. The Prince tooke his Voyage die rectly vnto Samercand, the place of his birth, three yeeres being past since hee had beene there. Zamay came to meet him, and I verily beleeue, a million of men, bleffing and prayfing him in all manner of fongs. All the Princes of the Countrey also ranne to visite him; he abode there a moneth. Axalla in this meane time was already at the meeting place at Ocera, who prepared

all things, looking for the Princes commandement for to goe voto him, advertifing him often of 20 the doings of Baiazet. We departed from Samercand, for to goe vnto Ozara, where was the meeting place for all the about the way Princes troupes : and having in that place taken advice for his journey, that is to fay, for to know whether should be most expedient and fauorable, either to goe by the coasts of Mosconie directly vnto Capha, or rather on the other fide of the Sea Bachu to paffe by the skirts of Perfis. It was refolued in the end, after fundry opinions, although the way were the longer, to paffe vnto Capba for to come vnto Trebisonde, and to the Georgians, and from thence to enter into the limits of the Ottomans. Then our Armie after the accustomed ceremonies & prayers made vnto God, wherein our Emperor hoped to finde his principall fuccours, we drew straight vnto Maranis, where the Armie abode three dayes, looking for the forces which Odmer did fend, whereof they received 30 newes. There did the Emperour cause all his Armie to be payd, and a generall muster was made. He had newes also there of the forces that the Mosconite did send voto him : he likewise caused an infinite quantitie of victuals, and the most part of his furniture to be conneved by the Sea of Bache, there being tome twentie leagues where was want of water and victuals, through the which our Armie must needs passe, causing all things necessary to be carried by water, the which was a great commoditie vnto vs; and there was a commandement given at all the shoares of the Sea, that they should bring all the vessels for to carrie the munition of the Armie; so as this fore-Tamerian hun- fight did greatly ease our Armie. The Prince went continually coasting the Sea-shoare, passing ted by the way away his time in hunting, and his Armie came not neere him by ten leagues, except fuch as came to feeke necessaries for the Armie, the which did extend it selfe some twenty leavies, it was fo 40 great. The Prince abode at Sarafich during the time his Army paffed the River of Edel at Mechet, and at two or three other Bridges, the which they had caused to bee made; there had hee ceataine newes how Baiazet marched vnto the fiege of Constantineple, having reduced vnto his obedience all Bribinia, and Burfia a very noble Citie, the which hee caused to bee fortified, and divers other Cities, vfing all the cruelties that might be, infomuch as all the adjoyning Prouisces yeelded themselves his tributaries; amongst the rest the noble Citie of Cabba; the Citie was by the Prince given vnto Axalla for to dispose of the same: which hee did, going thither to fee his kinf-folke, and to take fuch order there, as he thought was for the prefernation of the Citie, as one not vngratefull vnto his Countrey : he rather placed his hope in this little shoare of Mar Maiore, then in the limits of Scythas and China, and for to succeed after his Master vnto 50 all his great conquelts, for that he had all the Souldiers at his commandement, and great credit amongit all the people over whom his Prince commanded, Baiazet having a very great and mightie Armie, neither beleeued, nor once thought that wee would come vpon him, to exceeding barbarous was he, that he would not indure any man fo much as to speake onely vnto him of our Armie, as despiting it, he was to proud : and there he caused all the bordering people publikely to bee forbidden, to make any vowes and prayers for our prosperitie. Inflice raigned to among ft vs. infomuch as if a Souldier had taken but an Apple, he was put to death, and this was feuerely observed over all, a thing vivall, and especially in this Journey, the which was the onely cause of ouerthrowing the tyrannie of the Ottomans, and of this proud Baiaxet. So we arrived at Bachichiche, where the Armie refreshed it selfe for the space of eight dayes. Vntothis 60 place came the Embassadours of Guines, vinto the Emperour, whom the Prince did greatly reusrence for his holinesse. The Emperor after he had caused generall prayers to be published, Tamerlans Armie departed from Bachichiche, and they reckoned that there was in our Armie, three hunared thousand Horse-men, and tiue hundred thousand Foot-men, of all kinds of Nations. Our

Armie came vnto Garga, where it passed the River Emphrates, the Avant-guard at Chinferie; and the generall meeting of the Armie was appointed to bee at Gianich, the which did veeld it felfe: and there had we newes that Baiazet his Armie was necre vnto vs, within fome thirty leagues, which caused s to march more close. All the Cities yeelded, the Emperour receiving them graciously, and those which retused obedience, were cruelly punished, especially such Inhabitants as were Turkes, but the Christians fet in full libertie, under the name of the Greeke Emperour Emanuel, whom the Emperour would wholly gratifie, Axalla having received this commandement from the Prince: fo hee caused them to sweare fidelitie vnto Emanuel. The The causes of great Armie of Baiavet thought to have furprifed our men within Sennas (which they had ta. Tamellans to ken) but as foone as they drew neere, our men fet it on fire, and the greatest part retyring, there remayned some hundred Horse to performe the same, who retyred themselues in very great diforder. Now, the Prince of Ciarcan had divided his men into two troupes, and given comman- A flratagem. dement vnto the first troupe, that as soone as they perceived the Enemies to pursue the hundred Horse, they should receive them, and retyre iountly together. Now, hee had the rest of his power in a valley necre vnto a Wood, and having fuffered fome two thousand of the Enemies Horle. Turkes Auant-currers to passe by him, he charged them behind, and fought with them. they not fighting but fleeing as foone as they did fee themfelues proffed : many were flayne, and many were taken priloners. This was the first time wee fought, and carried away the victorie : all the priloners were fent vnto the Prince, amongst the rest the Bassa of Natolia, who led this 20 troupe. The next day Baiazet his Armie drew neere vnto the fight of ours, the which marched How Templant two leagues : and wee encamped within a league the one of the other. All the night long you Armie paffed might have heard such noyle of Horses, as it seemed the heavens were full of voyces, the aire did the night befor clound, and every one was defirous to have the night pasted, for to come each one who the fought against triall of his valour. Vinto the Seythian Nation, the which is defirous of goods, they propounded the Turk the great riches they should get by the victorie ouer the Ottomans. Vinto the Parthian Nation ambitious of rule, the honour and glorie of the Nation, being Conquerours of them, who onely were able to take from them the Empire of Asia. The Christians who made the fourth part thereof, affured themselves to conquer their greatest Enemie. Behold, now every one spake during the night time, according to his humour. The Prince this night went through his Campe hearing 30 all this, and was very glad to fee the hope that every one of his Souldiers did conceine already of the victorie; and I being necre him, he did me the honour to tell me, that at the time he fought the battll against the Mosconite, he did heare all themight long all kindes of songs, the which refounded in his Campe, feeing in a manner no bodie fleepe: I hoped then (faid hee) to have fome good hap, and I trust to receive the like now. Now after the second watch the Princereturned vinto his lodging, and casting lumselse vpora Carpet thee meant to sleepe: but the defire of day would not fuffer him; he then commanded me to give him a booke, wherein he did reade: therein was contayned the lines of his Father and Grandfather, and of other valiant Knights, the which he did ordinarily reade: he called me, having light vpon (in reading) the discourse of a battell that his Grandfather had loft against the Persians, the which he had thought to have 40 gotten (very vndifereetly) having affailted his Enemie, many advantages being propounded vn-

to him, whereof he might have made good vie, all which he neglected, truling vnto his owne valour and that of his Souldiers And having ended his speech, he commanded mee to reade the fame before him, and faid vnto me, I alwaies reade this before I beginne a battell, to the end I Tamelas his should not so much trust vnto the Lions skin, wherein I wrap my arme, that I should not serue custome bemy selse with the Foxes, to wrap therewith my head: for thus (said he) my Grandfather was foreabattell in a place of advantage, and he went out of it to feeke his Enemie, who was lodged ftrongly, and what souer his men said to him, liee went on headling, shutting his eares against all the counfell and aduite of his feruants.

Seeing the Twkilb Foot-men march, whom they doe call Innizaries, the which were placed Themanner 50 in the middelt, and vpon the two fronts, two great squadrons of Horse-men, the which see- or the march med to be thirty thousand Horse, and another which advanced and covered the battalion of the of the Tartifo Innivaries: Hee thought this order to be very good, and hard to breake, and turning himfelfe Footmen. voto Axalla, who was neere voto him, he faid, I had thought to have fought on foot, but it behoouethme this day to fight on horiebacke, for to give courage vnto my Souldiers to open the great batalion: and my will is, that they come forward unto mee as foone as they may: for The order of I will advance forward an hundred thousand Foot-men, fifty thousand vpon each of my two Tamelan his wings, and in the middeft of them forty thouland of my best Horse. My pleasure is, that after battell, they have tryed the forceof those men, that they come voto my Auant guard, of whom I will dispose (and fifty thousand Horse more) in three bodies, whom thou shalt command, the which

60 I will affift with fourescore thousand Horse, wherein shall be mine owne person, having an hundred thousand Foot-men behind me, who shall march in two troupes; and for my Arere-ward forty thousand Horse, and fifty thousand Foot-men, who shall not march but voto my ayde. I will make choise of ten thousand of the best Horse, whom I will fend into every part where I shall thinke needfull within my Armie, for to impart my commandements. Ouer the first forty thousand the Prince Ciarcian commanded : ouer the foremost footmen was the Lord Synopes, a Genuois, kinfman vnto Axalla, and he which was his Lieutenant ouer the footmen, a Captaine of great estimation. That over which the Prince Avalla commanded, confisted of five squadrons of horsemen. Baiazet his Armie seemed faire and great, which was advanced continually forward towards vs. who stirred not one whit from the place of the battaile. There were many light horsemen, as well Scribians, Parthians, as Moscouites, who left their rankes, and shot Arrowes and brake Lances betweene the two Armies. There was a Spie who brought word that Baiaret was on toot in the middeft of his lanix aries, where he meant to fight, that hee did not forget to mount on horse-back, giving order over all for the wants of his Armie: but purposed to fight in the middest of those lanizaries, who are a number of trusty men, brought vp in exercises from to their youth to all manner of warfare, and chosen out of al Nations, the fairest and strongest men. to as they are inuincible. By this bringing up the which they have had together, they doe fight with a great force and courage for their Prince and Lord, who being in the middeft of them, they are as in a halfe circle within the Armie. Now, they were thirty thousand men in this order. wherein Baiazet pur his principall hope: he had many other footmen, but gathered together of all forts. His battaile of horse was very faire, amounting vnto the number of an hundred and fortie thousand horse, well exercised in all manner of fights. The Soldar of Egypt having avded him with thirty thousand Mammolues, very good horse-men, and with thirty thousand footmen. Their Armie in that order feemed almost as great as ours: for they were not so knit together as we were, our forces being directly one after the other, and theirs all in a front. So the Enemies Armie advanced forward continually with an infinite number of cryes, and ours was in great filence. After that common prayer was ended, the Emperour himfelfe aduan-

ced continually forward, beholding the first charge given, and caused Axalla to set forward after he returned into his order, continually exhorting his men before hee left them. There could not be seene a more furious charge giuen, then was performed by the Ottomans ypon the Prince of Ciarcian, who had commandement not to fight before they came vnto him : there could not haue beene chosen a fairer Playne, and where the skilfull choise of the place was of leffe aduantage for the one then for the other, but that wee had the River on our left hand, the which was some advantage for the Emperour, having given commandement, that in any case they should not lole the same, and that the Enemies , whatfoeuer came thereof , should not win it ; this hee 30 did for to haue the advantage of the hand in fight. The Emperour, who aboue all Maximes of principall ma- warre, did vie to deale in such manner, that the Enemie might bee the first Affaulter; hee had xime of warre. Straightly commanded them which were appointed for the first charge, to suffer the Enemie for to give the on-fet. Now (as I have already declared) this young Prince of Ciarcian with his for-The battaile ty thousand horse was almost wholly ouerthrowne, having fought as much as hee could, but hee betweene Ta- entred even into the middeft of the lanizaries, where the person of Baiazes was, putting them merlan and Ba- in diforder, where he was flaine. About this time Axalla fet vpon them with the Auantguard, where as he was not in any fuch danger; for having furprifed one of the enemies wings, hee cut it all in pieces, and his footmen comming to ioyne with him, as they had beene commanded, hee faced the Battalion of the lanizaries.

The Prince seeing the charge Axalla had vpon his arme, sent ten thousand horse from his battaile for to fuccour him, and knit together the mayne battaile of Axalla, and to give once againe a charge vpon another Battalion of footmen, the which did shew it felfe, and came to joyne with and strengthen that of the lanizaries, who behaved themselves valuantly for the safetie of their Prince. This fight continued one houre, and yet you could not have feene any feattered. fighting resolutely the one against the other. You might have seene the Mountaynes of horses rull one against another, the men die, crie, lament, and threaten at one very time. The Prince had patience to fee this fight ended, and when hee did perceive that his men did give place. hee fent ten thousand of his Horse to joyne againe with the ten thousand appointed for the Arierward, and commanded them to affift him, at fuch time as hee should have need thereof. At 50 this very time the Emperour chargeth, and made them give him roome, causing the footmen to affault, ouer whom the Prince of Thanais commanded; who gave a furious on-let vpon the Battalion of the Ianizaries, wherein was yet the person of Baiazes, who had sustayned a great burthen. But the multitude, and not valour, did preuaile; for as much as might bee done in fight, was by the lanizaries performed, for to preserve the person of their Prince. But in the end the Horse-men, wherein was the Emperours person, gaue a new charge, and his Aagainst Bringer uantquard was wholly knit againe vnto him, hee renewed another forcing, and was fully victorious. Baiazet having retyred on horse-back out of the troupe of Ianizaries wounded, fell aliue into the hands of Axalla, vnto whom hee yeelded himselfe, supposing it had beene Tamerlan: then Axalla feeing him fo followed (being for a time not knowne but for fome great 60 Lord of the Ottomans) twentie thousand horse did not fight at all, but onely in pursuing the vi-Etorie, and they made a great flaughter. The Prince had his horse tlaine under him with the blow of a Lance, but he was soone remounted againe on horse-back. This day the wisdome of the Emperor gaue the victorie vnto his Souldiers: for the judgment which he had in tyring of the firong forces of the Ottomans, was the fafeguard of his. For if all had gone vnto the battaile in one front, farely the multitude had put it felte into a confusion; but this manner of aiding his men made cuerie one profitable. The Emperour judging (like a great Captaine) of the need that every one of his fouldiers had, fo that this manner of proceeding was the getting of the victory. They accounted threefcore theusand men flaine of the Ottomans, and twentie thousand of ours. The Prince of Tirzis was flaine, as I have faid : the head of the Georgians flaine, Calibes was verie forrie hee had so easie a reckoning in his Arier-ward, being very couragious, and a gentle Knight : the Despote of Servia was taken prisoner, who did accompanie Barates, and was a Christian : they gaue him this day of battaile much reputation. The Emperour gaue vnto

10 him very good entertainment, reproouing him, for that hee did accompany Baiazet against him. who did come in fauour of his Emperour. Hee antwered him, that it was not according to his dutie, but the prosperitie of Baiazer, vitto whom it seemed, that all the world did bend for to subict it selfe vnto him, and that his safetie had caused him to set forward. The Emperour prefently thereupon gaue him leaue to depart at his pleasure. Hee tooke care to get into his hands Baiazet his children : hee gaue commandement that Baiazet should bee cured, and after brought before him : who at such time as hee was there never made any thew of humilitie. The Emperour faying vnto him, that it lay in him to caule Baiaget him to lofe his life, he answered: Doit, that loffe shall be my happinesse. And demanding brought before of him what made him for all, for to enterprife to bring into subjection so noble a Prince his pride,

20 as was the Emperour of the Greekes. Hee answered him, the defire of glorie and rule, Wherefore doest thou (faid the Emperour vnto him) vie fo great crueltie towards men, fo farre foorth that neither thou nor thine doe pardon either fex or age! This doe I (answered hee) to give the greater terrour to my enemies. Then faid the Emperour, io shalt thou receive the like reward; and causing him to bee conveyed againe out of his presence, hee turned vnto his followers, and faid, behold a proud and fierce countenance, hee deserueth to be punished with cruelcie, and it is neceffirie that hee bee made an exemplarie punishment to all the cruell of the world of the inft wrath of God against them. I acknowledge that God hath this day delivered into my hands a great enemy, wee must give thankes vinto God for the same: the which was performed, being yet day : for the battaile was wonne at foure of the clocke, and there 30 was as yet fine houres of day-light. The children of Baiazet were brought before him : hee cauled them to bee vied curteoully, and as the children of an Emperour. The next day hee commanded the dead to bee buried: they found the Prince of Tirzis dead in the middeft of the Janizaries, where he remained enclosed. The Emperour did greatly lament this young Prince, who was his kiniman, and would have beene one day worthie for to doe him great feruice. Tamerian his In that battaile there died manie Captaines, & almost the chiefe Ottomans. This was a great Bat- saying of 84taile, the which was fought from leuen vnto foure of the clocke, in such fort that they knew issee. not vnto whom the victorie did incline. Our Armie stayed vntill the next day, every one caufing his friends to bee buried. The Prince of Tirzis was emblamed, and conveyed with two thousand horse vnto Samarcand vntill the Emperour returned. All the other dead bodies were 40 buried at Sanas with all the honour that might be. Axalla was much grieued for his kinfman, because hee was verie well beloued of the Prince: his charge was given vnto one of his brethren who was verie famous; in fighting this fame day, we might judge the events of the matters of the world, Behold this Emperour Baiazet, who was, as hee thought, superiour to fortune, which in an instant found himselte and his estate by one battaile onely ouerthrowne euen vnto the lowelt place, and at fuch time as hee thought least thereof. Hee vied to fay, that hee was justly punished, for despiting the multitude we had, for the assurance that hee had in the The despite valour of his horimen, and especially of his Ianizaries. Hee was three dayes (as they report) be-of Ranger affor the could be pacified, as a desperate man, seeking after death, and calling for it. The Empeter he was taour did not vie him at all curteoully, but caused small account to bee made of him: and for to kenpresener.

50 manifest that he knew how to panish the proud; vpon festivall dayes, when as hee mounted on horseback, they brought this proud man vnto him, and he served him in stead of a foot-stoole: Briage: Tamarhorfeback, they brought this proud man vnto him, and he ferued him in flead of a foot-floole; this did he for to manifelt the folly and arrogancie of men, and how judly. God had humbled on money of the folly and arrogancie of men, and how judly for him the folly and arrogancie of men, and how judly for him the folly and arrogancie of men, and how judly for him the folly and arrogancie of men, and how judly for him the folly and arrogancies of the folly arrogancies of the folly and arrogancies of the folly and arrogancies of the folly and arrogancies of the folly arrogancies of the following the f him. The next day the Prince marched directly towardes Barfia, whither all the remainder horeback, of Baiaxet his Armie was retired, with the Bassa Mustapha. All the countrie yeelded vnto vs, and the Prince caused all the holdes and fortresses to bee ouerthrowne and destroyed, and punished all those which were so enill adused as to stay untill they were besieged. I had forgotten to declare, how hee caused the Prince of Tire is bodie to bee accompanied with had forgotten to declare, how nec cauted the Prince or 11761 noute to be declared, the which duers prifoners chained and tied together, whom hee did find voto Samareand, the which duers prifoners chained and tied together, whom hee did find voto Samareand. 60 had hee greatly peopled with people of China, which had beene taken in the Battailes, concretchis and of those likewise which were taken out of the two great Cities, Faguinfon, and Quan. Citie Sometoufou. Now this batta le did bring great aftonishment vinto all the countries possessed by cond. our Armie, with fortie thousand Horse, and an hundred thousand Foot-men without any carriages, who hindred the Enemies from joyning themselves againe together : and hee made a cruell Warre vpon the Ottomans, deliuering the Gracians from the tyrannie of Baiazet, Hee Availed could approached neere vinto Burlia, where the Ottomans did not flay the comming of Axallet again the O: Armie, but only they which could not runne remayned behind. Baiazet his two Sonnes were tomass for the fent vnto the Greek & Emperour for to bring them vp, and to have mercie vpon them; the rest went vnto Gallipoli, for to goe vnto Andrinopoli, the which they held, having conquered it from the Grecians. Now the Prince (for to returne vnto my purpole)dispatched towards the Emperour his Vncle, and vnto the Empresse his Wife, one of his Familiars, called Lieban, Captavne of his Chamber, for to carrie him newes of this Victorie, and to joyne it alfo vnto all the rest. He fent unto him Baiazet his Sword and Bow, and the Caparitons of his Horfe, the which was efleemed to be worth aboue two hundred thousand Duckets. You may easily thinke that Prince Lieban was well entertayned of the old Emperour, and of the young Princefie, bringing word vnto them, that all the World did bend it felte to make our Prince victorious, who farely receiued thefe Victories from God without infolencie, and at fuch time as hee fent him most glory, then did his men note him to be least puffed vp. He was never bold, but in the day of battaile, and on the Eeue for to command seuerely, and with greater Majesty. To tell you what he was in advertitie, I did never fee him in that effate: but it is to be thought, that they which bee not infelent in prosperitie, are not faint-hearted in aduersitie. So our victorious Prince marched directly unto Burfia, loaden with Spoyles and Trophees which hee daily got, departing from the 20 Cities which did come and yeeld themselues vnto him; therein obseruing the same manner of proceeding, the which we did in the Conquest of (hina; they which did veeld vnto him without fighting, were well vied, and the obstinate well punished, the Prince knowing that reward and punishment are the Moderators of Common-wealthes, the one to bee vied towards the good, and the other towards the euill. In the end we received newes by Axalla, that he had receited Bursia in the Emperours name, and how the Inhabitants thereof had punished the Garritions of Baiazet, having driven them away, and flaine many.

But I dare not follow our Author any further from Tastatia, for whose sake I have entertained him. Leaving therefore his agreement with the Greeke Emperour, and secret visiting Constantinople; his comming to lerulalem, and Expedition against the Soldan, With his Exploits in Egypt, Syria, Perlia, we will returne with him to Samarcand.

keeping as well of Syria, as of the Soldans Empire, leaving continually men there, and drawing out Colonies, the better to fettle his Affaires in those places. So the Emperour leaving the Prince of Thanais, with his Army to attend his pleafure, he marched with therest of his forces into his owne Countrey with all the loves and Triumphes that might be possible, the chiefest Prisoners marching before the Emperour, amongst the which was Bainzer Emperour of the Turkes all chayned, and was a Spectacle vnto all the World of Forumes inconfrancy : hee continued notwithstanding in the same siercenesse wis woont to be in him. So wherefoeuer the Emperour paffed, the people affembled themselves by thousands, praying and finging his Victories. We arrived at the last at Samarcand with all our 10 fpoyles, in very great magnificence: where after we had been the fpace of one moneth or two in Featlings and Manificences, the Emperour with his accustomed Denotion, having in great tolemnitie vowed a Church and Hofpitall vnto his God, the most magnificent that might bec deuised. Whereupon to performe the same, he began to search out all sorts of Handicrasts men for to honour this Citie, the which hee had a defire to make one of the stateliest Cities in the World. And in one of the corners thereof he began, and did build there his Temple and Holpitall, making an account to increase yet this Citie, as large againe as it was, and to people the fame, with to many feuerall kinds of people and Nations as hee had brought with him, giving libertie vnto them all to frame and build their Houses, causing money to be distributed to do the fame, and giving all kinds of Priviledges and Freedomes vnto the Priloners, for to give them a 60 greater defire to build and fettle themfelues there : and having caused the threets and places to be plotted, and having appointed a place for every one to build upon, hee tooke no other place fure, neither had he any other care then the preferring the good will of his most famous Soildiers, whose name hee having caused to bee written in a generall Muster-booke, the which have commanded to be made, from day to day, they (not thinking thereof) received honours. and good turnes of the Prince, in recompence of their fo great feruices. Now he declared the death of the Emperour his Vncle vnto his Councell (of which he before had received Intelligence, but kept it close) and forgot no Ceremony due vnto the honour of the faid Emperour outwardly, shewing the griefe he conceived for his death; where after hee had rested some eight daves, hee determined to goe unto Quinzai for to fee the Empresse, and having left Baiazes in the cultodie of the Gouernour of Zacheray, the Emperour fet forward with his ordinary Court which was of forty thousand Horse, and threescore thousand Foot-men.

The Emperour being come vnto Cambala, received newes of the Battell Odmar, had wonne Articles of a To against the King of Chinas, Captayne Generall, and how he pursued his Victory, having taken new agreement three or foure great and rich Cities, the which did yeeld themselves vnto him, and that againe betweene Tathe Chimsi did defire peace. The Emperour fent the Articles he required, which were that be-mirina and the fore all other things the King of Chima thould pay the Arrerages of the Tribute, the which hee King of Chima. had agreed with the Emperour, First, he should come in person to doe homage vnto his Majesty, and acknowledge himselfe as Vassall vnto his Empire. That the Army should withdraw it selfe during his Voyage, and he should deliuer up vnto him all his Cities, saving three such as the Emperour should nominate; and that the things should be restored vnto the same estate they were in before the Warre, when the Emperour made the first peace; that hee should pay the Army for fixe moneths, and should also satisfie all the expences of the War, seeing he had begunne it, and was Author of the breach of peace. Then the Emperour gratified Odmar, fending vnto him for Wife one of his Sifters with all magnificence that might be, for to make him the more affectioned vnto him. I will declare how the Emperour was received at Cambala by his Subjects, with all the magnificence polible, the Emperour for to gratifie them having reflored their Priviled-ges, the which he had taken from them, for the Rebellion they had committed with Calix: 10 as the Emperour went ouer all gratifying his Subjects for this new Succession that was lately fallen vnto him, all the Companies comming vnto him : for in these Countreves they have no certayne dwellings, they are alwayes wandring in troupes whereforeer they goe: thither the Empresse (hauing left Prince Axalla to gouerne at Quinzai) came vnto him. The Prince remayned there almost two moneths, having in this place given order for all the Affaires he had. Com-20 bala was also neere vnto mount Althay, where they vie to bury the Scythian Emperours, whom we doe call the great Cham.

The Emperor caused the body of the Emperour his Vncle to be brought thither, and himselfe would conduct it with all pompe, honouring not only his body, but also all that her had loued in the World, and although it was not the custome to cause women for to affist the Funerals, yet The magnifiwould he affoord this honour vato the Emprelle, that the should assist the bringing of the body, going neere vato the same. This he did, the more to make appeare how much he honoured the fewer tribeness. memory of the late Emperour in his Wife, being his Daughter, and also to the end that if God tarie. did take him away, his children being small, shee should have the greater authority, and bee the better acknowledged worthy to gouerne in the minoritie of his Children; and also for that thee 40 had beene brought up alwayes in authority; even fince shee was marryed. The Prince desiring thereby the more to acknowledge the honour the Emperour his Vncle had done him, by adopting him as his Sonne, and in having left him so great and large an Empire, as that was, whereof he left vnto him the pollession. Now the Emperour loued her onely, having no other affection in fuch pleasure, but only the happinesse of a faire Off-spring, the which he hoped for. Now the body of the late Emperour being come vnto Cambalu, he determined to conduct it vnto the buriall according vnto the accustomed Ceremony, and to put the body with the Kings and Em- Tamerlan his perours his Anceftors. After he had from point to point performed the laft Will and Telfament this less want of the late Emperour, he returned from these c vnto Campbala, where he fpent all Winter in Tilt and Turnyin a coine a hunting, making his shole there. Recause have the sound to bis good and Turnyin a coine a hunting making his shole there. and Turnying, going a hunting, making his abode there, feecause he was in a place neerest vnto Wife, the Kingdome of China, to know how matters passed there, having now brought cluther his last 50 Affaires, purpoling to goe thither in person the next Winter, if Odmar did not make an end of The young the Warsalreadie begunne, and if the King of China did not fubmit himselfe wholly under his Prince made chedience having departing do to depart from Combally most like Course of Course of obedience, having determined not to depart from Cambalu, vntill this Countrey were pacified, Quienci and the marke he shot at, being only to keepe that which his valour was able to conquer through his outrallibe good fortune, being desirous to spend the rest of his life in enjoying the fruits of histraucis, and Countrey; for to publish his prayles vnto his people, and with Millions to maintayne them in peace. He which feemed had also a purpose to bring vnto an end that which hee had determined to doe at Samarcand. Now Axalla was at Quinzai, as well vnto the contentment of all the men of Warre, as the china, and per-Inhabitants, who defired much to fee their Prince, and having caused Prince Axalla in their be- haps in their halfe to beleech it, that it would please the Emperour to cause his Sonne to bee brought up a- times, Nan-

60 mongit them there, the which he did grant vnto them in fauour of the faid Prince Axella, elta- out was the blishing him for to command in the ablence of the Prince his Sonne, whom hee made Gouernour of Quinzat, from Cambalu even vnto the Sea. This Countrey was replenished with fome Quinzatof the three hundred Cities, and was in largenesse more then foure hundred leagues, besides an finite Totale (4).

To make short, it was that the Emperour his Vncle gouerned, where this Avalla appoin- Prince Avalla was his Lieutenant generall, under the authoritie of the young Prince his fonne. ted the young vnto whom he deliuered him in charge for to be his Gouernour, authorifing him vnto the gouernement generall of all his Kingdomes: for the great wisedome that was in this Knight. made him beloued in all the Countreys under the Emperours obedience: the feruices also and great victories the which he had caused the Emperour to obtayne by his stout courage, and good conduct, who for these occasions put his principall trust in him, and after himselfe hee thought him onely worthie to preserue for his children his Kingdome and Empresse.

The King of China came to visit him at his Court, according vnto the couenants offered vnto him, the which he accepted: he did sweare once againe obedience vnto the Emperour, who China come vn. caused him to see all his greatest Cities, for to make himselfe the more to be feared of this Bee. to the Empe- barian, who kept no more promise then pleased himselfe. Hee was assonished to behold so marour Tamerlans ny Souldiers, and the Countrey fo well replenished with people; and aboue all, that they yied did iwearc vn. fo little curiofitie of riches in their apparell and garments, wondring that the Emperour was to him once a apparelled in meane Cloth of one colour, without any other fashion : but to countervale that gaine obedi. he had about him men which seemed to bee Kings. At the same time when the King of China was at the Coure, the Emperour received newes of the * victorie against the Soldan, for the which the Emperour rejoyced, making feasts and turneys in his Court in token of mirth, and this reioveing continued for the space of eight dayes. After the Emperour had given order for * This battell. the double paying of his Armie that came into Persia, under the conduct of the great Chamber- 20 laine, and Synopes Colonell generall in the Imperiall Armie, the Emperour went vnto Quinfa for to fee his fonne, and wifit the people of this Countrey.

The Emperour arriving neere vnto Quinfay, Prince Axalla comming to meet him two dayes iourney off, with all the chiefe Lords of the Countrey, together with the principall Citizens, who were preparing for the Emperour the most magnificent receiving that might bee, as well The descripti- by water as by land. As this Citie is one of the richest in the world, so is it one of the greatest, on of the Citie and of the most wonderfull situation, being all wholly divided and overthwarted with channels, vpon the which are framed wonderfull and flately buildings, accompanied with an infinite number of Bridges, vpon the which they passe ouer channels: this Citie aboundeth with all kinde of spices, and in great quantitie, likewise with all manner of merchandises. The Emperour as foone as he was arrived, received presents of the Citizens, the which were esteemed to be worth about two millions of Gold, with a wonderfull variety of all rare and fingular things, the which they presented wnto him, for to testifie the love and obedience they did owe wnto him. The Emperour was defirous to fee his sonne, whom they brought vp with the accustomed greatnesse of Princes: and having caused the child to be brought before him, being of the age of feuen yeeres: he forbad from hence forward they should fuffer him to weare any thing vpon his head, and himfelfe did hang a Bowe about his necke, faying aloud, that they which fonnes educa- from their birth were called vnto foueraignties, should bee vied both vnto cold and heate, and should bee exercised in Armes betimes, and not brought vp delicately and easily, reprehending them which had the bringing of him vp, demanding of them, if they meant to make a woman 40 of him? And they answering, that he was tender. If he be not borne (faid he) for to be ftrong in Armes, he will not be worthy to succeed mee: for he must not be an effeminate Prince that shall preserve the Parthian Empire. Now he had sent the Empresse vnto Samarcand to be delinered, where shee was honourably received, having never beene there since shee was married. The Empresse Hee received newes that shee was there delivered of another goodly sonne, a thing which hee delinered of an caused to be published ouer all, and himselfe in token of ioy, made feasts sisteene dayes, with all other some at kindes of magnificent turneys: this he did for to shew his agilitie vnto this people, to the end, that as he excelled all his Court in vertues, that they should also judge him worthie to governe them aboue all other men. After he continued there a moneth, and having visited all the Seatownes neere vnto Quinfay, hunting all kindes of chafes, neglecting nothing notwithstanding 50 which belonged to his charge, faying often, that the recreations hee did take, were helpes for to ease him in the paines of his publike affaires whereunto God had called him. Hauing vpon his returne called together all the people, he published his lawes, which were all reuerenced of this people, as though they had proceeded from the Dininitie, so much admiration had enery one of the greatnesse of this Prince. The which I will truely declare vnto you, that so long as the Emperour was there, this people did almost nothing , being for the most part busied in beholding of him, not finding any greater contentation then that. Some of his Courtiers, and amongit the reft, Prince Axalla faid one day vntohim, that this was a Citie fit for his abode. O their Emperor, my friend, it is not fo: if they should see mee daily, they would make no more account of mee, The nature of It is a maxime, that the Lord of this great Citie must not goe thither but once in ten yeeres, and when he is there, it behooueth him to temper his actions, as if he were vpon a Scaffold rea-63 die for to play some Comedie, where granitie and good grace is necessary for to content the beholders: for the people doe easily receive an euill impression of their Prince, as they also doe a good, if you performe it well vnto them.

Now I has forgotten to tell you how the Emperour fent Prince Avalla in his name from Prince Avalla Quinfay is O bina, and his Imperiall Maiestie did not depart out of the Prouince before he re- sent moch at turned he went thither with great diligence for to establish peace there. Prince Axalla went for to establish formed towards Paguin, where he was received of the Governour with all possible honour: 2 peacethere. Are having affembled all the Emperours forces, hee let forward towards the borders of China. have an enterview at Pochio, where the meeting place was agreed upon. He paffed by Onenton went forward vnto Pochio, whither the King came also to meet with him; and hee entred full fiftie leagues into the Countrey newly conquered. It feemed vnto him a thing too much derogating from the greatnesse of the Emperour, the maiestie of whose person hee represented, if to he went any further to fee this barbarous King, being more fit that he should come torward into the Countrey conquered lately from him by Odmar, after he had obtayned the victory, then to goe into his Countreys although he had subjected them vnto the Emperour, and did pay a very great tribute. So the King of China arrived within a league of Pochio with all his Court: hee The meeting let forward vnto a Plaine, where he and Prince Axalla did fee each other, who was much bet. of Prince A. ter accompanied, from whom the King did as much differ as from the Emperours owne person. King of Chine They met three fenerall times together: the King defired to bee admitted into a Citie, which at Pechin, the Emperour had granted vnto him by the treatie. Prince Odmar declared that it was of great importance, therefore Prince Axalla was by the Emperour appointed for to bee Judge of this controuersie. In the end they required another further within the Countrey, the which the 26 King accepted : fo hee was put into possession of that Citie, the situation whereof was very pleafant, being compassed about with a Lake. Axalla having discovered that this barbarous

King, did earnestly defire it onely for his pleasure, and not for any other cuill intent, the Citie which hee deliuered being feated upon a Riuer further within his Countrey, and that other within our Countrey compafied about with our fortreffes: but Odmar did not allow of that. and supposed it to bee for an euill purpose, as for to contrine some new practifes. Odmar being an olde man, who knew the Kings vnfaithfulneffe, although hee had made him know it well enough vnto his fmart, having (as I have faid) wonne twenty or thirty Cities from him: and about fourescore leagues of Countrey, at such time as hee obtayined the last Battell, during the time that the Emperour was in his last Voyage against the Persians.

So the enterniew continued yet betweene Prince Analla and the King of China on the Plaine, a Tent being pitched, whither Prince Axalla did come vnto him, whom hee continually honoured as much as the Emperours owne perion, where after they had long time treated by Interpreters, it was in the end agreed, that the King of China should enter againe into Quinanci, not suffering him to put any Garrison into it, nor to fortifie the same : but even as a Priloner and Subject vnto the Emperour, hee should enjoy it, and it should bee his owne. enioving all the reuenue thereof, neither should hee carrie any kingly Enfignes, without the expresse leave of the Gouernour for the Emperour: hee should notwithstanding have a Theresolution guard of three hundred men for his person; and should give knowledge vnto the said Governour between A. of his iourney, before he entred into the Emperours Countries, the which hee must passe for to xalla and King 40 goe thither. Now the Citie was fituated in the middeft of a very great Lake, in the which were of chine. many Hands, wherein there were an infinite number of houses of pleasure, and it had beene alwaies a very delicate place, where the Kings of China were wont to recreate themselves in all kindes of pleasures that were there to be found: in so much as this barbarous King did not respect the conditions propounded vnto him, so as he might make his abode there, as it were in an Hermitage. Having left vnto his brother the government of his whole Kingdome, through King of China the displeasure he had of his bondage whereunto he was brought; a courage certainly magna. brother sucnimous, and worthie a Nation made civill with the best learning, and vnworthie the name of a ceeds.

Three times in the weeke at Samercand, Tamerlan ministred open justice vnto the meanest, The inflice of 50 in his Imperiall Maiestie, a thing which made him beloued of the people ouer whom hee commanded. In the other dayes hee gaue secret audience for the affaires of his Estate, and tooke aduice for matters of importance, which were decided daily in his presence. He had such seueritie litte. in his counfell, that they must needs deale truely before him, and without all passion in discourfing : not withflanding he alwaies shewed himfelfe courteous in his conversation, and made himtelfe both beloued and feared of his people; hee neuer changed his feruants, except they committed great faults against him: of all the servants of the late Emperour his Vincle he did not change one of them, but hee did withall encrease their effates, making them in this change to feele his liberalitie, which he made strangers for to taste also, vnto whom he was accustomed to give, to binde them vnto him. He drew great store of money yeerely for tribute of the Mofeo-60 mite: but he distributed it within the same countrey for to maintayne his authoritie there, winning those for his which might have hurt him, by meanes of giving voto them. Hee had great Tamerlin his care of his revenues, and he had fuch a readinesse, that he did see his estate from three moneths circuit his unto three moneths within one houre, both the ordinarie and extraordinarie expences, they remenue prefented it fo well digefted vnto him.

This young Prince, when he came vnto this Empire was nineteene Prince Seutethis nineteene yeeres old, hee was faire, and had much of the Emperor his Fathers naturall disposition. They hoped that hee would wifely (through the good counsell that was about him) maintayne this great Empire : but they feared greatly the young Prince Letrochio his brother (whom his me ther loued) would cause divisions, as it happened in the times of their great grand-father betweene two brethren, who had beene occasion of the destruction of their estate, the which was releeved and lifted vp againe vnto his height by the valour of Tamerlan.

Reports of GHAGGI MEMET & Persian of Tabas in the Province of * Chilan, touching bis Travels and Observations in the Country of the Great Can. unto M. G. BAPTISTA RAMVSIO.

This Citie of Succin is great and populous, with faire houses of hewen stones after our man mer: and hath many great Temples with their Idols of ftone. It is fituate in a Playne where Campion mentioned by M.

Ambaffadour to the great Can.

E faid that he had beene at Succeir and Campion, Cities of the Province of Tour guib, in the entrance of the State of Grand Can, who (faid he) was called Daimie Can, and fent his Officers to the government of the faid Cities, which are the first toward the Muslemans, and are Idolaters. He went thither with a Care si uan, which went with merchandifes out of Perfia, and from the places adiov. ning to the Calpian Sea, for the Regions of Cataio; which Caravan they permit No poffing in. not to pierce further then Succesir and Campion, nor any other Merchant therein, except here

runne infinite Rivolets; is abundant in victuals of all forts, and yeelds filke there made of the black Mulberies in great quantitie: hath no Wine growing, but they make a drinke with Hopy as it were Ale. Of fruits, by reason the Countrey is cold, there grow none but Peares, Apples, Apricocks, Peaches, Melons and Cucumers. Hee faid that Rhubard (of this commeditie Memet 4 had brought great flore at that time to Vonice) growes all over the Countrey; but the beft, in certaine high flony Hills neere adjoyning, where are many Springs and Woods of divers forts of high Trees, and the Land is of a red colour, and by reason of many Raynes and Springs almost alway myrie. He shewed out of his bosome a picture of the Plant, brought out of the Country (which Ramusio in his Preface to M. Polo hathalfo presented with this discourse) the description of which is this. The leaves, he faid, are ordinarily two spans long, more or leffe as the Plantis in bigneffe; narrow below and broad aboue, downy with (as it were) small hayres in their circumference; the stalke or trunke is greene foure fingers high, and sometimes a span from the ground : the greene leaves with age grow yellow and spread on the ground. In the midst of the trunke growes a thin branch with flowres fastned within, like the Mamole violets in forme, but 10 of the colour of Milke and Azure, and greater then those violets, of a noysome sent. The roote within ground is a span or two long, of a tawny colour in the barke, some as bigge as a mans The Root and thigh or legge, out of which grow little Roots or Sprigs, which spread in the ground, and are Inyce and pro- cut away from the great Roote; which within is yellow with many veynes of faire red, full of red and yellow juyce, cleaning to the fingers and making the hand yellow: and being cut in peeces the viscous juyce iffueth out and the roote becomes light; they lay them therefore on boords turning them vp and downe divers times a day, that the juyce should incorporate therein, lest it lose the goodnesse; after foure or fix dayes hanging them to drie in the winde, where the Sunne may not come at them, being in two moneths drie and perfect. They ordinarily take

there beginning at the end of May) which at other times is differfed into the leaves and flowers, that juyce also being gone and the roote light and hollow. They fell one of their Cart lodes of Roots with leaves for fixteene filuer Saggi (not much vnlike ours) for they have no Coynes, but make their gold and filuer in small thin rods, and thence

cut preces of a Saggio weight, which in filter is twentie Soldi Venetian, and in gold a Ducket and halfe. He faid that they would not eather it, if forren Merchants should not come to trade for it, themselves making no reckoning thereof : and that the Merchants of China and India carry away the greatest part; who if they should cut and dresse it as before is expressed, after it is brought in Caris, in foure or tix dayes it would corrupt; and feuen burdens greene (hee faid) would not yeeld about one drie. When it is greene it is intolerably bitter; and in Cataio they vie it not for medicine, but beate and mixe it with other odoriferous compositions for perfumes to their Idols. In some places there is such store that they burne it dryed in stead of wood; othere give it their crafed horses, so little doe they esteeme it in Cataio. But there they much Ic Prize another small Roote, which growes in the Mountaines of Succesir, where the Rabard prowes, and call it Mambroni cini, very deare, yfed for difeafes, those specially of the eyes; nor Mambroni citi did he thinke any of it was brought into these parts. He faid also, that in all Cataio they much vie the leaves of another herb, which they call Chiai Catai, which growes in a place of Catai, called Cacianfu. They boyle it, whether new or drie, and taking off a Beaker or two of that decoction fasting (as hot as can be borne) takes away the Feauer, payne of the Head or Stomack. Back, Toynes, and other difeafes, especially the Gowt, and it is good for digestion. They vie to carry it with them in their Voyages, and will give a fack of Rubarb for an ounce of Chiai Catas. And the Cataians fay, that if our Merchants, Perfians and Frankes, knew the goodnesse thereof, they would buy no Rauend Cini, so they call Rubard. I asked him of his Voyage from thence to Conftantinople, and hee answered mee by Mambre our Interpreter, that hee returned not that way he went with the Carauan, by reason that the Greene-head Tartars called lescilbas, sent an Embassador at that time when hee was to come away, with a great company, by the way of Tartaria Deferta, about the Caspian Sea to the great Turke at Constantinople, to make a league against the Persian their common enemie. Whereupon The way of he thought good to come with them, and so did to Caffa. I asked of the way he went. He faid the Carauan he should have returned from Campion to Gauta in fix dayes (eight Farlencs, each of which is betweet Taura three Italian miles, are a dayes journey, but on the Hils and Defarts they goe not halfe fo much) in Card from Gauta to Succeir in five dayes, from Succeir to Camul in fifteene, here the Musulmans for Mahumetans) begin : from (annel to Turfon is thirteene. From Turfon they paffe three Cities. Chialis ten dayes journey thence, after that Cuchia other ten, and after that Acfu in twentie. From Acfa to Cafear are other twentie dayes all rough Defart, all the former way being thorow places inhabited. From Cafcar to Samarcand are fine and twentie dayes. From Samarcand to Bochara in Corassam, five; from Bochara to Eri, twentie; from thence to Veremi in fitteene; from Veremi to Calbin in fix; thence to Soltania in foure, and thence to Tauris in

Now for some particulars of those places, he related that Campion is subject to Daimir Can, Campion degreat Emperor of the Tartars ; the Citie placed in a fertile Playne all cultivated and abundant in icribed. prousions. They are apparelled in black Cotton cloth, furred in Winter with skins of Wolues Apparell. and Sheepe if they be poore; the richer with Sables and Marterns of great price. They weare 40 black Bonets sharpe like a Sugar-loafe; the men rather small then great, wearing beards as we Bea ded men doe, specially a certayne time of the yeere. Their houses are of stone like ours, with two or Houses, three lofts, flope-roofed, and dinerfly painted, and they have one ffreet onely of painters. The great men for magnificence make a great Loft or Pageant, and thereon erect two Tents of filke Pageans. embroydered with gold, filter, pearles, and jewels, and therestand with their friends. This they cause to bee carried by fortie or fiftie Slaues, and so goe thorow the Citie in solace. The Gentlemen are carried on a limple Pageant, by foure or fix men without other furniture. There Temples are made like our Churches, fo great that they may contayne foure or fine thousand Temples and persons; and have in them two Statues, of a Man and a Woman, each fortie foot long, all of one 1dols. peece, firetched on the ground, and all gilded. They have excellent flone cutters. They bring

50 quarry stones two or three moneths journey on shod Carts of fortie wheeles very high, drawne Huge cartiby fine or fix hundred Horfes and Mules. There are also small Images with fix or fenen heads ages. and ten hands, all holding divers things, one a Serpent, another a Bird, a third a Flower, &c. There are some Monasteries in which live men of holy life, immured within their houses that Anchorate. they cannot goe out whiles they line, and have victuals every day brought them. There are innumerable, like our Friars, which goe up and downe the Citie. They have a cuftome, when Friars. one of their kindred dyes, to clothe themselves in white many dayes made or Cotton; their gar. White more ments are made long to the ground with wide fleeues. They vie Printing of their Books, which he thought fomewhat like those I shewed him at M. Thomas Guntos printing house. They have a kind of very great Oxen with the and over long, thin and with hayre. The Cattions and Idolaters are forbidden to goe out of their Coursellion for tries, to goe on merchandife thorow the World.

They have chimia, Simia, three particular sciences, Chimia (in the same sense as here) Limia, to make and cause loue, and Simia, to make men see that which is not. The moneys which they have are not Coyned, but euery Gentleman and Merchant makes thin rods of gold and filuer, as is before faid of Camping Prating moun- and Succesir. In the market place of Campion are every day many Mountebankes which have that science of Simia, which compassed with a great multitude present strange sights, asto cause a man to cut off his arme, or thrust himselfe thorow with a sword, and seeme to be all to bloudy, with other like.

CHAP. X.

A Treatife of China and the adjoining Regions, written by GASPAR DA CRVZ a Dominican Frier, and dedicated to SEBAS-TIAN King of Portugall : here abbreviated.

· of Camboia and the Bramenes there; the cause of his going to China : of China and the neighbouring Regions.

Being in Malaca building an house of my Order, and preaching, was informed that in the Kingdome of Camboia (which is subject to the King of Siam, and lyeth toward the parts of China, and doth confine with Champa, whence commeth to the most precious Calambach) was great oportunitie to preach the Gospell, and to reape some fruit. Having leave of my Prelate, I tooke the journey in hand. And after the passing many troubles and hunger in the journey, with dangers and sicknesses, I came a land, and after I had reasonably informed my selfe by a third person, conversing with the People and with the Fathers, even before I knew it I found all to the contrary of that which they had told, and that all were deceits of the simple Laytie, which of light matters were mooued to prefume of the people that which was not in them. And besides this, I found many hin-King of cam- derances for the obtayning of my defires and intent; for first, the King is a Bramene, and the bia a Bramenes. Bramenes are his principall men and his fauourites, and most familiar, because they are Witches, for they are much given to bee pleased with witchcrafts, and they doe nothing without confulting the Witches and Bramenes that are in the Kingdome (for by this meanes they thrine) by the Deuill. And to the first thing that the King asked me, was if I were a Witch.

Probar miffur. Pralocustur.

The Bramenes doe worthin among others one God, which they call Probar miffur (which they faid made the Heauens and the Earth; and another God, which they call Pralocussar, this allo having obtayned power of another which they call Praisfur, for to give this licence to Probat misser) and I shewed them, that not onely he had not made the Heaven and the Earth, but that hee had beene a very wicked man and a great finner : wherefore these Priests faid, that they would worship him no more, having worshipped him thitherto with their God Praput prasar metri : whereupon the hatred of the Bramenes increased towards me, and from thence forward I had disfauours of the King, which was mooued for the zeale of his God, and the God of his Bra 10 menes. There met about these matters, the Priests of the Idols, and all of their troupe, which goe for Priefts, and hold themfelues for religious men, and in their conversation and life they are separated from all other people, which to my thinking is the third part of the people of the Land; the King thereof fetting an hundred thousand men in the field. This religious people, or that holds it felfe for fuch, are exceedingly proud and vaine, and aline they are worthipped for gods, in fort that the interiour among them doe worship the superiour like gods, praying vnto them and proftrating themselues before them: and so the common people haue a great confidence in them, with a great reuerence and worship: in fort that there is no person that dare contradict them in any thing, and their wordes among them are held for fo facred, that in no wife they will endure to be gainfayed. Infomuch that it hapned fometimes whiles I was preaching, 60 many round about me hearing me very well, and fatisfying themselues of that which I faid vnto them; if there came any of these Priests, and said this is good, but ours is better, they would all depart and leave me alone. Further, they being very ignorant prefumed to be very wife, and the common people did hold them for tuch, all their knowledge being ignorances and Heathenin

They make seuen and twenty Heauers, some where there is meate and drinke and faire wo- Twenty seuen men whether they fay all living things doe goe, even the Flea and the Lowfe, for they fay, that Heavens as they have foules, that they must have in the other World. And to these, they say, all doe goe that are not R. ligious men as they are. They place others higher, whether they fay, their holy Prietts doe goe that live in the Wildernesses, and all the felicitie they give them there, is to sit refreshing themselves with the wind. They place others yet higher, the gods of the which, they fay, have round bodies like Bowles, those which goe to these Heavens, and the honour w. ich they give them is, to give them round bodies as the Gods themfelues have. And even as they Thirteene make many Heanens, to they doe many Hels, for they make thirteene, to the which they goe Hels.

to according to the grieuouinefle of the finnes of every one, eyther higher or lower.

They have a duilion of their religious men, for some they call Massacraches, which are as Massacraches fupreame, which fit about the King : others they call Nascendeches, which are as our Bishoppes Nassendeches, here. Thefe fit equall with the King. Others they call Mitires, which are in the common de- Mitires. gree of Priests, which do fit vinder the King : vinder the which there are yet two degrees, which they call Charnizes and Sazes. And all these they ascend in degree, so they doe in vanitie and pride, and are more reuerenced. Besides all this, there is another very great inconuenience, that except the Priests and all those that holds themselves for Religious men, all the rest are slaves of the King, and when the owner of the House dyeth, all that is in it returneth to the King, and let the Wite and Children hide what they can, and begin to fecke a new life; the people of the 20 Countrey is of such a nature, that nothing is done that the King knoweth not : and any bodie be he never to simple may speake with the King; wherefore every one feeketh newes to carry vnto him, to have an occasion for to speake with him : whereby without the Kings good will nothing can be done, and wee haue already shewed before, that hee is vnwilling to the matter of Chri-Rianitie. To these things was joyned some disorders of the Portugals, so that by all meanes I found croffes and inconveniences for to obtayine my defires and my pretence; wherefore I having beene in the Countrey about a yeare, and feeing I could make no fruit befide the paffing of grienous ficknesses, I determined to leave this Countrey, and because they told mee many things of China, and the people of it to have a disposition to Christianitie, and that they loved reason. I determined, seeing in this Countrey I did no goo 1, nor baptized more then one Gentile, which I 20 left in the Caue, to goe to China in a ship, of China which was then in the Countrey: in which they carryed me with a very good will, giuing me the best roome in the hip, not taking any interest of me; yea, they dealt very charitably with me. This name (blue is not the proper name of the people of this Countrey, nor of the Countrey it felfe, neither is there commonly in the Countrey notice of such a name, onely among all the people of India, and among those which dwell in the South parts, as in Malaca, Stam, Iaoa, this denomination of Chinas goeth currant, and also among those Chinas which doe traffique among vs. The proper name of the Countrey is Tame, the e. not well pronounced, but almost drowning it: and the name of As this word the people of the Countrey is Tamgin, whence this name China doth come, which is currant a- Tame in English

mong the strangers we know not, but it may be conjectured, that the people which in old time 40 did layle to those parts, because they passed by the Coast of a Kingdome, which they call Canchin-china, and traffique in it, and victuall, and take refreshings there for the Journey of the Countrey that lyeth forward, which is that of China, in the which Kingdome they live after the manner of the Chinas, and is subject to the Chinas, it femeth, that omitting Cauchin, from the denomination of this other Kingdome, they called all the Countrey that lyeth along

China is a great part of Scythia; for as Herodotiu faith, Scythia extendeth it felfe vnto India, which may be vinderstood, because the Chinas did possesse many parts of India, and did conquet them of old time, whereof at this day there are some Monuments, as in the Coast of Choremandell, which is towards the Coast of the Kingdo ne of Narsinga, on that side which we call Saint Thome, because there is a House built by the Apostle, and the Relikes of his bodie. There 50 is at this day a great Temple of Idols, which is a marke for the Natigators to know the Coast which is very low, the which as the men of the Countrey affirme, was made by the Chinas, of whom there remayned among them a perpetuall memory, and therefore they call it Pagode, of the Chinas, which is to fay, Temple of the Chinas. And in the Kingdome of Callecut, which is the head of M lanar, there be very ancient truit-trees which the men of the Countrey fay The Tertarrawere planted by the Chinas, and on the shoales of Chilae, which doe runne from the Iland of ther let forth Ceplan, toward the Coaft of Cheromandel, is affirmed, by the men of the Countrey, a great Ar- na to these Exmy of the Chinas to be call away which came for India, which was loft, because the Chinas were ploits as in Pobut young in that Nauigation. And so the men of the Countrey say the Chinas were Lords of lo you reade. all I and, and of I autana, which is the Kingdome of Malaca, Siam, and of Chapaa, as it is com-

60 monly affirmed in those parts: wherefore some doe affirme, many of this people to beelike the Chinas, that is, having small eyes, flat noses, and long faces, for the great commixture that the Chinas had with all of them, especially with them of laon, which commonly are more Chinalike. But the King of China seeing that his Kingdome went to decay, and was in danger by their feeking to conquer other strange Countreyes, he with-drew himselfe with his men tohis owne Kingdome, making a publike Edict under paine of death that none of the Countrey should fayle out of the Kindome of China: the which lafteth to this day. The Liquos are not continued with mayne Land, but it is an Iland which standeth in the Sea of China, little more or leffe then thirtie leagues from China it felte. In this Hand line these people, which is a well disposed people, more to the white then browne. It is a cleanly and well attyred people; they drelle their haire like women; and tye it on the fide of their head, fastened with a filter bodkin; their grounds are plentifull of many and good waters; it is a people that fayle very feldome being in the middeft of the Sea. They weare good shore Swords, they were tayle very tenome occur in one minor to the whom they had great convertation, therefore are very to like the Chinas. Now this Iland remayning to the Sea from China, as we have faid, the Coaffor China runneth, winding from the Prounce of Cantano, and from her Coast vnto the Coast of the Promince of Nanguin, whether to the Portugals have fayled, the Coast making neuera point as the Maps doe make, the which may be seene well pointed in the Sea-cards and in the tarians, a Wall of an hundred leagues in length. And some will affirme to bee more then a hundred leagues : the first Kingdome that doth confine withit on the Sea-side of India, is one that is called Cauchin-china, which hath about an hundred leagues little more or leffe a long the Sea. 30

coast, the Sea maketha great entrance betweene it and the lle Daman, which is of fiftie leagues in length, and is already of the Chinas: and in the end of this entrance this Kingdome abutteth with the Kingdome of China, and is subject to the King of China. The people of this Kingdome

there remayne to thele Lass toward the side of the Indian Sea, the great Kingdome of Pesuthe in their Habit, Policie, and Gouernment, doe vie them selues like the people of China. The Countrey is much inhabited and of much people, it is also a very plentifull Countrey. They haue the same Writing that the China haue, although their speech be divers. Beyond this Kingdome of the Cauchin-chinas, lyeth another very great Kingdome, which runneth within the Land along China, which some doe call Laos, and others Stones, Maons: this by the otherside towards India, doth confine with the Kingdome of Cambon, and with the great Kingdome of Kingdome of Tanagarin, and that of Quedas, and that of Malaca, and the Kingdomes of Pas, of Patane, of Syam, of Camboia, and of Champaa which abutteth vpon the Cauchin-shinas. This Kingdome of the Lass, or Sions Maons, was funded by the Bramas (of the which we will speake presently) in the yeere of fiftie fixe, and among some which they brought captine to Pega ther brought some (binas which the Lass held Captines, as one George Mello affirmed vinto met, which went for Captayne of the Voyage to Pegu. And though commonly there be no Warres betweene these Lass and the Chinas, because of the great Mountaynes that are betweene them, 40 on the which the Chinas have good forces on that tide in the Province of Camfi, which doth confine with these and with the Bramas: and in the forces they have continually men in Garrifon for the defence of those parts: there bee notwithstanding, continually assults on the one fide and of the other : whereby the Lass might have fome Chinas captive. Before that thefe Lass were subdued by the Bramas, they carryed to Sion, to Camboia, and to Pegu some very good Muske and Gold, whereof is affirmed to be great flore in that Countrey, and these people having Muske, makes a conjecture the great store of Muske which the Chinas have, they get it from the many healts that are in the Confines of this Kingdome in the Province of Comf, from whence they bring it.

Muske what

The Muske is the flesh and bloud of certayne beasts, which they say, to be as bigge as Foxes, 50 the which beaten with flrokes and killed, they tye the skinne with the flesh together in lumps, the which they cut after the flesh is rotten, and so they sell it, which the Portuguls do call Muske Cods. And when it commeth fresh, presently it appeareth to be rotten flesh and bloud: the rest they fell loofe, holding these Cods for the finer Muske. Returning to the Lass, whereof we were speaking, these be the Wares which they brought to the aboue-said Kingdomes, carrying in returne Cotton-clothes and other things they had need of. This people is not very browne, they weare their haireall cut round viderneath, and all the rest aboue ruffled, raying it many times vpward with their hands, that it remayneth to them like a Cap, and serueth in Head of one, for they weare nothing on their heads; they goenaked from the middle vpward, and from the hips downward, they weare certayne Cotton-clothes girt about them all white: the women goe couered from the brefts to the halfe legge: they have their faces some-what like the Chinas, they 62 have the same Heathenish Ceremonies that the Pegus and Siones, and the Camboias: The Priests of their Idols doe weare yellow clothes girt about as the rest of the people, and a certayne manner of yellow Copes, with certayne folds and feames in which they hold their Superflitions.

Or this people I faw many in Camboia, which remayned there the yeere before by the way of Traffique, and that yeare that I was there, they came not because of the Warres, wherein(as I faid) they faid they were subdued by the Bramas.

Thele Lass came to Camboia, downe a River many daies Iournie, which they fay, to have his beginning in China, as many others which runne into the Sea of India : it hath eight, fifteene, and twentie fathome water, as my felfe faw by experience in agreat part of it; it paffeth through many vnknowne and defart Countries of great Woods and Forrests, where there are innumerable Elephants, and many Buffes, of which I law many wild in that Countrie, and Me- River of the rus, which is like a good Mule, and certayne beafts which in that Countrie they call Bades: of Last Io the which the Male have a pointleffe and blunt Horne in their fore-head, and fome of the Menu are Hornes are footted with fingular colours, and others all blacke, others of a waxe colour, but they kind of wild haue no vertue, but only for the Hemorroides, or Piles: and after the Elephant there is no other Redu are the greater beaft; the haire of it is browne and footed like an Elephant, the head like a Cow, and it Rhinocerotes hath a great lumpe of flesh that falleth vpon his head, whereof I did eate travelling in those by the forepares. There are also many other wilde Beaftes. There bee some Thorny Trees, like Limons head underand Oranges, and many wilde Grapes through the Woodes. When these Lass doe re- flandshe faces turne to their Councrie, going against the streame, they goe in three moneths. This River caufeth a wonder in the Land of Camboia, worthy of reciting. Comming neere to a place which the fore-head. they call Chudurmuch, which is twelve leagues from the principall Citie of Camboia, it maketh Coudurmuch. 20 a passage to another River which commeth from a great Lake, that is in the vetermost parts of Camboia, and hath Sians, on the other fide : in the middelt of the which his bigneffe being great, Larth yee can fee no Land on neither-fide, and this River paffeth by Locob, which is the principall Citie of Cambona, vnto Chudurmuch: the waters of this River, which is also verie great, the most of them doe paffe to the River that commeth from the Lass, neere to (budurinuch, and the reft doe run downe the River directly to the Sea, when the great Winter floudes doe come, which happen when it raines not in the Countries of Camboia. The many waters which doe come by Siller. the River that commeth from the Laos, which there they call Sifter, doe make a paffage right against Chadarmach, to the River that passeth through Lock, with so great furie, that where the waters of Leech did run downward, by multitude of the other that entreth into it, they are fresh Ruser ac turned backe and run vpward with a great current : in fort that it overfloweth all the Countrie running vp of Cambois, whereby all the Countrie is not travelled in the time of these flouds, but in Boates, without Sesand they make their Houses all with high lofts, and underneath they are all overflowne, and force. fometimes these flouds are so high, that they are forced to make higher Roomes with Canes to keepe their houshold-stuffe in, and to lodge themselues. This River runneth vpward from July to September, and with the passing from the River that commeth from the Lass, (or from the River Siftor, which is his proper name) of fo many waters to the River of Loech, it doth not leave his running to the Sea, making below verie great armes, and goeth verie high over-flowing many Countries downward, but not so much as aboue. The Portugals did shew mee in Loech a field, a great hill of Earth, over the which they affirmed that in the time of the flouds a great 40 ship that was made in the Countrie did passe without touching, which ship might well have sayled from India to Portugall.

Beyond these Lass, tollow the Brames, which is a great people, and very rich of Goldand Precious stones, chiefly of Rubies. It is a proud Nation and valiant, these are now Lords of Pegu, which subdued it by force of Armes some yeares before they subdued the Lass, they are men of good complexion, and well made, they are browne. They have Pegu and part of Bengala toward the Sea of India. It is a Countrey very scarce of victuals, they apparell themselves as we faid of the Lass, but that their clothes are fine, and many do weare them painted or wrought: they are also somewhat like the Chinas in the faces, they have very rich and gallant shippings garnished with Gold, in the which they sayle in the Rivers: they vse Veffels of Gold and of 50 Siluer, their Houses are of Timber very well wrought, the Kingdome is very great, they have not commonly warre with the Chinas, because of the great Mountaynes that are between the one and the other, and because the Chinas are well fortified on that fide: notwithstanding this, fometimes there are Robbers on the one side, and the other that doe make affaults, whereby the Chinas haue some Bramas Captiues, as some Portugals which were Captiues in those parts, which faw them did affirme, and did speake with them in the great Citie of Cams: and these flames told them, that from thence it was not very farre to Brama, and that in Pegu, they had

There followeth along the China beyond the Bramas, the Kingdome of the Paranes, which The Paranes. now are Lords of Bengala, and after them the Mogores. Beyond these Mogores there runneth along the Chima, the Tartarians, which doe extend themselves from Mogor to the Lake Meetis and the River Thanais, which is a very great Kingdome and of much and innumerable people. This people are commonly red and not white, they goe naked from the waite vpward, they eateraw fielh, and anoint themselves with the bloud of it: whereby commonly they are flinking and have an ill fent.

Mountaynes,

It was affirmed to the Portugals which were Captines, and in Prifon in their Dungeons, in the yeare 1 < 0. that some yeares there is Truce betweene the Chinas and the Tartarians : and in the Tattarian rodes fame yeare the Tartarians made a great entry in China, in the which they tooke a very prine cipall Citie from them : but a great number of people of the Chinas comming and belieging the Citie, and not being able to enter it by force of Armes, by the Councell of a man of low degree, they had a meanes whereby they killed them and their Horses, and remayned Lords againe of the Citie. The same Portugals which afterward were set at libertie, affirmed, that all the Prisoners made great Feasts, and made a great stirre when the Tartarians made this m entry, with the hope of being fet at libertie by the meanes of the Tartarians, if they did pol-

In the Citie of Cantan I faw many Tartarians Captines, which have no other captinitie then to serue for men at Armes in other places farre from Tartarie, and they weare for a difference red Caps, in all the reft they are like the Chinas with whom they line : they have for their maintenance a certayne stipend of the King, which they have paid them without faile. The China lowed the diui- call them Tatos, for they cannot pronounce the Letter r. Aboue the Lake where Thanais hath his beginning, they doe confront with the skirts of high Almayne, although on the fide of Europe, Country into and betweene them and Almayne are Hils that doe divide them: and of these people of the forces or King - skirts of the Mountaines, the Chinas fay that the King of Chinas hath many men of Warre in 30 pay, that doe keepe the weake paffages and the Wals on the fide of the Tartarians: and fay, &c. which wee they are great men with great Beards, and weare cut Hole, and Caps, and blunt Swords, and referre to later a Portugall that was carryed captine the Land inward, told me that he heard the Chinas fay, that they called their . ExEing to intreate of the Citie of Cantan, I give first a warning to the Readers , thatamong many Noble Cities, Cantan is one leffe Noble then many of China; and farte inferiour in building then many other: although it be more populous then many; this is faid by all them that faw it, and travelled within the Land, where they faw many other. This aduice prefupposed, it is to be noted, that Cantan in his compasse, is of very strong Wals, very well made, and of a good height, and to the light they feeme almost new, beeing eighteene hundred yeares since they were made, as the Chinas did affirme : they are very cleane 50 without any cleft, hole, or rift, or any thing threatning ruine. They are of free flone about 2 mans height, and from thence vpward of brickes made of a clay like vnto that of the Porceline Dishes, whence it causeth them to bee so strong, that I building a Chappell in Malaca, one of thele (which was brought from China) could (carfly bee broken with a good Pick-axe. Jointly with this there is in this Citie and in all the reft an Officer of the King which onely hath care to ouer-fee the Wals, for the which he hath a good stipend. And enery yeare when the Gouernour of the Borders commeth to visit the Prouince, hee doth visit this as well as the other Offcers, to know if he doth well his Office, and finding him in any fault, or negligence, hee is put from his Office, and punished. And if he standeth in need of any expence for the mending of the Walls, the Over-feer of the Rents is bound to give him that which is necessarie, ander paine, 60 that if the mending remayneth vindone, he shall bee well punished. For this cause the Wals of all the Cities are continually kept found and in good reparation. These Walles are within the Citie little more then the walke of the same Citie in their height, which is the cause of beeing much more cooler. The Wals have in compaffe 12:50, paces, and it hath eighty three Bulwarks.

CHAP. 10, S.2. Large description of Cantan a Citie of China.

This Citie (and so all therest) hath on the one side the River, along the which, as well this as the reit are built almost in a Valley; and on the other fide they have a Ditch full of water of a Town duch. good breadth, betweene the which and the wall remayneth a good diffance where there may runne together a good troupe of people, and the Earth that was taken out of the Ditch, was call betweene it and the wall, whereby the foot of the wall remayneth a great deale higher then the other ground. Besides the dirch, notwith standing, this wall hath a great blemish, for it hath on the contrariofide to the River without the wals, and the ditch a little, Hillocke that difcouereth all the Citie within the wals.

(Elis wall both feuen gates : the entries of the which are sumptions and high , strong and The Gates. To well made, wattle Pinacles aboue, not square but made like steps. The other places of the wals have no Pinacles: the wall at the entring of the gates is twelve paces thicke : the gates ate all oner plated with Iron, and all of them have their draw-bridges very strong, which are alwayes Draw-bridges. vp, and are never let downe, but are ready against they be needfull: all the gates at the entrings haue Courts, and the Courts that are toward the fide of the Suburbs, which lyethalong the Ri- Gate courts. uer haue eucry, one three gates, one in the front and two on the fides, which remayne for the fervice of the te that Ive along the wall, the wals of the Courts are almost of the height of them within the gate which is in the front in the Court, is like voto that of the wals within ; it hath allog straw bridge; the gates which are in the fide of the Courts are small. The Courts that are on the other-fide of the field where no Suburbe is , have no more but one gate , and this not

20 right against that of the walls, but stand on the one side: the freets of the Citie are all drawne by a Line very straight without any manner of making a nooke or winding: all the croffe wayes are as flraight, as the flregts : in fort that there is neyther ffreet nor traverie that maleth any tur. Strait freets ning. All the dreets and traueries are very well paued, the pauements going along the Honies, and paued. and lower in the middeft for the course of water; the principall freetes have triumphant Atches which doe croffe them, high and very well made, which make the ffreets very beautifull. and enoble the Citie: the principall streets have along the Houses close Portals, in the which and vader the Arches many things are fold.

The Houses of them which rule the Countrey, are at the entrings very semptuous, with high Houses of Mar Portals, great and well wrought of Masons worker they have in the fore-front very great gates giftrates. 30 like the gates of a Civic; with two Giants painted with Clubs in their hands : I faw foure in one Pagode, (which is a Temple of Idols) drawnenaturally from fome, which they fay, the King hath to keepe his weaked passages from Tartaria. They are of great members, of about twelge or thirteene spans high, On the street side it hath right against the principall Porch a receite not very great. It hash built along the street a good wall of a good height right against the Court.

gate, that when the gate is open they that are within may not be gazed on by them that goe by the firet; this gate ferneth not, neither is it opened but for dispatching of matters of luffice. and the principal of the House goe in and out at them; and others that are as honourable or more then they : at the one fide of this principall gate is another very great gate, but not fo big as the principall, which is for the feruice of the House, and of the Prifoners when the principall 40 gate is shut : and when this principall gate is shut , they set a glued Paper crosse over both the leaues, on which is written the name or firme of the principall of the House, and for to open it againe, an Officer of the House bringeth the same firme or marke on a playstered board to the Porter; that hee may open it, without the which token hee may not open it ynder a great punishment.

Entring by this gate, there is a great Court and almost square, which is almost a Horse-race. and it hatha Gallery little leffe then the length of the gate, which leadeth straight from the gate to a very great Table that stands at the end of the Court, the which is all paued with square flones with leanings as high as a mans waste, and it is high in the entry of the gate, and there Sandrie of remayneth onely one step in the end of it to the Table, and the course in the sides of the Galle-50 ty is low, that they goe downe to it by steps: this Gallery of the middest is of such respect a- high Magimong them, that in no wife it is lawfull for any one to palle through it, but onely some of the fleater. chiefest of the House, or others as great or greater then they; and those that goe to nego late with the Officer of the Houle when they enter in at the gate, they must goe presently to one fide, going downe to the Court which hath very great Trees for shaddow, and they goe vp againe by steps vnto the Table about faid, which is at the end of the Court, which is very great. In the end of this Table in all his length there is a step, and within the step a very great walke, all paued with square stones as the Table without it, and very high and all wrought with Mafons worke : in the middeft of it leaning to the wall of the front are two Chaires, with two Tables before them, a little distant the one from the other, one of them, which stands on the 60 left hand, serueth for the Gouernour of that house, and that of the right hand is void, for if there should come another of a higher dignitie then hee, to sit him downe. To every one of the sides there are two spaces which runne behind this Gouernour, and are of a good breadth, having placed along the fides of these two spaces in every one five Chaires with five Tables before them, and as the distance from them to the principall Governour is good, they remayne though behind,

Officers of the House, which are many, as we will shew in their place. On every fide of the Court are very great Prifors and great Lodgings, as well for the law. lours (which allo are of great authoritie) as for the Watches that watch by night and by day, but neither these Prisons nor the Chambers of the Ministers of them, nor the Lodgines of the chiefe of the House are seene outward, for they are serued of all things, the doores that and bene continually their Porters. There are in Comen toure of these Houses for foure principall Off. continuary their reacts. An the Citie, that is, the Head of the Promisee there are success there are Houses: in Cantan there are but foure; for as the Governour of Cantan is also Governour of Cantan he is not refident in Cantan, but in a Citie that is in the Borders of one of the Provinces, that the recourse in the Affaires of both the Proninces may be the easier. Besides, these principall Houfes of the chiefe Gouernours, there are many other in Cantan, the which though they bee not of fo great Maieflie as they, they are notwithflanding very great, of other inferiour Officers, and chiefly those of the chiefe laylour which are very great. There is on the wals of Cantan, on the contrary fide of the River a high Towre all close behind, that they which are in it may not be feene, nor gazed on from the Hillocke or Mount aforefaid, that was without the wals, and it in built in length along the wall, to that it is longer then broad, and it is all made in Galleries very fumpenous, from whence they discouer all the Cicie, and the Marshes and Fields beyond the River, which ferueth for the recreation of them that rule. In the other Cities are fuch butdings which terue for recreation, many and very fumptuous, and of fingular building.

The Houses of the common people in the outward flow, are not commonly very faire, but Primare houses, within are much to be admired; for commonly they are white as Milke, that they feeme like fleeked Paper, they are paued with fquere itones : along the ground; of a spanne little more or leffe, they are dyed with Vermilion, or almost blacke; the Timber is all very smooth and even. and finely wrought and placed, that it feemeth to be all polished, or dyed, or in white, and fome there is in white to faire and pleasant to the fight, waterd Damaske-like, as it were Gold, and so bright that they should doe it injurie in painting it. I confesse, in truth, that I never faw fo fine Timber as that. It hath after the Houle that is at the entrie , a Court with folices of finall to Trees; and Bowers with a faire little Fountayne : and then at the entring of the House where the women doe with-draw themselves, it hath a certaine manner of a Gallery open before towards the Court, where they have verie great Cubboards finely wrought , which takes the one square of the House, in the which they have their Oratories, and Gods made of Wood, or of Clay: these Oratories are more or lesse curious according to the abilitie of everie one; all the Houses are tiled with very good Tiles, better, and of more continuance then ours : for besides. they being well made, they are of verie good Clay: those which receive the water are broad and short, and the uppermost that close, the other are narrower, and at the ends toward the street fide, they are garnished with fine Workes made of Lime : for many yeares they have no need to be tiled againe, for as the Clay is very good, they are not fo mouldring as ours, or fo rough, but 40 they are very smooth and warme, and beeing so well set they breed no filthinesse. There bee many Houses faire within, and very few with Lofts, the most are low Houses,

They have in the middest of the Cities Temple of Idols with high Towres, the wals of the

which we will speake of hereafter : they have their Melquit with Alegran very high with his Pinacle on the top. The Suburbes without are very great and of many Houses, in such fort that fome Portugals would have compared them in bigneffe with them of Lifton, but to mee and to others they feemed leffe, though they bee bigger and of more Houses then the Citie within the wals. It is very populous, and the people is so much, that at the entring of the gates on the Ri-uer fide yee can scarce get through. Commonly the people that goeth out and in . doe cry and manding to enquire what victuals were spent every day, it was found to spend only fine or fixe thousand Porkes, and ten or eleven thousand Duckes; besides which, they eate great store of Beeues and Buffes, and many Hens, and an infinitedeale of fish, whereof the Markets and streets are full, and many Frogs and Shel-fish, great store of Fruits and all other Pulse. Hereby little more or lesse may be seene what people are in Cantan, and whether it may bee compared with

The Houses of the Suburbes are like those of the wals within; the streetes are so well and leuelled by Line as those within, and all for the most part paued also, and some of them are verie broad, and have triumphant Arches, but very few. Some fireets, as well without as within the wals, on the one fide and the other along the Houses, have Trees for to make tha lowes. In all the Suburb-gates. Atreets of the Suburbs at the ends of them are gates with Special Porters, whose Office is to 62 locke them every night winder paine of fore pumishment, and every street hath a Constable and a Tayle. He stands bound, either to veeld the Malefactor which by night doth any harme in the ilrect, are to pay for it; wherefore all the streets have every night a watch, the Neighbours diCHAP. 10. S.2. uiding themselves in quarters: and they make every night fixe quarters or watches, and for a Warcher. figne that they are awake, in every ffreet they found a Drumme, where they have all the night a Lanthorne with a light. The gazes of the Citie are thut as foone as it is night, and on the two leaues is fet a paper, with the chiefe Captaines marke on every one of them, and they are opened with the Sunne, with a token from the fane Captaine to them all, with his marke written Here followed on a white boord. Euery gate hath a Captaine, a very honelt man, and euery one hath certaine much of other Souldiers, which continually doe watch every one of the Gates by day and by night.

In fome Ciries the water runnerth almost thorow every street, and on the one sue and the same one other of the fireter are Tables made of stone, for the common service of the people; and thought of the same of no row all the fireets are very good and well wrought Bridges to paffe from one fide to another : not, but receiand thorow the middest of the streets is great trafficke by water that goe from one place to an- genec from Pe other. In those places whereby the water entreth into the Citie, they have made in the walls rea, I referre very good gates, which have very strong Iron grates for to shut by night : and the most of the youtohim, ffreets to the land inward are very well pured with ftone, and (where is no ftone) with small Other China tyle. In all the Mountaines and Hills where there are wayes, they are very well made, cut with High-wayes. the Pick-aze, and paued where they are needfull. This is one of the good works of China, and it is very generall in enery place of it. Many Hills on the fide of the Brams, and of the Lass, are cut in fleps, very well made; and in the height of the Hill is made a low place, very well cut; in the which is a very high Towre, which aboue doth equall with the highest of the Mountain. 20 which is very strong, the wall of one of the Towres was measured at the entring of the gates, and it was fixe fathome thicke and an halfe. There are on this fide many of these workes, and fo there may be in other places. I heard of a Gentleman of credit, called Galiote Perera, Bro. Galiote Perera ther to the chiefe Inflice of Arrayolos, which abode in Canfi, being Captine, that (with the houses of these kinsmen of the King, being so many and so great) the Citie was so bigge that hoofes of thefe kindmen of the King, being to many another state show in it: and so she had it it feemed they occupied very little of it, and make a very little show in it: and so she had it is feemed they occupied very little of it, and make a very little show in it: and so she had it written in a Rudder of his, whence I tooke a great deale * of that which is heere spoken of: wheten in a Adduct of the, whether a better the first hide in it felfe the multitude and greatnesse of the Civie did hide in it felfe the multitude and greatnesse of omitted their houses,

As in the Countrey there is great store of Timber and very cheape, and much Iron and cheap, 30 and it is very good, there are infinite number of thips and thippings; for through the Country Store of thips are infinite Groues of Firre trees, and other trees, whereby it is easie for any one though of a ping. little fubitance, to make a ship and have shippings, and this causeth the great profit and gayne that is of them with the necessitie the Countrey hath of them : for it hath not onely a great number of Ilands along ft the coast, but also a very great coast where they Naugate: and besides this, all China within is nauigated, and runne through Rivers which doe cut and water it all, which are many and very great. So that yee may fayle to the ends of the Land, and goe in thippings. Any Capraine along the coast may in a little sp ce icyne two hundred, three hundred, even to a thouland ships, if hee stand in need for to fight. And there is no small Townsalong

the River that is not plentifull in small and great ships. Along the Citie of Cantan, more then 40 halre a league off the River, is so great a multitule of thipping, that it is a wonderfull thing to fee them, and that which is most to wonder, is that, that this multitude never decreaseth nor fayleth almost all the yeere: for if thirty, forty, or an hundred goe forth one day, as many doe come in againe the next: Ifay, the multitude never to diminish nor fayle, for though sometime there be more, some lesse, alwaies there remaynesh a maruellous multitude: and that which is more, all those that goe forth, goe laden; and all that come in, come laden; carrying goods, and bringing goods: and that which sheweth much the noblenesse of the Countrey, the plentie and riches thereof is, that all there thips bringing great flore of merchandile of Clothes, Silkes, prouifions and other goods, some doe goe into the Land, others come from within the Land, and nothing commeth form without China, neither goeth out of it: and that which the Por- Riches of Chi-

50 tugals doe carrie, and some that they of Syam doe carrie, is so little in comparison of the great na initialite. trafficke of the Countrey, that it almost remayneth as nothing, and vnperceived; feeing that out of China there goeth no more but that which the Portugals, and they of Syam doe carrie; which is as much as though they brought nothing out or China, fine or fixe flups comming laden with Silke and Porcelane: the great plentie and riches of the Countrey doth this, that it can sustayne it selfe alone: Pepper and luone which is the principall that the Portugals doe carrie, a man may well line without it, and the trafficke of merchandise that is in this Countrie, is in all the Cities within the Land, which as we have faid, are almost all built along the Rivers. The Chinas have a common speech for to shew the noblenesse of their Kingdome, that the King Prouerb. of China can make a Bridge of ships from China vnto Malaca, which are neere fine hundred

60 leagues, the which though it feemeth it cannot be, yet by Metaphor it fignifieth the greatnetic or China, and the multitude of thips that of it felfe it can make.

The great ships they call lunks; besides which there are ships for warre, made like great ships, lunkes for war to the which they make great Fore-catiles and high, and likewife abafte, to fight from them. Ship-fights, insuch manner that they ouer-master their adversaries, and because they vie no Ordnance, all NoOrdnance.

their vie is to come many together, and compassing the adversaries ship, they boord it : and at the first on-let they cast a great deale of Lime to blinde the aductaries, and as well from the Caitles as from the tops they cast many sharpe pikes burned at the end, which serve for Tondarts, of a very stiffe wood; they wie also great store of stone, and the chiefest they labour for. is to breake with their thips the dead workes of their adverfaries, that they may be mafters on uer chem, having them under them, and being destitute of any thing to shelter them; and as foone as they can enter, they come to the Pike or handy-blowes, for the which they have long Pikes, and broad-pointed Swords hanging at their fides. There bee other Iunkes for lading of goods, but they are not so high as those of warre, though there bee some very great. All these thips as well of warre as of burthen vie two Oares ashead: they are very great, and toure or fine 10 men doe rowe every one of them , laying them along the ship they move them with such a fleight, that they make the ship goe forward, and they helpe very much for to goe out and in at a barre, and fetting upon the enemies for to board them : they call thefe Oares, Liollies : in all manner of their shippings they vie the Lioslios, neither doe they vie any other manner of Oares in any kinde of thipping. There be other leffer thippings then Linkes, fomewhat long, called Bancones, they beare three O ares on a fide, and rowe very well, and loade a great deale of goods: there be other leffe, called Lanteau, which have fixe or feuen oares on a fide, which doe rowe very Iwift, and bears a good burthen also: and these two forts of sh ps, viz. Bancones and Lanteas, because they are switt, the threeues doe commonly vie. The rowing of these Oares is standing, two men at enery Oare, enery one of his side, setting one foot forward, another backward. In 10 the lunkes goe foure, fiue, or fixe men at an Oare.

They vie also certaine shippings very long , like vnto Gallies, without Oares or beake-head, which doe lade great store of goods: and they make them so long, because lading bringing a great burden they may tayle the better by the Rivers, which fometimes are not rough. They have many other shippings of burther, which is superfluous to tell of every one. There be many imall boats of poore people, in which are husband and wife, and children, and they have no other dwelling but in their boat in a middle decke, for defence of the Sunne, and of the raine: as also have the Bancones, and Lanteas, and others which wee faid were like Gallies, and these deckes are in such fort, that vinder them are very good lodgings and chambers in the great ships, in these of the poore, they are much inferiour: there they breed their Pigs, their Hennes, and there they have also their poore little Garden, and there they have all their poore state and harbouring. The men goe to freke worke about the Citie to helpe to maintayne their little house; the women goe in the boats, and with a long cane that reacheth well to the bottome of the River (at the end of the which is a little basket made of rods, wherewith they get shellfi.h) with their industrie, and passing of people from one side to another, they helpe to sustaine their hou'hold. These poore people not withit anding doe not line so poorely and beggarly in their apparell, as those which line poorely in Portugal. There are other great shippings, wherein is the stocke of them both ", which have great lodgings where they may bestow a great deale of stuffe : these have a great stocke; they have certaine Cages made all the length of the

thip with canes, in which they keepe two or three thousand Duckes, more or leffe as the veffell 40

the notile they make at their going forth is wonderfull to fee them goe tumbling one ouer another, for the great abundance or mem, and the time they take in going out; they feed all the Duck weeders day untill night among the fields of Rice, those which are owners of the shipping doe receive a fee of them that owe the fields, for letting them feed in them, for they doe cleanfe them, eating the graffe that groweth among them. When night commeth they call with a little Taber; and though they be in fundry Barkes, every one knowes their owne by the found of the Ta- 10 ber, and goe vnto it; and because alwaies in time some remayne without that come not in, there are enery where many flockes of wilde Duckes , and likewise of Geese. When I saw such a multitude of Duckes in every one of these Barkes, and all of one bignesse, and thinking they could not be hatched by Duckes or Hens, for if it were fo, fome would have beene bigger then fome, feeing fo many could not be hatched in one, two, or fifteene dayes, I was willing to know how they hatched them; and they told mee, it was in one of two forts. In Summer, laying two or three thousand Egs in the dung, and with the heate of the weather and the dung, the Egsare hatched. In the Winter, they make a Hurdle of canes very great, upon the which they lay this great number of Egges, under the which they make a flacke fire, continuing it of one fort a few dayes till the Egges be hatched. And because they are hatched in this fort, there are fo many of one bigneffe, and all along the River are many of these Barkes, whereby the Coun-

There are fome ships wherein the Rulers doe sayle, which have very high lodgings, and within houses very well made, gilt, rich, and very sumptions: and on the one side, and the other they have great windowes with their Nets woven of Silke, and very fine fmall rods fet before them, that they within feeing all them without, may not bee feene of them. Toward the fide of the Lass and the Bramaes, are continually watches and wards in the Rivers in many thips . euen a whole moneths lourney in length vnto the Citie of Canfi: these ships are in the places Ships for where the Rivers make any armes, because of the many theeues which commonly are in these guard. parts, being the vttermost of the Kingdome : and because the Rivers have many armes, many thips are placed in those parts: in every place where these shippings are, there bee two small in ps, which continually doe goe night and day from one watch to another, because they are vety iwift, and those of the great ships doe divide themselves into watches at their quarters, for to to watch as well in the small as in the great ones. The ships of passage goe alwaies a great num- Fleet.

ber together, that they may defend themselves, one another, while the ships of warre, and the watches do come to them, and at the watch where they make night, there they flay til the morning, and by the small boats they are delivered safe to the next watch forward, and so from watch to watch they are accompanied of the small vessels till they bee set in fafetie. From the Citic of Donches, that is, where the Governour of Confi and Canan is refident, voto the bounds of the Province of Canfi, which are places more dangerous, are continually Armadas of fortic or fiftie hips. All thefe watches are paid of the common Rents of the Kingdome. China is almost all a well husbanded Country : for as the Country is well inhabited, and Industry engle people in abundance, and the men ipenders, and vling themselves very deliciously in eating and of plentie, 20 drinking, and apparell, and in the other feruices of their houses, especially that they are great eaters, every one laboureth to get a living, and every one feeketh wayes to earne their food, and how to maintayne their great expences. A great helpe to this is the idle people to bee much Idleneffe haabhorred in this Countrey, and are very odious vnto the rest, and that laboureth not shall not ted. eate, for commonly there is none that doe give almes to the Poore; wherefore, if any poore did aske almes of a Portugal and he did give it him, the Chinas did laugh at them, and in mockage Almes detis. faid: why sineft thou almes to thi, which is a Knaue, let him goe and earne it : onely fome le- dec iters have some reward, going to some high placegather the people, and telleth them some fables to get fomething. The Fathers and Prietts of their Idols are commonly abhorred and not effecmed, because they hold them for idle people, and the Rulers for any light fault doe not foare

30 them, but giue them many ftripes. Wherefore, a Ruler whipping once before a Portmed a Prieft Idle Hollof theirs; and he asking him wherefore he did vie their Priests foill, and held them in folittle Priests punishefterme, antiwered him thele are idle and wretched Knaues. One day, I, and certaine Portugal; ed with visual entring into the house of the Quer-feer of the goods. about the deliurite of certaine Portugal; influe of proentring into the house of the Ouer-feer of the goods, about the deliverie of certayne Portngal, fane buile Ruthat were in prison, because the matter belonged to him, for the great profit that came thereof lers, which to the King, much people came in with vs to fee vs, among the which there was a Prieft : af- made their foone as the Ruler faid, Set them downe, all of them ran away in great hafte, the Priest running foules the least as all the reft, for feare of the whip.

Every one laboureth to feeke a living; for that which hee earneth hee enjoyeth freely, and of themselves fpends it as he will, and that which is left him at his death remaynes to his children and grand- their goods. 40 children, paying onely duries Royall, aswell of the fruits that they gather, as of the goods they deale in, which are not heavie. The greatest Tribute they have, is every married man, or that hath houle by himfelfe, payoth for every person in his house two Mazes, which are fixtie Reys. that is ad-From Champaa, which as we aid, doth confine with Cauchinchina vnto India, are many vnpro- Tyrannie fitable grounds, and made Wilderneffes and Woods, and the men are generally little curious to growes poore get or gather togeth r, for they neuer gayne or get to much but it is tyrannized from them, that which they have is onely theirs as long as the King lifteth, and no more. In fuch fort that as foone as the King knoweth that any of their officers hath much money, hee commandeth him to bee pas in prison, and they vie him so hardly, that they make him cast all that hee hath gotten: wherefore there are many in those parts, that if they get any thing or money one day or one 50 weeke, they will not lab our till they confirme all that they have earned in eating and drinking, and they doe it because if any tyrannie should chance to come, they may finde nothing to take from them. From hence it commeth, as I fay, that they have in India many grounds in divers places vnprofitable; which is not fo in China, for every one enjoyeth the fruits of his labour. Hence it commeth that all the ground that in China can yeeld any kinde of fruit receiving bandrie, feede, is husbanded. The high places which are not to good for Corne, have very faire Grones of Pine Trees, fowing also betweene them some Pulse where it may be : in the drie Lands and stiffe they fow Wheate and Pulie: in the Marshes which are overflowed, which are many and very long, they fow Rice : and some of these Marshes doe yeeld two or three Crops a yeere. Onely the Mountaynes that are high and beaten with the weather, and are not fit to plant any thing, 60 remayne vnprofitable. There is nothing loft in the Countrey bee it never for the bones, as well of Dogs as of other Beafts, they doe vie, making toyes, and with workes in flead of Iu > Nothing loft, rie, they fet them in Tables, Beds, and other faire things : they lofe not a Ragge of any qualitie, for as well of the fine as of the course, that are not of Wooli, they make fine and course Paper, Paperofduers and they make Paper of barkes of Trees, and of Canes, and of filken Ragges, and in the Paper matters.

It is a thing worth the noting, that the blinde haue a labour appointed them for to get their impotent per- food, which is to ferue in a Horie-Mill like Hories grinding Corne; and commonly where is a horse-mill there are two, because two going together, they may recreate themselves in talking one with another, as I faw them going about with Fannes in their hands cooling themselves. and talking very friendly. The blinde Women are the common Women, and they have Nurces that doe dreffe them and paint them with Vermillion and Cerufe, and receive the wages of their enill vie. The lame and the creeple which either haue no kindred within a certayne degree, or if they have them and they doe not prouide for them that which is necessarie, or are not able to helpe them, they make their Petition to the Ouer-feer of the goods of the King, and his kindred 10 being examined by his Officers, if among them are any that can maintayne them, they doe binde the neerest to take them to them to their charge and maintayne them , and if their kindred bee not able to maintayne them, or if they have no kindred in the Countrey, the Ouer-feer of the goodscommandeth they be received into the Kings Hospitall: for the King hath in all the Cities great Hospitals which have many lodgings within a great inclosure. And the Officen of the Hospitall are bound to administer to those that are bedied all things necessarie, for the which there are sufficient Rents appointed out of the Kings Exchequer. The lame that keepe not their bed, have every moneth a certayne quantitie of Rice, with the which, and with some Hens or a Pigge, which they bring up in the Hospitall, they have fufficient to maintayne themselves, and all these things are very well paid without faile: and because commonly those which are recei-40 ued into these Hospitals are incurable, they receive them for life : and all those which are receiued by commandement of the Ouer-feer, are enrolled, and enery yeere the Officers of the Hospitall doe yeeld account of the expenses, and of the promison of the poorelicke, and if any fault or negligence bee found in them of that which they are bound to doe, without remission they are well punished for it.

Of their mechanicall Trades, Merchandises and Moneyes: their provisions of Flesh and Fish; the persons and attyre of Men and Women: their Feasts.

Here are in this Countrey many workmen of all Trades, and great abundance of all things necessarie for the common vie, and so it is requisite, for the people is infinite. And because shopes are the thing that most is spent, there are more workmen of Shoo-makers then of any other Trade. In Cantan are two particular freets of Shoomakers very long, one where they fell rich shooes, and of tilke, another where they fell common shoots of leather : and besides these two streets, there are many workmen scattered about 60 the Citie. The rich Bootes and Shooes, are covered with coloured tilke, embroydered over with twist, of very fine workes, and there be Bootes from ten Crownes, to one Crowne price, and shooes of two Crownes and thence downward, and in some places are shooes of three pence. So that the rich and the very poore may weare shooes : and the rich as they list; the shooes of three mence, or of a Riell pare of thraw, and I fay of three pence, for there is money chat antwerethour three pence. There bee many sich husbandomen , that let men by the waves with many pichale Grawen thoses for chargeons: Franklers Wind it is no wonder to hatte this charrie Almes not among their lufidele ,) for in the parts of the Judie are many rich Genetite which hatte very great almes the fruit among sweet superment of the state of the months and the state of the notice, white-interpretation community materiality gramma roots to at the poors or want quaticies focust, that will come thinhort robust rand by the wayer they had be mire flet by gird drinker to the poors I concllers.). Therefor also many Cappeners, and very good working of all manner of works. They have continually many Sores made of them forts, there exhibited with a very faine tamith, orbits painted, orbits byned with feether, and likewife of orbits. They In have containedly a great number of Charges made, forthe of very fairle white wood, and other fairely gilt and flumred bery finely wrodels.

They have also Cluston wherem the Rulers are carried on mens backs through the Citic, Chaires which are very rich, of a great price and wery faire : they have another manner of Chaires, which are high, very rich and pleafant all close, with a little window on tach fide very faire with a net made of luorie, or of Bone, or of Wood, through the which they that goe within doe fee on the one fide, and on the other of the freet withour being feene; thefe ferue for to carry the Women about the Citie when they got abroad. The feate is of the height of one of our Chaires. where they goe litting with their lege at longth. There be many of these Chaires very rich, and of a great price ; and there are tome plante, and have Piriacles on the tops very faire ; there are also many bed-steads very pleasant and very rich, all close found about, of wood finely wrought.

I being in Cantan there was a rich one made wtought with hickie; and of a fweet wood. A being to Commo retries was a tent one mane writing with come and a rest whom which they call Cayologue, and of Sandaluse, that was prized at four hundred Crownies, and of little Boxes gite, and Manndes, and Beakers, Deske, and Tables, all as well git as writh Silier is without mimber: Gold-fmiths, Silver-fmitles, Copper-finiths, Iron-lmiths, and of all other Trades there he many and perfect Workmen, and great abundance of things of every Trade, and very perfect. They vie inhnite Vessels of Latten: and from China they furnish all lade and Siam. with their Veffels, which in India they call Bategirin, and they are in every kind very perfect. They vie Skillets, and Channg-diffres, and other Velkels of cast Iron, and not only they doe cast their Veilels of Iron, hut after they are broken they bey them against or to re-call them. There 30 are many Merchants of pieces and Chathes of Salke, because they ipend many in the lame Countrie, and in Siam, and there are pieces of Damaske and Taffata among thinfillines for nich . that they bring them not to ve because they give them not for them what they are worth within the Land : they fell alfo great flore of time and comfe Berge of fundry cofours. There are many Silkes. Merchants of white and dyed Linnen cloth; for it is that which is most feet in the Countrie. They gave men piece of Linnen clock of about ten cubits, which was valued at tentie Crownes.

there is both fine and courfe as every one will have it.

And howfoener the Porcelane which is vied in all the Countrie of China, and in all India is Porcelane. of common Clay; notwithflanding, there it very much course Percelane, and other very fine and there is some that is lawfull to be fold commonly, for the Rulers onely vie it because it is red and 40 greene, and gilt, and yellow : tome of this is fold but very little, and that feeretly. And because there are many opinions among the Portugals which Trate not beene in China, about where this Porcelane is made, and touching the substance whereof it is made, some faying, that of Oysters finels, others of dung rotten of a long time, because they were not enformed of the truth. I thought it convenient to tell here the subfrance whereof it is made, according to the truth of Fables of it. them that faw it. The substance of the Porcelane is a white and foft Rone, and some is redde. which is not fo fine, or in better speaking, it is a hard clay, the which after well beating and grinding it and laying in Cifternes of water (which they have very well made of free-flone, and Howitismade some playstered, and they are very cleane) and after it is stirred in the water, of the Creame that remay neth on the top they make the very fine Porcelane : and fo the lower the couffer, and 50 of the dregs they make the coursest and base, which the poore people of China doe fie. They make them first as the potters doe any other vessell; after they are made, they drie them in the Sunne; and then paint them as they lift with Azure, which is fo fine as we fee : after these Pi-Aures are drie, they lay on the Glaffe, and then harden them. The principall freets of the Merchants, are the most principall freets , which have coverts on the one fide and on the other: notwithstanding, the chiefest sale of the Porcelane is in the Gates of the Cities, and enery Merchant hath at his doore written in a Table all that is fold Merchants within his shop: those which sell simples for medicines, haue at their doores tyed and hang. Tables, ing in a firing, a piece of every thing. There is in China great flore of Ruberbe, but it is not Kings Cubrought to Cantan, but fodden, there is none found raw. As the goods of China are very great flores, 60 and many, fo the rents which the King of China hath in every part of his Kingdome are very x Or Quarters.

great. Some China Merchanes did affirme that Cantan did yeeld enery yeere to the King three y Whi h is thousand Picos of Silver, and every three Picos make one Baar, every Baar harh foure Kintals, mountet to euery Kintall hath foure * Arrobas : fo that one Baar is fixteene Quarters, and three thousand weight of Su-Picos, making one thousand Baars, by consequence, one thousand Baars make y lixteene thouser, fand Quarters; and weedpeake of weight, for in Chine is no money of Gold or Silver, but one. ly of Braile, the Gold and Silver goeth by weight. But theseas they are popular people, thous occupied in the trafficke of the Countrie, it fremes they know not well the truth of this, and that the fumme is greater which is collected of the sents Royall, for the Countrie is very great. and the merchandite many and very substantiall, I was informed by meaner of the Rulers, which is a more certaine information, because the rents doe pase thorow their hands, that ithe rent of the Salt in Cantan did yeeld alone to the King 300. Paron of Silver, which doe make 100; Barr. Which are 400. Kintals, that are 1600. quarters of Silver. Every one bath a paire of scales and weights in his house, which all are exceedingly perfect. The weights that they commonly have, are from pert trownes to one, and from ten Tan-10 gas to one, one Tanga is nine pence. By the name of their Countrie 1 the leffer great weight is of one Tael, one Tael is fixe Mazes, one Maez is the Americat a Tanger: of the imall weights. the smallest is one Conderin, ten Conderins make one Tanga, or one Macz: one Conderin helb ten Caxos; and because the common that goeth in stead of money is Silver by weight, every one hath weights of his owne, as aboutfaid; for one laboureth by allthe meanes hee can to de ceine the other, none doe truft the scales and weights of the other, and every one that goth to buy in the Market, carrieth a weight and balance, and, broken Silver, and the balance is a little beame of Juorie with a weight hanging at the one end with a ftring yand on the other end a little scale, and the ftring of the weight runneth along by the beames; which hath his markes from one Conderin to ten, or of one Mazzynto ten. These scales serue for to buy by retale, for as to buy by groffe they have perfect scales very curious and fine, with very perfect weights. They carrie the Silver commonly full of mixture, and because they encrease it with the mixture, from hence it commeth that he which will make good markets in the Countrie of China, and that it may be cheape, carrieth Silver rather then goods, for hy the encrease which the Chinas make of the Silues with the mixture, they give the merchandise good and cheape for the Siluer. The Merchants are commonly falle and lyars.

Very Merchants.

There is great abundance of Rice in all the Countrie, for there are many marifhes, which yeeld two or three crops enery yeere. There is also much and very good Wheat, whereof they make very good Bread, which they learned to make of the Portugals; their vie before were Cakes of the same Wheat. There be many French Beanes, and other Pulse: there is great flore w of Beafe, and Buffes fielh, which is like Beefe : there are many Hens, Geefe, and innumerable Frogs.

Duckes; there are infinite Swine, which is the fielh they most lout : they make of the Hogs many fingular flitches, whereof the Portugals carrie an infinite number to the India, when they goe thither by way of trafficke. The Chinas doe esteeme the Porke fo much, that they give it to the ficke. They eate Frogs alfo, which are fold in great Tubs full of water at the gates, and they that fell them are bound to flay them. All floth is fold by weight alive, except Beefe, and Buffes fielh, and Porke, which commonly is fold by the pound, except if they doe buy it whole. for then they are to weigh it whole : and that it may weigh the more, they fill it first with meat and drinke: the Hens to make them weigh the more, they fill them likewife with water, and their crops full of fand and other things. The pound of the Hen, Goofe, Ducke, and Frogs, is 4 all at one price; the Porke, Beefe, and Buffes fielh is worth leffe, and all at one price. The fifth is exceeding much, and all very good, and it neuer wanteth in the markets: there be many Crabs, and Oysters, and other shell-hish, and all is very good: and of all these things the markets are full. The Markets are commonly at the gates of the Cities, and under the triumphant Arches which are in the large and principall streets, as we faid before, and along the Portals of the same ftreets : but not to fell here flesh or fish, for there be particular ftreets, excepting quicke flesh, which is fold every where.

Markets. Herbs.

Fruits.

There are many Garden-herbes, fc. Turneps, Radish, Cabage, and all smelling Herbs, Garleeke, Onions, and other herbes in great abundance. There are also many fruits, fed. Peaches, Damfons, and another manner of Plummes which wee have not, with long, round, and sharpe so stones at both ends, and of these they make Prunes: There are many Nuts, and very good, and many Chefnuts both small and great. There is a kinde of Apples that in the colour and rinde are like gray Peares, but in smell and taste better then they. There is a fruit whereof there are many Orchards, it groweth on great and large boughed trees, it is a fruit as bigge as a Plumme round and a little bigger, they cast the huske, and it is very singular and rare fruit, none can have his fill of it, for alwaies it leaueth a defire of more, though they eate neuer fo much, and doth no hurt. Of this fruit there is another kinde smaller , but the biggest is the best, they are called Lechias. There are Oranges, Figs, and many other fruits, which were to long to recite. And though there be particular streets of Victualling houses, yet there is through all the Citie almost in every ftreet of these houses. In these Victualling houses is great store of meate dressed. Ma- 60 ny Geele, Hennes, and Duckes roafted and fod, and store of other stells and fifth dreffed : I faw at one doore hanging, a whole Hog roafted, and let one aske where he will, for all is very cleanly dreffed : the showe of all the meate that is dressed is at the doore, almost inciting them that paffe. At the doore is a vessell full of Rice, well coloured and dressed, and because the matters of Inflice are commonly almost from ten of the clocke forward, and many have their houses farre because the Citie is very great, or because they which come from out of Towne with busineffer, as well Inhabitants as Strangers doe eate in thefe houles. When any man meeteth any acquaintance of his that commeth from abroad, or that he hath not feene him a long time, faluting one another, he asketh him prefently if he hath dined, and if he answereth no, he carrieth him to one of these houses, and there they eate and drinke priusly, for there is great store of Wine, and better then in any place of India, which they make of confections: if he answereth that he hath dined alreadie, he carrieth him where they have onely Wine and Shell-fish, wherewith they drinke, of which houses there are also many, and there he doth feast him.

There is also in Cantan along the wall on the outside, a street of Victualling houses, in the which they fell Dogs cut in quarters, roafted, boiled, and raw, with the heads pulled, and their Does flethe eares: for they feald them all like Pigs, it is a meate which the base people doe eate, and they fell them aline about the Citie in Cages : through every street they fell flelh, fish , herbes, fruit, and all things necessarie, crying that which they fell. In the end of Februarie, in March, and part of Aprill, when the great flowings are, there commeth great flore of fish from the Sea to ipawne, in the mouthes of the Rivers along the Sea, whereby there breedeth infinite small fish of many forts in the pooles of the Rivers. Of thele spawnes in these times all the Fishers along the Sea coast doe meet in their boats, and there meet so many that they couer the Sea, and lie neere the pooles. And theie Fishers doe take great quantitie of this small fish, and cast it in Ci-

20 Hernes which they have made with stakes, and a very thicke Net made of wyer, where they doe feed them, to the end of the fifting time ; and at this time there are wont to come a great number of Barkes from all places of China within the Land (for I faidalreadie that all China is failed by Rivers, for it is all cut and watered with great Rivers) and these Barkes doe bring a great many baskets within and without, which are all lined with oyled paper, that it may hold water, and enery one of these Barkes doe buy the fish they have need of. Then they carrie this fish in these baskets through all the Countrie inward, changing every day the water, and all men of any possibilitie, within their grounds and inclosures have great store of fish in ponds, for the which they buy the baskets they have need, they feed this fifth in the ponds in a very thore time with Cow dung and Buffes dung, wherewith it groweth very fast. In all the ditches of the Ci-30 ties likewise they breed great flore of fish in the same fort, of which the Rulers are ferued. In all the Cities which I faid alreadie, are built along the Rivers. The King hath many Sea Crowes in Coopes, in which they breed , with the which they make Royall affinings many times : all the Barkes that are bound to goe a fishing with these Cormorants, doe meet and set round in the Fishing with Riner, those that have charge of the birds, doe tye them about the crops, that they cannot swal- Commerants, low them, and they cast them to fish in the River. They fish till they fill their crops of middle fish, and if it be great, they bring it in the beake, and come to the Barke, where they cast all the fish they have fished, forcing them to cast it : and in this manner they fish the quantitie they wilk. till they have to their contentment: after they have fifted for the Barke they vntye them, and let them goe fish for themselues : after they be full, they come to the Boats, and are put in the 40 Coops: these birds doe fish very much. The King doth give for a favour to the Rulers one or two of these Barkes, according as the person is of qualitie for the maintayning of his house

Though that the Chinas commonly are ill-fauoured, having their faces and nofes flat, and are Their persons. beardlesse, with some few haires in the points of the chinne : some notwithstanding there are which have very good faces, and well proportioned, with great eyes, their heards well fet, and their nofes well shapen; but these are few, and it may be they are of other Nations. They weare long Coats commonly with plaites after our good ancient vie: with a flappe ouer the breast to The Attire of tye on the fide, and all in generall have very long fleeues to their coats, they weare commonly the men. blacke Coats of Linnen, or of very fine Serge or course of divers colours, some weare them of Silk, many doe vie them on the Feast dayes of Silke: the Rulers weare commonly fine Serge, and on

50 their Feafts they vie very fine Silkes, chiefly crimfon, which none in the Countrie may weare but they : the poore people weare commonly Coats of white Linnen, because it costs but little : on their head they weare a high Cap made of very fine twigs, and it is round interwouen with blacke Silke, and very well made, they vie their Stockins whole footed, which are very well made and fliched, and they weare Boots or Shooes, as the curiofitie or abilitie of every one is, either of Silke or of Leather : in Winter they weare Stockins of Felt , either fine or courle, but the cloth is made of Felt : they vie also in Winter their garments lined with Martines, chiefly about the necke: they vie quilted lackets, and some doe vie them of Felt in Winter under their Coats.

They wie long haire like women, which they weare finely combed, and they combe it many Long haire, 60 times a day, they weare it tyed on the crowne of the head, and through the knot thrust through with a long small Silver pin: those which are not married, to wit, the yong Bachelors doe weare for a deuise a fillet or ribband dresse very well made, their Cap remayning aboue it, that it may be seene : they have a superstition in their haire, therefore they weare it so long, holding that by it they shall be carried to Heauen. The common Priests doe keepe their haire, but are sharen. for they fay they neede no helpe to carrie them to Heauen. Yet among them are some Priests of the Temple of the Idols, which among the Chinas are more reverenced then the rest; these doe weare haire on the top of the head faitned with a flick, very curiously wrought like a close hand, varnished with a very fine varnish, which they call Acharan: and these Priests doe weare black coates, the other wearing a white coate.

Courtefie.

The Chinaes are very curteous men; the common curtesie is, the left hand close, they inclose it within the right hand, and they bring them very oft to their breft, shewing they have one another inclosed in their heart; and to this motion of the hands, they joyne wordes of curtefie, though the wordes of the common fort is to fay one to another, Chifan me fan, which is to fay, Haue yee eaten or no, for all their good in this world is refolued in eating. The particular curtefies betweene men of fort which have not feene one another a long while, are the armes bowed and the fingers clasped one within another, they steope and speake with wordes of great curtefie, every one labouring to give the hand to the other to make him rife : and the more honorable they are the longer they stand in these curtesies. The honorable and noble People doe vie also many curtefies at the Table, the one giving drinke to the other, and every one laboureth to give the hand to the other in their drinking, for at the table there is no other feruice but that of drinking. If there come any Ghest newly to his triends house, or his kinsman, if the Master of the house be not apparelled in holy day clothes, when the Ghest commeth in, he maketh no account of him nor any mention, till he commandeth to bring his feftivall apparell, and after he is 20 fo apparelled hee goeth to the Gheft, and receiveth him with many complements and curtefies. For they hold it not convenient, that a new-come Gheft and of reverence bee received with common apparell, but clothed in feast-like apparell, for in this he sheweth him that his entring into his house is a feaft day to him.

Whatfo wer person or persons come to any mans house of qualitie, hee hath a custome to offer him in a fine basket one Porcelane, or as many as the perfons are, with a kinde of drinke which they call Cha, which is somewhat bitter, red, and medicinall, which they are wont to make of a certaine concoction of herbes somewhat bitter: with this they welcome commonly all manner of perfons that they doe respect, be they strangers or be they not; to me they offered it many times. The Chinaes are great eaters, and they vie many dainties, they eate at one table Fish and Flesh, and the base people dresse it sometime all together. The dainties which are to bee eaten at one table, are fet all together on the board, that every one may eate where hee liketh beft.

It is a cleanly and neat people. The common people hath some groffe things.

Certayne noble Portugals went to shew me on a day in Cantan a banquet, which a rich Merchant made, which was worth the fight. The house where it was made, was with a loft, and very faire, with many faire windowes and casements, and all of it was a mirror : the Tables were fet in three places of the house, for every Gheft enuited a Table and a Chaire very faire and gilt, or with filter, and enery Table had before it a cloth of Damaske downe to the ground. On the Tables was neither cloth nor napkins, as well because the Tables were very fine, as because they eate fo cleanly that they need none of their things; the fruit was fet along the edges of e-40 uery Table, all set in order, which was, rosted Chesnuts and peeled, and Nuts cracked and shaled, and fugar Canes cleane and cut in flices, and the fruit we spake of before, called Lichias, great and small, but they were dried. All the fruit was set in small heapes like Turrets very well made, croffed betweene with certayne small slicks very neat : whereby all the Tables round about with these little Turrets were very fairly adorned. Presently after the stuit, were all the feruices placed in fine Porcelan difhes, all very well drefted and neatly carued, and every thing fet in good order, and although the diffies were fet one over another, all were fo finely fet, in fuch fort that he which fate at the Table might eate what he would, without any need of flirring or remouing any of them : and presently there were two small sticks very fine and gilt for to eate with, holding them betweene the fingers : they vie them in flead of a paire of Pincers, fo that 10 they touch nothing of that which is on the board with their hand; yea, though they eate a dish of Rice, they doe it with those sticks, without any graine of the Rice falling : and because they eate so cleanly, not touching with the hand their meate, they have no need of cloth or napkins: all comes carried and well ordered to the Table. They have also a very small Porcelan cup gilt, which holdeth a mouth full of wine, and onely for this there is a Waighter at the Table : they drinke so little that at every bit they must have the cup, and therefore it is so small. There are some Chinaes that weare very long nailes, of halfe a quarter, and a quarter long, which they keepe very cleane, and these nailes doe serue them in stead of the sticks for to eate

The Chinaes doe vie on their birth dayes to make great feaths, continuing yet in them the cu- 60 stome of the old Gentiles. In these Feasts are wont to meet all the Kinsmen and Friends, and all doe helpe him to beare the charges of the Feafts, with fending him Prefents, that when they doe celebrate their birth dayes they may pay them in the fame fort; and because they have their helpes , they make great expence and folemnitie. The feast lasteth all night long , for all the Gentiles as they walke in darknesse living without the knowledge of God, so all their feasts e rough all places of India and in China, are made by night. In thele feafts is great abun- Night feafts dance of meate and great store of wine, all the night they spend in eating and drinking. and musicke playing on diners instruments. Their Priests offer their facrifices to their Gods apparelled very richly. They apparell themselves in divers forts of garments, and the Priests doe fing their fongs in a very tunable voice : among these sacrifices, playing and singing, the Tables are alwayes furnished with fundrie meates, every one taking what hee liketh heft. The Priefts when they have fung as all the reft, doe make at their doore triumphant Arches very well made of Paper, and Scaffolds with divers representations of Figures and to Statues, and certayne high Trees and hanging on the broken Boughes, very well wrought and painted, many lightes, and in every place many Lanthornes very faire and well made all with lights.

In the generall Feasts of all the Townsand People, chiefly on the first day of the yeers, all New vector the fireets and doores are very richly drefied, and chiefly they doe indeanour and labour to deck day. the triumphall Arches, couering them with many clothes of Damaske and of other filke, with many Lanthotnes. There is much playing of fundrie Instruments, and singing, and soyntly with this great flore of meate of sundrie kindes, and great abundance of Wine. They vie many times representations by Actors, which doe represent very well and to the life, the A- Comedicactors having very good apparell and well ordered, and fitting as is requilite for the person hee

20 representeth; and they that represent a Womans part, besides the apparell that is requisite for the part hee representeth, they are painted with Stibium and Ceruse. Those which vnderflanis them not what they represent, are sometimes wearied, but they that understand them doe delight very much to heare them : and one whole night, and two, and some time three. they are continually bussed in representations one after another. While these representations doe laft, there mult been Table fet with great flore of meate and drinke. They have in these Actions two great inconveniences or blemishes, the one is, that if one be to represent two parts, and is to change hisattyre, he doth it before all the Beholders: the other is, that the Reprefenter as well as hee that speaketh alone, doe speake in a wery high voyce almost finging. Sometime they got to the ships to play, that the Portugals may give them money. The Instruments they wie for to play on, are centagine Bandoraes like ours, though not fo Instruments well made, with their Pinnes to tune them, and there bee some like Gitternes which are fmaller, and other like a Viall de gamba, which are deffe : they vie also Dulcimeres and Rebeckes, and of a certayne kinde of Hoboyse, resembling our vie. They vie a certayne manner of Instrument that hath many wyer strings; they play on them with their nayles, which for that purpose they weare; they have a great sound and make a good harmonie : they play many Instruments together sometimes, conforted in source voyces which make a very good confonancy. It hapned one night by Moone-shine, that I and certaine Portugals sitting at the doore of our lodging, a few young men passing the time came along the River, playing on diuers Inferements; and wee being glad to heare the musick, fent for them to come neere where 40 wee were, and that wee would inuite them, they as gallant youthes came neere with the Boate and beganne to tune their Instruments, in fuch fort that wee were glad to fee them fit themselues that they might make no discord; and beginning to sound, they began not altogether, but the one tarried for to enter with the other, making many divisions in the processe of the musick', some staying, others playing : and the most times they played all together in source parts. The parts were two small Bandoraes for the Tenor, a great one for counter-Tenor, and an Instrument called Cramo followed the rest, and sometime a Rebecke, sometime a Dulcimere for a Treble. And they vied a good policy, that wee might remayne the more delirous, they played but two fraines.

It is not lawfull for any man in all the Countrey to carry any manner of weapon, no not a Armes and knife, therefore when one quarrels with another they goe to buffets and pulling by the haire: quarrels. 50 onely the Souldiers and Ministers of the Captaines of warre doe weare swords on their hangers.

When any man dyeth that hath House, Kindred, and Children, after hee hath given vonthe Funerall riverghost, they wash the Coarse and put on his best apparell, and his Cap on his head, and set him on a Chaire, and then commeth his Wife and kneeleth downe before him, and with many teares and lamentable wordes shee taketh her leaue of him: and after the Wife comes the Children in their order doing the like, and after the Children therest of the Kindred, and all the rest of the House, and his Friends. The ceremonies ended, they put him in a Cossin made for him of Camfiere wood, which is preservative for dead bodies, and smelleth well, they close it and pitch it well that no smell may come out of it; they set it vpon two little formes. and cast ouer it a cloath to couer the Coffin downe to the ground, whereon the picture of the 60 man deceased is pictured. They make a little house before the Coffin of white raw cloath, with a Portall right against the Coarse, where a Table is set with candle-sticks and candles lighted, and let thereon bread and all the fruits of the Countrey. And all this they doe of superflition for a ceremonie, and there they keepe the Coarse eight or fifteene dayes, in the which their Priests of their Gods come continually by night to offer their Sacrifices, and to pray their Heathornish inventions. There they bring many Pictures of men and women, and burne them with many ceremonies. Finally they hang some Pictures of men and women in paper hanging on coards, and with great praying and mooning these pictures by the coards, with great crying and showting, they say, to send the dead man to Heauen. All day and all night while they are in these ceremonies, there is a Table set with great store of meate and drinke. These ceremonies ended, they take the Cossin and set it in a Field where the dead are, and there it confumes with time. Their mourning which they vie is the sharpest that ener I faw. for they weare Coats after the common fort, of verie course wooll next the fiesh, and girt with great coards, and on their head a Cappe of the fame cloath, made like the Caps that are to vied in the Countrey, faulng that thefe haue certaine flappes that fall ouer their eyes. Norwithstanding, that as they are nearest in kindred so they weare the rougher mourning weed. The rest weare raw cloath, and not so course. For Father or Mother, they mourne three yeares: and if he bee Louthia, as soone as hee heareth the newes presently he leaueth the office he seruch, and goeth to mourne to his owne house for three yeeres, which being ended he goeth to the Court to demand his office. The Women commonly, excepting those of the Sea coast, and the Mountayners, are very white and fine women, fome having their nofes and eyes well proportioned. From their child-hood they wrap their feete in cloathes, that they may remayne small, and they doeit

yet among the noble people, and not-among the basest. They weare their hayre very well combed, close and tyed to the crowne of the head, and bound from the rootes to the toppes with a long lace very well placed. And the lace is garnished with Iewels and peeces of Gold are cloathed in white Linnen-cloath. They make curtefies as our women doe, but they make three together and very hastely. They we painting their faces with Vermilion and white Ce-

rule very well fet. They commonly keepe themselues close, so that through all the Citte of Cantan there appeareth not a woman, but some light huswives, and base women. And when 30

they goe abroad they are not seene, for they goe in close Chayres, (whereof wee soake before) neither when any bodie commeth into the house doth bee fee them, except for curiofitie they chance vader the doore-cloath, to looke on them that come in when they are

Harlots.

Commonly the men haue one Wife, which they buy for their money more or leffe, according as they are, of their Fathers and Mothers. Yet may every one have as many wives as hee is able to maintaine : but one is the principal with whom they live, and the other he lodgerh in fundry houses And if hee hath dealings in divers Countries hee hath in every one a wife and house with entertainement. If the wife committeth adulterie, and the husband accuseth her and the adulterer, both suffer death. And if the husband doe suffer the wife to play the adulte- 40 refle, hee is grieuously punished. I being in Cantan, faw a Marchant of China goe from Iustice to Iustice, verie sharpely handled for suffering his wife to play the adulteresse. The common women are in no wile permitted to dwell within the walls. And in the Suburbes without they have their proper streets where they dwell, out of the which they may not live : All the common women are flaues, they bring them vp for that purpose from their child-hood, they buy them of their mothers, and teach them to play on an Instrument of musique, and to fing. And those that can best doe this, because they gaine most, are worth more. And those which cannot doe that, are worth leffe. The mafters either carrie them vnto the men, or fell them to them : and when they are to be et in the freet of the common women, they are written by an Officer of the King in a Booke, and the Master is bound to come eueric yeere with a certaine fee to this 50 Officer, they are bound to answer their Master to much euerie moneth. When they are old, with Paynting they make them feeme young. And after they are not for that trade, they are altogether free, without any obligation either to Mafter or any bodie, and then they feed vpon that which they have gottten.

I spake so particularly of this matter, for to come to say that in this Countrey of China is no greater captimitie then this of these Wenches. And let no man fay, or affirme any other thing, for about the examining of it I laboured somewhat in Cantan, because some Portugals would affirme it otherwise. The captinitie in this Countrey is in manner following. If any woman by the death of her husband remayneth a widdow, and hath nothing to maintayne her felfe with, neither the children that are left her are fuch as are able to get their hung, neither hath shee any 60 thingto gine her children; this Woman in this necessitie, commeth to a rich man, and agreeth with him for fix or feuen Crownes, for a Sonne or a Daughter, and the price received thee deliuereth it; if it be a Daughter, shee serueth as abouesai! for a common Woman, and is broug typ for that purpole: if it be a Sonne, hee ferueth his Mafter some time. And when hee is of age to marrie, the Mafter giveth him a Wife, and all the Children that are borne to him remayne free. and without any Ooligation: notwithstanding, this Seruant is bound to give his Master so much by the yeere, having a house by himselfe: for when he marrieth they give him a house and he laboureth, either at some Trade, or by his industrie for to earne his liuing. And no man may fell any of these Slaues to the Portugals, having great penalties for it. The Women, as by being common, they looke for great profit of them, in no wife they will fell them, befides the running into great penalties also. And all those which commonly are fold to the Portugals are stollen. they carry them deceived, and fecretly to the Portugals, and fo they fell them : and if they were perceived or taken in these stealths, they would bee condemned in the vemost punishment. The To Lawes of China give authoritie to the Women for to fell their Children, and not to the Men. for as the Men are bound to get a living for himfelfe and for his Children, if hee want the remedie, they hold that hee is in the fault of that. And that Man may the better labour for their liuing and their Childrens. So farre is China from having Slaves that altogether should bee captiues, that neither those which they take in warre are slaues; onely they are bound to the King, and are placed for Souldiers in places farre from their Countries where they were taken, eating of the wages they have of the King. These doe weare for a device a red cap, as I saw the Tartarians weare in Cantan, which had beene taken in the warres.

Of their Louthias, Mandarines or Magistrates, their creation, priviledges, maintenance; Of Prisons and Tortures; of the King and of Embassadors.

PVcry one that in China hath any office, command or dignitie by the King, is called Over yone that in Commant any omne; command to unplace of the ang, a lating of the ang, of Court, by whom are ordayned all matters of the Kingdome, and to whom come all the waightie matters of all the Realme. And because they are to dispatch with the King; and converse with Lauthies of the him within doores, and it is not lawfull for other to converse with them, neither doe other see Court Euthem, and they have entrance where the Wives of the King are, which are many, they are com. suchs. monly Eunuchs. In every Province are five, which among the rest are most principall, which haue a very great authoritie and majestie in their persons, and are greatly reuerenced and honored, not onely of the common people, but also of all the other Lothyas.

The principall of the fine is the Gouernour, which in their language is called Tutom, to this The Tutom; come all matters both great and small of all the Province, and for the authoritie and majestie of Lieutenant, 40 his perfole he is not refident where the other Lorbyas, that hee may not bee frequented of them, Depute or and so he may be more efteened and feared. To these come all the Rents of the Frontines except Vice roy. the ordinarie expences, and by him as well the businesses as the Rents that are gathered, and all that hapneth in the Prouinces are referred and fent to the Court. The second dignitic of the Provinces, is the Over-leers of the goods, which in their language is called Ponchaffi: this hath The Pozchaffi the care to fend to recouer through all the Province the Rents thereof, for the which hee hath or Tressurer. many Lothyau vnder his iurifdiction, which are particular Officers for the bulineffes and recoueries of the goods. This prouideth all the ordinarie charges of the Prouince, and with that which remayneth he reforteth to the Tistom, that he may fend it to the Court, this may enter-meddle in graue matters of the other Officers inferiour, and hath authoritie ouer them. Likewife, all the 50 matters and affaires of the Province refort vnto him, to bee referred by him to the Totom. Another chiefe dignitie under this is the chiefe Iustice, which in their language is called Anchas, The Anthas or and though there be many other Officers of Justice, this is about all, and by him are the dispata chiefe Justice. ches distributed to the rest, and all matters of Justice resort vnto him, as one that hath authoritie of the other inferiour. Another dignitie vnder this is the chiefe Captaire, who in their tongue is called Astao. To this Astao pertayneth to command to prepare the men of warre, and The Astao or all that is necessarie of shipping, and victuals, and all other prouision against Enemies and against chiefe Cap-Theeues: to this belong allo the businesses of strangers in cases which belong not to the goods, tame. The fift and last of the great dignities, is of the chiefe Captaine which puttech in execution the matters of warre, and is relident in the Armies which the Astao, being a land, doth ordayne: 60 when it is necessarie befides the putting matters in execution and order, if the matter require his presence, he goeth in person: and so important may the matter be that the Airao will goe. This His Lieute-

is called in the Countrie language Intelfi. In the house of every one of these, except the Lathiffi. philip. which is the inferiour of the flue, are other ten which are as Alfifants, and are alfo of great au- Each haue ten thoritie, fine of these doe fit at the right hand of the Principal in fine chaires, recited before when Affilians.

and the Affiftants.

we spake of the buildings, and five doe sit on the left hand: these in matters of importance are as the dispatching with the principall of the house, and the Principall dying or by any other meanes wanting, one of these according to his antiquitie remayneth in his stead : and if it beneceffary to goe through the Province about some matter of importance, that appertuneth to the disnitie in whole houle they affift, one of these doe goe with all the authoritie of the Principall Engages of The five that first on the right hand, have a greater degree and dignitic then the five on the left dignite, golde hand. And as the dignite confiftent in their Girdles and Canopies, those of the right hand we Girdles of gold and Canopies of yellow, and those of the left hand weare Girdles of filter and Canopies of blew, or of changeable colour. The Girdles are little leffe then three fingers broad. and an inch thick, and all about of gold or of filter very well wrought made of peeces. The Ca- 10

nonies are very large and faire, which an Officer doth beare vpon a staffe a fathom long, of a Cloue tree very faire, and they are lined with filke.

The Taiffu or Sheriffe

Besides these Assistants and the fine Principall, there is among the inferiour one of greater dignitie, which is the chiefe laylor, whom they call Taiffe, which have very great houses of great receipts, where they have great prifons, but neither this nor any that are under may weare girdle of gold nor filuer, nor a yellow Canopie, except hee bee an Officer or Captaine of men of warre. that for fauour of a Gentleman may haue a yellow Canopie : the rest weare girdles of Tartaruga, or of other matter made like them of gold or filuer, and their Canopies are of changeable flufe or blew, and all these Inferiour doe speake to the Superiour, when they are before them on their knees, and doe kneele as long as they are with them, except the Tailla, who when he com- 20 meth in kneeleth and rifeth vp presently, and is alwayes standing. Every one of the great ones haue many inferiour Officers under his jurisdiction, for the matters and businesses necessary to the Office of enery one, all which as they are the Kings officers have the Title of Lothias and their badges or fignes. The five Principall with their Affiftants doe weare for a Badge the Kings Armes on their brefts, and on their backs, which are certagne Serpents would with gold thred. Euery yeere there is one fent to euery Prouince at a Iustice, which is called Chaen, which commeth to take account of all the Loibias, great and fmall, and examineth all the Students and chooseth Louthias, and visiteth the Prisons, and all that is necessary to be seene and prouided for in all the Prouince. He vieth all meanes to spie out their briberie and injustice, and hath power 10 to displace or preferre. When this entreth newly into this Citie, it is not lawfull for any to worke, they hut their doores and no body walketh through the ffreet, and to preferue his worthip and authoritie they will not boldly communicate in fight of the people, and many Officers with Banners displayed of crimson like, and all the Louthias both great and small are bound to goe and meet him. The same entertainment is vied to enery one of the fine, when hee commeth newly to the Prouince where hee is to administer his office. There bee other dignities about all The Duinebais, thefe, which are called Quinebais, which is to fay, a Plate or Seale of gold: which are not fent but about very serious matters and of great importance, for the Kingdome, or the King. Euery Lothia of what qualitie soeuer hee bee, high or low, hath for a signe or badge, besides the aboutfaid, a high Cap and round with certayne eares a-croffe, made of small twigges wouen 40 with twift.

All the Offices are given from three to three yeeres, and none is given for longer time, and all given to men that are not borne in that part of the Land, because they may not be mooved by affection in matters of Iustice that belong to their offices, and also because they may not become mightie, thereby to preuent infurrections. The offices are distributed by the King with the counfell of the Eunuchs. And because the Eunuchs are those with whose counsell the offices are d fiributed, they are many times mightily bribed.

The third yecres Vi-

The Chaens which the King doth fend every three yeeres, commonly are found men, and bring commonly more authoritie then the reft. And these (besides the yearly Chaen) are fent the third yeere, when every Officer endeth his office. After that the Chaens have taken the ac- 50 counts of the Lothyas, they visit the Prisons and give audience to the Prisoners. After this hee with the other principall Lothias doe visit the Schollers, and all those that hee findeth to have studied well, he fauoureth and giveth them good hopes, and those which have not studied well, if hee see they have abilitie for it, he commandeth them to bee whipped. And if already they haue beene whipped and haue not amended, he commands them to bee put some dayes in prison, besides the whipping of them, that with these punishments from thence forward they may have a better care. If hee findeth that they neither learne, nor haue abilitie, hee thrufts them out of the Schooles.

This doe onely the Louthias which come enery three yeeres, after they have diffratched the bufineffes of the Prouince, hee bufieth himfelfe in making Louthias : which hee maketh in forme following. Hecommandeth to come to the principall Citie of the Province, all the Students 63 that have well studied, from all the Cities of the Province, and from all the great Townes, where the King hath Schoole-mafters of free Schooles, maintayned at his charge (for the Students aid learne the Lawes of the Realme, maintayned at their fathers charge.) And all the principall

Louibias of the Province affembled with Chaen, there examine very well every one of the Students, demanding of him many things concerning their Lawes : and if he answereth to all well: they command him to be put apart, and if he be not yet well infructed, eyther they fend him to learne more, and if it be through his default, eyther they whip him, or being whipped they fend him to Prison, as the Portugals faw many in Prison for that fault, where they were in Prison fend him to Prifon, as the Parturals law many in Prison for citic tasts, where citic mark with great for allow. After the Examination ended, the Characteristic by p., and all the Lambias with great commence and the commence of the price of for allo. After the examination entering, they grue the degree to enery one of them they Commence Ceremonies, Feaths, Mulickes, and Playings, they grue the degree to enery one of them they mentor Adfound sufficient, which is to give him the Title of Lauthie. And after the palling many dayes in Of this see Feafts, and Banquets, they fend them to the Court to receive the Badget of Loubias, which are more in the Caps with eares, broad Girdles and Canopies, and there they stay the distribution of Offices, So following Rethat in this manner they make the Lauthies , which in the Countrey are to administer, luftice, lations of the The Louibias for war are made by Chinalries and famous Deede which they did in war, So that Ichina in these Countries men are much honoured by their Learning, or by their Chimbrie, and yet more for their Learning, because of the Learned doe commonly come the five principal! Learning

Notwithstanding, there are many Louthias, which are made for simple faucture, either for do-Other forus of ing some particular service to the King, or to the Realme, or in some Towne, or having some particular fauour or qualitie. As they did to a young wan of Chora, because the Portugals beeing in Prison, he served for an Interpreter, whereby the Louthur gave him the title and badges of Lou-20 this, because he could speake Portugall. But these and such other doe not commonly, when Offices of the King, but enjoy onely the Liberties of Louisies as the Gentlemen Portugal base their Liberties which some enjoy by fauour of the King, And their Louds have great Liberties in the Countrey : for none can doe him any injurie without punishment , neither can they bee imprifoned but for hainous faults, and they may imprifon any that doe wiring them, and many o- Their Printther Liberties. And though there were some Perjugals that reported without any certaintie ledges. that the Chinaes did studie naturall Philosophie, the cruth is that there is no other Studies nor Vinuerfities in it nor particular, but onely the Schooles Royall of the Lawes of the Kingdome. The truth is that some are sound that have knowledge of the courses of Heaven, whereby they know the Eclyples of the Sunne and of the Moone, But thefe if they know it by any Writings that are found among them, they teach it to some person, or persons in particular, but of this there are no Schooles.

The Chinas have no certaine Letterain their Writing, for all that they write is by Chara-Gers. Their lines are not ouerthwart as in the Wistingand all other Nations, but are written vp

When the Loudius are dispatched at the Court with Offices for the Prouinces, where they Publike Offigoe to governe, they depart carrying nothing of their owne more then the Apparell they are to cers wholly weare, and some few Seruants to serue him, even when they have no Offices, neither need they maintayned of carry any promition for the lourney, nor carriage or hipping as their owne charge: ferthrough the public, all the wayes where he goeth are promitions, alwell of hipping as of needflare carriage, and needflare to the state of t ties and great Townes, the King hath many good and Noble Houles for the Louisies both great Officers. and small to lodge in, and all those which by any meaners are the Kings, have sufficient Renes for the maintenance of every person that shall dwell in the House according to his degree. And that which is to be given to every one for his Expences is alreadie limited. Wherefore he that may lodge there being come, the Officer of the House commeth to him, and asketh him if hee will haue his ordinary in money, or in things necessarie for promison, and that which hee doth demand, as farre as the money doth extend, hee is to give him, very well and cleanly dreft, either Fleth, Fifh, Duckes, or Hennes, or what he will. And any Louisia that doth lodge there, may command the Hoast of the House to be whipped, if he serve him not to his will. And if any Low-50 this will goe to lodge at the House of any acquaintance of his, hee taketh the Money, which the inferiour Louibiss doe alio fometimes, either to foare fome Money, or to bee merry at their wils more freely. And in the promisons of these Houses there is no want any wayes, for the Postbafic have the charge to give them sufficient provision that it doe not want. And at the yeares end account is taken of the Officers of the House of the Expenses he made. By the wayes at enery League, and at enery two leagues are Houles which onely have Beds, Publike Inner. and Chaires for the Trauellers to rest and ease themselves. And some of those that have care of these Houses, have provision for to give Wine to the guests : others give nothing but Chas. After the Louthias come to the Citie where they are to be resident and execute his Office, they find the Houses, where they are tolodge according to the Offices they have great or small, greater or finalter. In the fe House they find all the Senants necessary, Scriueners, Porters, and all o- Inferiour Offither Ministers necessary for their Offices. For these are continually in the hooses, for to minister cenas all times all the Offices of the Houses where they sense. And every Officer according to his to an emission meeting and performance of the provision necessary for his meate, drinke, and his apparell (limited for that it sufficeth him well) which is payed to him without faile, every moneth.

lodged in their owne Countries or where they will, and the King alloweth them every moneth to much according to their qualitie for their maintenance till they dye. And because the Ordinaries of the Lourbias are commonly fufficient, and with fome abundance, they may always fedre forne thing to leane their Wives and Children. Before the inferiour Ministers thefe Officers doe all things of their Offices and matters of luftice, for they are prefent at all things to prevent Bribes and partialitie. Whiles the Boulia is litting in the chaire to heare the parties and difinatchinie of matters, the Porters, Sermeners, Sergeants and other Ministers are at the doorer and when any person commeth with any matter, one of the Porters with a high voice that hee may be heard where the Lambias litteth (for it is farre off) telleth who and wherefore he com- 10 meth. And none speakether the Louthias but vpon both their knees on the ground, and commons ly they freake a prettie space distant from him. And from thence with a high voyce well you derftood, he propoundeth his case, or sheweth him his Petition written in Paper, and lifting vp the hand delireth him to receive it, and to flew him Iustice, to whom a Minister runneth, the Louthis making a figne to him, and presenteth it vnto him. After the Louthis readeth it, he eyther dispatcheth him of that which he asketh, writing at the foote of the Petition with redde Inke, or remitteth the party to an inferiour Officer to be dispatched. So I saw it done to a Petition which a woman prefented to the Ponchafi.

The promptnesse and readinesse wherewith the Louthias are ferued, and how feared they are, cannot be written with the Pen, nor expressed with the Tongue, but it must be seene with the 20 eye for to know what it is. All doe their messages running and with great speed, not onely the Scriveners and Sergeants, and other Ministers , but also the Inferiour Louthing to the Superiour. And if any fayleth never fo little of his diligence and accustomed speed, or committeeth the leffe negligence in the World before the Loubia, hee hath not any remission, but immediately they put a tittle flagge in his hand, and he must hold it in his hand kneeling vntill the parties be difpatched; and then the Loubis commandeth to give him the stripes that he thinke good; and the thripes are fuch as hereafter we will tpeake of. Whereby all the Ministers in the Houses of the Lauthia are play fored or marked with the ftripes, fo that already among themselves they hold Mimis feurites it a difference not to be marked with the ftripes, because it is a thing generally common among parit contentum. them. And when the Louchia waxeth angry or is moued at any thing, it is a woulder to feethe 30 trouble and feare that is in all the standers by.

I being in the House of the Panchast with certayne Portugals, intreating for the deliverance of certaine Portugals that were Captines, and imprisoned in the layle, for the which wee carried him eight Ounces of Ambar (which at that time was much efteemed of them and now by carrying fo much it is not fo much eltermed) we not being willing to give him the Ambar, without giving vs both the Portugals, he tooke an occasion for to terrifie vs, to waxe angry against the youth, fernant of a Portugall which was in our company and was our Interpretour. Wherefore he role out of the Chaire and became red as bloud, and his eyes were inflamed, and let one foote forward putting his thumbes under his Girdle, looking to the standers by with a terrible countenance thepping forward, lift up his foot and stampt on the ground with it, and faid with a 40 terrible voyce, Tas, which is to lay, Whippe. It was a wonderfull thing to fee in how little fpace they tooke the youth, twed his hands behind with a Cord, and laid him on his belly with his thighes bare, and two Beadles placed them felues on each fide one, with one foote forward, and their Whip readie for to give him the stripes that they should bee commanded to give him. Certainly it was all done in a moment. The Merchants that came in our fauour were troubled, and stood aside shaking with feare. At this time one of the Priloners said, Sirs, be not afraid, for he cannot whip that youth. And in truth we knew it was fo, for according to their Lawes there was no fault, whereby he might command him to be whipped, and there was a penaltie if hee did it. The Louibia hearing the voyce of the Priloner, commanded to carry him with speed to the layle againe. And the Louthis did this for nothing elfe but to make vs afraid, that wee 50 should give him the Ambar for one of the Prisoners, for he could not give vs the other because he was alreadie adjudged to due, and the fentence confirmed by the King, which was irrenocable, and he was willing to have the Ambar, for he hoped to have of the King a greater Reward then to be Ponchali for the Ambar. For he did eate it for to fullayne life; and many dayes were patt fince they had demanded it of the Portugals, but as they knew not the name we vied for it, they never understood one another till that the yeare after they had for the Airas of Cantan a little for the delinery of a Portugal! whereby he was advanced to Ponchali, And this would also have for the same effect the Ambar at our hands for to be advanced.

Notwithstanding, we seeing our selves tyed and without an Interpretour by whom to speake, and the youth in disposition of whipping, we gave him the Ambar. There came presently a Cha- 60 ring-dish forto proue it, and the Priloner cast a little in the fire, and feeing the smooke ascend right up, he was contented, and scattering the smoake hee set his Nose over it and said, Haoa, which is to fay, it is very good. And commanded prefently to deliver vs the Prifoner free. It was wonderfull to fee with what speed it was weighed, and the pieces told and put in a Paper, and noted by the Scrivener before them all the number of the pieces, and the waight that was there. And after that Paper another, all glued prefently. And after that another. And in the Manner of third, the Panchasi let his Marke with Red Letters, and what was contayined within. And at their pompe in the fame instant came a little Boxe, and being put in it was prefently stopped, and voon the co-the street, ner a Paper elued, and voon it the Marke of the Ponchaft: and prefently came an inferiour Lonthis Captayne of the Army with his Souldiers, and all afarre off kneeled downe, and faid at cpery word Quos, which is to fay, Yes, enclining their heads and hands to the ground. And receiuing his mellage, prefently as he came running, to he returned running with the Boxe to take thipping for to carrie the Ambar to the Tutaen, to bee fent from him to the King. All this that I To have (poken was done in a trice before wee flirred from the place where wee were. This was allo defirous to have the Ambar of vs before the Louthia of that feate did come, which was looked for enery day to come a new : for this was onely a Lieutenant.

When any Lombia that is not of the fine, neither the Chaen, neither very inferiour, but as they jay of the meaner fort, goeth abroad into the Citie, he hath before him a good frace two Ministers with two Maces that seeme to be of filuer, voon long states, made almost after our fashion, and the one goeth on the one fide the street, the other on the other-fide. After these a little diffant, goe other two, each with a ftraight Cane, or Pole in his hand. After these goe other two in the fame distance with two Canes trayling along the Pauements, which are the Infruments of Iuftice wherewith they doe whip. After these goe other two with two Tables 20 like two Targets bowed and playstered, whereon is written the Title of the Officer that passeth. The formost tignifie in their Maces, that he which passeth is in his Office in the Kings place. And the two straight Rods, the right of Iustice which he ought to doe. Those which carrie the Instruments of whipping, doe carrie for a figne certayne long Red Laces, with two great round Teffels at the ends. And all doe carrie very gallant Plumes very well made of the points of a Peacocks tayle. And those that goe before doe now and then say with a loud voyce Hamph, which is to say. Gine place, or beware. While these doe passe it is not lawfull in any wife for any one to crosse, or goe in the middle of the street, under paine of being whipped without any remission.

It chanced two Portugals went through the middeft of a street in Cantan walking, and behind them came an inferiour Loutbia, which had but foure Ministers, which came crying according to 30 their cultomethey should give place. The Portugals either gave no heed or made no regard of those that came: wherefore a Minister comming, gaue a great thrust to the one of them, and the Portnoall answered him with a boxe on the eare; and being bound with his hands behind him, was to goe to Prison. It was necessary for the Porengall to come to the Louthia, and pacific him with faire words, and he made an end of pacifying him with fourteene Crownes that hee gaue him. After the Ministers commeth the Louibia in a rich Chaire gilt and very faire, on foure mens backes. These Chaires are great and sumptuous, and the Louthia goeth compassed with all the Scriveners and other his Ministers. And all of them while hee goeth by the fireet, goe alwayes running. And the Louthia weareth a long blacke Coate of fine Searge with long fleeues, which is the common wearing: he carrieth the armes a croffe like a Frier, and his eyes low with-40 out looking to any fide : for even with their eyes they will not communicate with the common people, for to preserve their authoritie the more with them, that may be more feared. When any of the foure Lourbias goeth abroad, except the Tutan, or the yearely Chaen, they goe accompanied with many Ministers, and fixe Officers doe carrie them on their backes, and they leade a spare Horse with a faire Saddle, and a cloth of Silke ouer it; the Chaire iwherein they goe is more sumptuous and richer, they carrie before foure, fine, or fixe Maces, and two or three Instruments and more Ministers.

When the Chaen that commeth every three yeeres commeth into the Citie, or for forme im- Pompe of the portant affaires goeth abroad, or fome Quinchay, they shut vp all the doores in the streets where he passeth, and none doth worke, nor is any seene in the street when hee passeth. The shops are 30 that vp, and enery thing of fale is out of light. The Officers with coards along the street, doe make three lanes, where the triumphing Arches are made in three Arches: and through the middest passeth the Louthia onely, and the Officers on the two sides. And it is not lawfull for Charmand any to passe through the middle: they are accompanied of many inferiour Louthias that goe on Quimbage foot. And on the one fide of the street, and the other are many armed men and others with Ban- iplendour. ners of red Silke aduanced, all standing in good order. In the Court of the house where he is to goe in, are many Kettle-drummes fet vpon high stakes to be well played vpon, which are couered downe to the ground with clothes of Silke quartered. After these are many placed in order, with Flags of Silke on high. After these in the same order, are many with Trumpets, and all are in great filence. As foone as the Lombia appeareth they all found their Instruments in order: Noyle and se 60 the found of the Instruments ended, they remayne all in sogreat a silence, as if there were no lence. bodie in the Court, being a great multitude of people. The people as they come in, doe place themselues on the sides, the middest betweene the Instruments remayning voide, whereby the Loubis passeth. Before these Loubias goe commonly many inferiour Loubias, of those that carrie Maces when they goe abroad. There are also in this Court many men at Armes with long gilt Lances, and with very faire Armours. This is all in the first Court. In the second, along the Gallerie (whereof wee spake aboue, when wee treated of the houses of the great men, that onely the Loubias paffe through them) on the one fide and the other are many inferiour Louthias with Head-pieces on their heads, fome gilt, fome with Silver, and with Swords hapging at their belts, and with Coats and Callocks made in fashion of Frockes with study of Gold and Silver, that it feemeth fet vpon plates , but it is a very fine worke made vpon very finele Silke, which serueth onely for brauerie and ornament. Some vie on their heads white Headpieces garnished with Gold, but are of a very fine leafe and thinne, that seeming an Armour, are not, In this manner also are the Louthies inferiours, which doe environ the superiour Louthies. The Chaires where these doe goe are very rich and of great price, and very sumptions. The Tables whereon is written the titles of dignitie of these Great men are written with letters of Silver. And when any of these doth enter newly in any Citie with these feasts and enternaynments, all the Louibias, great and small, receive him at a house (where hee landeth very rich and noble) and from thence they accompanie him vnto his lodging, and being lodged, all doe take their leave with many curtelies. In these receivings they vie no sumptuous apparell. The great men (when most) weare Coats of red Silke, In their owne feasts in their houses, and secretly one with another, and in banquets they vie crimfon Silke, and all the brauerie in their apparell.

Whenfoener by way of inquirie or examination any Witnesses are demanded, the Louibias doe it in publicke before the Officers and ministers of his Office, and before all the rest that by 10 any meanes chance to be there present, and this because no falshood may be vied, nor any sleight in the manner of inquiring: and by consequence in writing. And first they examine the Witneffes feuerally, and if they doe agree, they ioyne them, and examine the one before the other, till they bring them to altercations and quarrelling by words, that by the words the one speaketh to the other they may come to the knowledge of the truth. And if by this meanes they doe not comprehend the truth, they give them many stripes and tortures that by one meanes or other they may know the truth of the matter they enquire or examine : they vie no Oath, for they efferme nothing of their Gods. They have notwithflanding a respect in the witnesling the persons of qualitie, and of whom is presumed that they will not easily lye. When they examine any matter of great weight, or a graue person, then they write themselues, the preceffe of the examination. It chanceth sometimes that some of the Loubius for a great bribe. or for great friendship let some Prisoner loose, and put another in his place, for there neuer wanteth one naughtipacke that will put himselfe in danger of stripes, or death for interest, or they bring him in by deceit, deceiuing him with words, and making the matter light vnto him, and giving him some interest, they name him as the Prisoner they will let loose, that the faulte and punishments of the guiltie may fall vpon the innocent. And when sometime in this sort they cannot let the guiltie person loose, they labour to bribe all the Officers to give him for dead among those that die in the prisons. But these inventions are not vied but where the bribes are great, or the adherents very great and mightie. And for to eschew the inconveniences which great, or the adherents very great and mugnors, and to the transfer of the Prifonershaue great of ometime fall out, when any are imprifoned for weightie matters, or the Prifonershaue great 40 of Prifons and aduerfaries, they fet downe all the markes of the Prifoners, and cause them to be fet at the foot of the writing, that so they may not vseany of the malices abouelaid. With how much pietie and leafure they kill, with so much crueltie and speed they whip, for in this case they forgive none. The stripes are such that with reason it might be a sufficient punishment for to amend, for the canes wherewith they who pare plaited below about foure fingers broad, and goe straightning vpward vnto the end, where the Beatles hold them: and they are almost a finger thicke (for in those parts are canes as big as a mans leg. And because in Portugall are many witnesses of knowledge of the same, I dare simply affirme it, and they are of eighty or ninety spans long.) And their whips are made of these canes of the height of a middle statured man to the breatls. They give the stripes on the hammes of the mans legs, being layd on his breast, and his legs layd along, and his hands tyed behind. And the Beadles butchering, as they are commanded, the Louthias are altogether voide of compassion, talking one with another, eating and drinking, and picking their teeth. The ctueltie is fuch, that the Court is full of bloud: and when they have made an end of whipping them, they carrie them not, but like Butchen Miscroble ena- with much crueltie they draw them by one leg to the Prison. And when the Beadles are whipping, they tell with a loude voyce the stripes. If the miserable Prisoners which are in the Prion for grieuous faults at the time that this correction is to bee done can get a piece of a coard, wherewich they may hang themselves, they goe to buffets who shall hang himselfe first, that that the butcherie of the stripes be not executed on them. And the Portugals affirmed, which were in Prison, that in one day fortie Prisoners did hang themselues in the Prison where they 60 were, to escape the stripes they were rather willing to lose their lines. And they affirmed, that the coard was very short, that icarfely there was so much as to come about the necke to tye it, and on a flicke which they flucke in the wall, and because the flicke was very lowe, they pulled one another till they were choaked, going to buffers who should hang himselfe first. When any sioth kill himfelfe, or dieth in the Prifon, it is the order in China to cast him in the house of office, and there to be three dayes, where the Rats doe eate him up. And fometimes the Chinaer Pritoners doe eate of them with hunger.

Every Citie that is the Head of the Province, hath thirteene Dungeons, and in fixe of them Store of freeare the men condemned to death: there are in Cantan vpward of fifteene thousand Prisoners, people, and There are in every Dungeon onely for the condemned to death, one hundred and twenty men therefore flore There are in euery Dungson onely for the consemned to death, one number and ewency men of bond, by ab-that ferue for watches, and have a Louthia over them as their Captaine, or Gentleman of the ufed libertie round. There be two forts of tortures, one for the hands, another for the feet, which are nip- and flore. ped by certaine Hickes to the bruifing or breaking of the fingers or toes with cruell paines.

The King hath as many wives as he lifteth: and within doores all the feruice is almost of The King his women; whereof he hath a great multitude: and likewife great store of Eunuches, and there is wines, chilno other people within the house. The first fon that is borne vinto him of any of his wives succeedeth in the Kingdome. The rest he marrieth, and at such time as he marrieth them they are lodged in some of the Cities that he best liketh; where they are well provided of all things neceffarie for their maintenance, as fonnes to the King. But they neuer fee the Kings face any more after they are married.

All the Embaffadours that come to Ching, with Embaffages from Kings or Princes, receive of the King great rewards and fauours, and they give him Cap and fignes of Lothia, whereby he hath great priviledges in the Countrey. They may whip and punish the Chinaes themselves. Emtaffadoure fo that they touch not any Louthia small or great : for to meddle with these would breed great priviledges, 20 inconveniences. This was the cause that Fernando * Perez of Adrade going for Embassadour to * Lopo Sourez China, that the Chinaes did rife against him , and hee escaped with his hands on his head losing was fent Vicefome thips: because having done vnaccustomed Inflice in China, and vpon the Chinaes, and they and feut this forbearing him, he would ftretch his hand to the Louthias. The goods of the Embaffadour, and Peret with a of his is tree from customes, and to him and to his they give lodgings to dwell in, and all things fleet to thing. necessarie while they are in the Countrie. No man, no not a Louibia may disturbe him in any and therein thing, nor any thing of his. One Lathia would have whipped one of Siam, for having carried Thomas Perez a message to the Prison to certaine Portugals that were in Prison. One of the Officers said vnto him that was present, that he was of Sam of the Embassage, wherefore being satisfied there-enterrayaed with he let him goe in peace, defiring him he would not doe to againe.

With the Chinaes being fo great as at the beginning we faid and declared, the King hath fuch tome Portugals

meanes and industrie in the government thereof, that every moneth he knoweth all that passeth viurping Ta. through all the Realme, and he knoweth it in this manner. All matters of Justice and of Warre, Hand, and exand all annuities with all that is worth the knowing in every one of the Prounces is referred by ercifing all the Loubias, and by other persons to the Ponchass, and the Ponchass maketh a relation of all by ourrages, cauwriting to the Tutan. The Tutan is bound to fend a Post every moneth to the Court, which fed T. Perez afcarrieth the information in writing to the King of all things that passed in that moneth. They travell from count their moneths by the Moones, and they are to be dispatched in such fort, that at the be- Cantan to the ginning of every Moone the Posts from all the Provinces are to bee at the Court , that the first Court to bee an day of the Moone it may be presented to the King, as relations of all things happened in enery taken for a Prouince. And although some Prouinces are farre distant from the Court, that the Posts cannot Spie, and sent come within a moneth to the Court: notwithstanding in such manner they agree that every ton, where hee Moone the King is to have the relation of every Province, though the one be of more time then died in Prilon another, because of the one Prouince being farre and the other neere.

The manner of the Polts is as among vs, they carrie a Horne which they winde when they factors. See come neere to any Towne, that they may have a Horse ready in every Towne within a certaine who seemeth distance. They are bound when they heare the Horne to haue a Horse ready for him, which is to disagree: or done with fuch diligence as all the other feruices of the Officers. And where hee is to passe a else his rec-Foord, as soone as he windeth his Horne with great speed they carrie him a Boat, as I saw once Plesact was going to the Citie of Cantan, in a Towne that was in the way, called Caman. Sometimes it him, For hee hapneth by the malice of some Lonthias, when they have any interest in it, to keepe some things had left 6, thips concealed that the King knoweth not: but woe to them if the King come to know it, for they there, when he are grieuously punished, as wee shall see in a case hereafter following. Being in India, and also went to Canon. in Chma, I was enformed that fometimes the King of China doth fend fome men of gr. at confidence disguised through divers parts of China, that they might fee how his Officers did ferue Disguised Inhim. And if there were any nouelties or changes whereof they made him not prime, or some relligencers, things that were necessarie to prouide.

Equile we spake many times before of Portugals, captines in China, it will bee a connenient thing that the caules of their Captimitie be knowne, where many notable things will be shewed. Yee are to know, that from the yeere 1554. hitherto, the businesses in China are done very quietly and without danger : and fince that time till this day, there hath not one ship beene lost but by some mischance: having lost in times past many. Be-10 cause as the Portugals and the Chinaes were almost at warres, when the Armies came vpon them, they weighed anchor and put for the Sea, and lay in places vnsheltered from tempests, whereby the formes comming, many were loft vpon the coaft, or vpon some shelues. But from the yetre 1554. hitherto, Lionell of Sofa, borne in Algarue, being chiefe Captaine, and married in Chault made a couenant with the Chinaes that they would pay their duties, and that they should fuffer them to doe their bufineffes in their Ports. And fince that time they doe them in Contage. which is the first part of China: and thither the Chinaes doe resort with their Silkes and Muske. which are the principall goods the Portugals doe buy in China. There they have fure Hauens. where they are quiet without danger, or any one disquieting them, and so the Chinaes doe now make their merchandife well: and now both great and small are glad with the trafficke of the Portugals, and the fame of them runneth through all China. Whereby some of the principal of the Court came to Cantan onely to fee them having heard the fame of them. Before the time aforesaid, and after the riling which Fernando Perez of Andrade did cause, the businesses were done with great trouble, they suffered not a Portugall in the Countrey, and for great hatred and loathing called them Facui, that is to fay, Men of the Denill. Now they held not commerce with them under the name of Portugali, neither went this

Portugals called Farcui, and name to the Court when they agreed to pay customes : but vnder the name of Fangin, which Name-policy, is to fay, People of another Coast. Note allo, that the law in China is that no man of China doe fayle out of the Realme in paine of death. Onely it is lawfull for him to fayle along the coaft of the same China. And yet along the coast, nor from one place to another in China it selse it is Lawfull to goe without a certificate of the Louthias of the Countrey whence they depart: in 3 which is fit downe, whither they goe, and wherefore, and the markes of his person, and his age. If he carrieth not this certificate he is banished to the Frontiers. The Merchant that carrieth goods carrieth a certificate of the goods hee carrieth, and how hee payed duties for them. In every Custome-house that is in every Province hee payeth certaine duties, and not paying them he loseth the goods, and is banished to the frontier parts. Notwithstanding the abouesaid lawes some Chinaes doe not leave going out of China to trafficke, but these never returne againe to China. Of these some line in Mallaca, others in Siam, others in Patane, and so in divers places of the South some of these that goe out without licence are scattered. Whereby some of these which line already out of China doe return againe in their ships vnto China, vnder the pro-40 tection of some Portugall: and when they are to dispatch the duties of their ships they take fome Portugall their friend to whom they give fome bribe, that he may dispatch it in his name and pay the duties. Some Chinaes desiring to get their liuing, doe goe very secretly in these flips of the Chinaes to trafficke abroad, and returne very secretly, that it bee not knowne, no not to his kindred, that it bee not spread abroad, and they incurre the penalty that the like doe incurre. This law was made because the King of China found that the much communication of the strangers might be the cause of some risings. And because many Chinaes with an excuse of fayling abroad became theeues and robbed the Countries along the Sea coast, and yet for all this diligence there are many Chinaes robbers along the Sea coait.

These Chinaes that live out of China, and doe goe thither with the Poringals, fince the offence 10 of Fernando Perez of Andrada did direct the Portugals to begin to goe to traffick to Liampo; for in those parts are no walled Cities nor Villages, but many and great Townes along the coast, of poore people, which were very glad of the Portugals, and fold them their prouision whereof they made their gayne. In these Townes were these Merchants of China which came with the Portugals, and because they were acquainted, for their sake the Portugals were better entertayned. And as these Chinaes which were among the Portugals and the Countrey Merchants in their buyings and fellings, they reaped a great profit thereby. The inferiour Louthias of the Sea coast received also great profit of this trafficke, for they received great bribes of the one and of the other, to give them leave to trafficke, to carrie and recarrie their goods. So that this trafficke was among them a long while concealed from the King, and from the superi- 60 our Lonibias of the Province. After these matters had for some space beene done secretly in Liampoo, the Portugals went by little and little forward, and began to goe and make their merchandife to Chincheo, and to the Hands of Cantan. And other Louthus permitted them already in enery place for the bribes sake, whereby some Portugals came to trailicke beyond Namqui, which is very farre from Cantan, without the King being witting, or having knowledge of this trafficke. The matters fell out in fuch fort, that the Portugals wintered in the Ilands of Liampoo. people. These euils encreased so much that the clamour of the injured was so great, that it came Chinosis, and innot onely to the superiour Londons of the Province, but also to the King. Who commanded presently to make a very great Armada in the Prouince of Fuquen, to drive the theeues from all the coast, especially those that were about Liampoo, and all the Merchants as well Portugals as Chinaes were reputed in this number of theeues. Being ready they went forth along the coaft

10 of the Sea. And because the windes served them not for to goe for Liampes, they went to the coast of Chinches, where finding some shall of Portugals, they began to fight with them, and in no wife did they permit any wares to come to the Portugals; who stayed many dayes there (fighting fometimes) to fee if they could have any remedie for to dispatch their bufinesles. But feeing they had no remedy, they determined to goe without it. The Captaynes of the Armie knowing this, lent a mellage to them very fecretly by night, that if they would that any goods knowing criss, ten a menage to those to the found from them formething. From thence-forward came many goods vinto them, the Louthias making as though they tooke no heed thereof, diffembling with the Merchants. And so were the businesses ended 20 that yeere, which was the yeere 1 548.

The years following, which was 1549, there was a straighter watch upon the Coast by the Captaynes of the Armada, and greater vigilancie in the Ports and entrances of China, in fuch fort that neyther goods nor victuals came to the Portugals : but for all the vigilancie and watching there was, (as the Ilands along the Coast are many, for they all runne in a rew along the China) the Armies could not have so much vigilancie, that some wares were not brought secretly to the Portugals. But they were not so many that they could make vp the ships ladings, and the vetering those goods which they had brought to China. Wherefore leaving the goods which they had not vttered in two ships of China, of such Chinaes as were alreadie difmen. bred from China, and Traffique abroad under the shadow of the Portugals, (in the which they

30 left thirtie Portugals in charge with the ships and with the goods) that they might defend the thips, and in some Port of China where best they could they should fell the goods that remayned in change for some Wares of China, and having ordayned this they departed for India. As the people of the Armie of the Chinaes faw the two ships remayne alone, the other ships being gone, they came vpon them, being induced by fome Merchants of the Country, which discoursed to them the great store of goods that remayned in those Vessels, and the few Ports. gali that remayned to keepe them. Then they layd an ambush for them, dreffing some Chinaes ashoare, which being in armes made as though they would set vpon the ships to fight with them, because they were close to the Land, that the Portugals being prouoked, should come out of the thips to fight with them, & fo the thips might remaine without defence to them of the Armada. 40 which lay watching in an ambush, & did accordingly fet vpon the two Vessels with great furie & celeritie, and flaying some Portugals that were in the ships, and wounding others they tooke the ships. The chiefe Captayn which is the Lutbiss, remayned so glorious, that hewsed great crueltie on some Chinaes that hee tooke with the Portugals, Hee laboured to perswade source Portugals Mountayne which had more apparance in their persons then the rest, that they should say, they were Kings of Mouse birth Malaca, he perswaded them in the end, because hee promised to vie them better then the rest, and therewith he prouoked them. And finding among the cloathes that hee tooke a Gowne and a Cap, and asking of one of those Chinass, that were taken with the Portugals what habit that was, they put in his head, that it was the habit of the Kings of Malaca, wherefore he commanded prefently to make three Gownes by that patterne, and three Caps, and so he apparelled mili rifus te 30 them all toure in one fort, to make his fayning true, and his victory more glorious. To this was joyned the couctousnesse of the Lutbissi to see if hee could detayne the many goods that hee had

And to doe this more fafely, not to be taken in a lye, he did great executions upon the Chinaes which he tooke with the Portugals, and killing some of them determined to kill the reft. These things comming to the cares of the Airas, which was his superior, he disliked greatly that which hee had done, and fent to him presently that hee should kill no more of those which remayned, but that he should come to him presently bringing with him all the prize as well of the men that were yet aliue, as of the goods. The Lutbiffi ordering his Journey for to goe to the Aitao, as he was commanded, he commanded foure Chaires to be given to them, to whom hee had

60 guen title of Kings, to be carried in them with more honour. And the other Portugals were carried in Coopes with their heads out fast by the neckes betweene the boards that they could Pillory Coops not pull them in, but having some wounds in their heads, they went bare headed to the Sunne and to the Dew, and were carried on mens shoulders. The Luthiss went with this Prize through the Countrey with great Majethe, he carried before him foure Banners displayed, on the which were written the names of the foure Kings of Malaca. And when he entred into the Townes he entred with great noyfe and Majestie, with found of Trumpets, and with Cryers which went crying the great victorie, the Luthis (naming him) had gotten of the foure great Kings of Malaca. And all the great men of the Townes went to receive him with great Feaths and Ho. nours, all the Townes running to fee the new Victorie.

When the Lubifi came with all his pompe and glory where the Aitao was, after the giuino him particular account of all things passed and of his victory, he manifested to him his pretence and agreed with him to divide the goods betweene them both, and that he should continue the favning of the Kings of Malaca, that both might receive of the King Honours and Rewards. This being fet downe they both agreed that to keepe this in fecret, the Luthif should go forward to Damna'le vain that which he had begun, to wit, he should say all the Chimas, that came there capting. And presently they commanded presently to put it in effect, and so they slue minetic and odde Chie. nas, among whom were some young youths staine. They left notwithstanding three or four vouthes and one man, that by them (bringing them to their owne hand) they might certifie the King all that they would, that was to make of the Portugals Theeues, and conceale the goods which they tooke: certifying also by these that those foure were Kings of Malaca. And the Portugals not having the Language of the Countrey, neither had any person to intreate for or fauour them would perish : and they being mightie would make their owne Tale good, following the end by them intended. And for this cause they slue not the Portugals, but left them a-

As foone as the King was informed of all aboue faid, hee dispatched present from the Court a Quinchay, (of whom we spake before, that is to say place of Gold) And with him he sent other 10 two men of great authoritie alio, of the which the one had beene Panchaft, the other Auchaft, these two as Inquisitors and Examiners of this matter: Commanding and commending to the Chaen which that yeare went to visit the Prouince of Fuguen, and to the Panehasi and Anchasi. of the same Province, their ayde and assistance to the Quenchay, and the two Inquisitors in all things necessary for them in these businesses. The two that came with the Quinchay, as Inquifitors, went prefently to certayne great Houses which had in the middeft a great Court, and on the one fide of the Court were certayne great and faire Lodgings, and on the other fide others in the same fort. Each of the Inquisitors entred in one of these Houses aforesaid. The Prisoners were presently brought, and were presented to the one of them, who for courtese remitted them to the other, that he should examine them first, with many words of courtesie. The other fent as them againe with great thankfulnesse. So they were fundry times carried from one to another, each of them willing to give the hand to the other of beginning first, till that one of them yeelded and began. And as the matter was of great import and much commended to them, all that the guiltie and the accusers did speake these Officers did write with their owne hands. The Poringals had for a great Enemy a China man and Pilot of one of the shippes that were taken, and a China vouth which was a Christian, which from a childe was brought vp among the Portugals: for they were both made of the part of the contrarie Louthias , mooned by gifts and promites: the Louthias being alreadie depoted of their Offices, and held for guiltie, for the which they were accused before the King.

But though they were thus handled, they were so mightie and so fauoured, that they could 50 take from the Portugals a China youth that ferued them for an Interpreter, which voon their Manner of ex- Petition was againe delinered them. They examined them in this order, the accused were first brought and examined by one of these Officers, and they carried them to the other to bee examined againe. And while the other was re-examining the accused, the accusers were brought to him that examined first. And as well the accused as the Accusers were all examined by both the Officers, that afterward they both feeing the confessions of the one and the other, they might fee if they did agree. And first they examined every one by himselfe. Afterward they examined them altogeter, for to fee if the one did contrary the other, or did contend and reprehend one another, that fo by little and little they might gather the truth of the case. In these Examinations the two were contrary, to wit, the Pilot, and the Christian China youth, and had many 60 firipes, because they agreed in somethings. The Louthias did alwayes shew themselves glad to heare the Portugals in their defence, who alleadged in their defence, that if they would know who they were, and how they were Merchants and not Theenes, they should tend to enquire of them along the Coast of Chinches, that there they should know the truth, which they might know of the Merchants of the Country, with whom a great many yeares agoe they had dealt. and that they might know that they were no Kings, for Kings do not abase themselves so much as to come with to few men to play the Marchants, and if before they faid the contrary, it was by the deceit of the Lutbifi, and to receive better viage of him in their persons.

Hauing this information of the Portugals, prefently with the opinion of the Quineber and the other Officers, they went to Chinches both of them, to enquire of the trueth of that which the Portugals had told them; and discouring there the truth of the Portugals matter, and the lies of the Lubiff, and of the Anas, they dispatched presently a Post; wherein they commanded to put the Latbiffi and the Aitao in Prifon, and in good fafeguard. Wherefore from thence forward 10 all men began to fauour them very much. If notwithstanding this examination had bin made in Liampoo, as it was in (bincheo, the Portugals could not have chosen but have past it ill, according to the greatnesse of the euils they had done there. After the Louibias returned from Chinches, they commanded to bring the Portugals before them, and comforted them very much, shewing them ereat good-will, and faying to them, that they knew already they were no theeues, but were great good-will, and 137 ing to them, that they as their aduerfaries, to fee if they contra-honeft men: and they examined againe as well they as their aduerfaries, to fee if they contrahonest men: and they satisfied of that which before they had fooken. In these later re-examina-fallouttions the Pilot of China, which before had shewed himselfe against the Partugals, and had beene on the Louthias fide, feeing that the Louthias were already in Prison, and that now they could doe them no good, and that the Portugals were already favoured, and that the trueth was already

20 knowne, he gainfaid himfelfe of all that he had faid, and faid that it was true that the Portugals were no theeues nor Kings, but Merchants, and very good men, and discouered the goods which the Lunbifft had taken when he surprised the Portugals. And that till then he had faid to the contrary, was for the great promises which the Louthias promised him, and for the great threats they vsed to him if he did it not. But seeing they were already in Prison, and he knew they could doe him no hurt, he would now speake the truth. They then commanded to torment him, and whip him very fore, to fee if he would gainfay himfelfe, but he ftill continued in the fame confession,

All the examinations and diligences necessarie in this businesse ended, the Quinchay willing The Quinchage to depart for the Court with his companie, would first fee the Poringals, and give a fight of him- oftention, felfe to the Citie. The fight was of great Maiestie in the manner hee went abroad in the Citie. 30 for he went accompanied with all the great men of it, and with many men in Armes and many Ancients displayed and very faire, and with many Trumpets and Kettle- drummes, and manv other things which in fuch pompes are vied. And accompanied in this manner, hee went to certaine noble and gallant houses. And all the great men taking their leaue of him, hee commanded the Portugals to come neere him, and after a few words he dismissed them : for this was not but onely to see them. Before these Louibias departed they commanded the Louibias of the Countrey, and the Iaylors, that all of them should fauour the Portugals, and give them good entertaynment, and should command to give them all things necessarie for their persons. And commanded euery one to fet his name in a piece of Paper, because that while they were at the Court, and their matters were dispatching, they should not craftily make some missing. And 40 they commanded to keepe the Luthoffi in good lafety, and the Aitas, and that they should not let them communicate with any person. Being gone from the Citie, they lodged in a small Towne, where they fet in order all the Papers, and ingroffing onely that which was necessarie. And because the Papers were many, and were much to write, they helped themselues with three men. And having ingroffed all that they were to carrie to the Court, they burned all the reft. And because these three men which they tooke for helpers should not spread abroad any thing Cautelousine of that which they had feene, or heard, or written , they left them shut up with great vigilan dustrice cie, that none should speake with them, commanding to give them all things necessarily very abundantly vntill the King, Sentence came from Court, and were declared. Besides these things I know that the Actao, and the Luthissi did so much enill for conetousnesses of the many goods which they rooke from the Portugals, haning no regard whether those which they tooke, and tooke the goods from, were good or earl men. Likewise the Louthias along the Sca coast knew these mento be Merchants, and certified mee not. And all of them, as distrall were the cause of so much enill. Besides this the Portugals resisted my Armie, being better to have let themselves beene taken, then to kill my people. From that time they had no more of the King euery moneth but one Foon of Rice (which is a measure as much as a man 30 can beare on his backe) the rest they had need of, every one did seeke by his owne industry. They call commonly these Gods Omittoffois, they offer them Incense, Bonjamin, Ciuet, and Omittoffor and another Wood which they call Cayo, * Laque, and other smelling things. They offer them likewife Ocha, whereof is mention made afore. Euery one hath a place to pray, and at the entries behind the doores of the Houses, in the which they have their carved Idols : to the which eurry day in the Morning and at Euening they offer Incente and other perfumes. They have in many places (as well in the Townes as out of them) Temples of Juols. In all the thips they fayle in , they make prefently a place for to worship in, where they carrie their idols.

Lott.

In all things they are to enterprize either Iournies by Sea or by land, they vie Lots & cast them before their Gods. The Lots are two sticks made like halfe a Nut-shell, flat on the one side, and round on the other : and as bigge againe as an halfe Nut, and joyned with a string. And when to they will cast Lots, they speak first with their God, perswading him with words, and promising him some Offring if he give him a good Lot, & in it shew him his good Voyage or good success. of his hulines. And aftermany words they call the Lots. And if both the flats fides fal voward on one up another downe, they hold it for an euill Lot, and turne them toward their Gods very melancholy, they call them Dogs, with many other reproaches. After they are wearie of rating them, they foothe them againe with faire milde words, and aske pardon, faying, that the Melancholy of not giving them a good Lot, cauled them to doe them injurie, and speake injurious words vnto him : but that they will pardon them and give them a good Lot; and they promife to offer him more such a thing (because the promises are the better for them that promise them. they make many and great promifes and offerings) and fo they cast Lots so many times till 20 they fall both on the flat fides which they hold for a good Lot, then remayning well contented

Cruell mento they offer to their Gols that which they promifed. It happeneth many times when they cast their foolish Loes about any weighty matter, if the Lot fall not out good, or launching a ship to the Sea it goeth not well, and some euill came to it, they runne to their Gods and caft them in the water, and put them in the flame of the fire sometimes, and let them scorch a little, and spurning them often, and tread them under foot, and give them rayling words, till their businesse be ended. and then they carrie them with playing and feafts, and give them their Offerings, Offerings.

They hold for a great Offering a Hogges head boyled: they offer Hennes, Grefe, Duckes and Rice all dreft, and a great pot of Wine. After they present it all to the Gods, they fet his portion apart, which is, to put in a Difh, the small points of the Hogs care, the bils, and the points 30 of the clawes of the Hennes, Geefe, and Duckes, a few cornes of Rice very few, and put in with great heed, three or foure drops of Wine very heedfully, that there fall not many drops from the Pot. Thefe things fo fet in a Bason that they fet them on the Altar to their Gods for to eate, and they fet themselves there before the Gods to eate all that which they bring.

The Deuill

They worthip the Deuill also, which they paint after our fashion: and say that they worthip him because he maketh those which are good, Deuils; and the euill, he maketh Buffes, or Kine, or other beafts. And they fay that the Deuill hath a Mafter that teacheth him his Knaueries: thefe things fay the base people: the better fort fay they worship him because hee shall doe them no

When they will launch any new ship to the Sea, their Priests being called by them come into the ships to doe their Sacrifices with long side Garments of Silke. They fee about the shippe many flags of Silke, they paint in the prow of the flup the Deaill, to the which they make many reuerences and Offerings, and fay they doe it becaute the Deuill shall doe no hure to the ship. They offer to the Gods Papers with divers Images painted, and other of fundry kinde of cuttings, and they burne them all before the Idols with certayne Ceremonies and well tuned Songs, and while their finging doth laft, they ring cercayne small Bels, and among all they yie

None of these Priests have Wines, but they line wickedly and filthily.

Feafts.

Traditionall

The first day of the yeare, which is in the new Moone of March, they make through all the Land great Feafts, they visit one another, the chiefe principally doe make great Banquets. How much these people are curious in the rule and government of the Countrey, and in their common Traffique, so much they are beaftly in their Gentilities, in the viage of their Gods and Idola-60 tries. For befides that which is faid, they have many Gentilicall Lyes, of men that were turned into Dogges, and afterward into men, and of Snakes that were converted into men, and many which they worthipped, and trusting in the little estimation they held their Gods in and in beine men that would be fatisfied with reason, I threw the flones downe to the ground, whereat fome ranne very fiercely at me and angry, asking me wherefore I had done that, I went milly to them, and fmiling, faid to them, because they were so inconsiderate that they worshipped those fromes. They asked me wherefore should they not adore them? and I shewed them how they were better then they, seeing they had the vie of reason, feete, hands, and eyes, wherewith they did divers things that the stones could not doe, and that seeing they were better they should not abase and esteeme so little of themselves as to worship things so vile they being so noble. They answered me that I had reason, and went out with me in company, leaving the stones TO on the ground : fo that there is likelihood and shew of their becomming Christians. And it mas kethallo much to this purpose, their not making any difference of meate, as all the people of India doth. And feeing that among all the meates they effeeme the Porke moft, it is almost impossible for them to become Turkes.

I entred one day into a Temple and came to an Altar; where were certaine stones set vp

Notwithstanding, there are two verie great inconveniences to make any Christians in this Countrey. The one is, that in no wife they will permit any noueltie in the Countrey, as in fome fort it may bee seene in the matter of the Moores. So that whatsoever noveltie that is in No novelie, the Countrey, the Loubias take order prefently how to represent; and it goeth no further, Whence it happened in Cantan, because they faw a Portugall measure the entries of the Gates, they fet presently Watches that none should come in without licence, nor goe voon the Walls. 20 The lesond is, that no strange person may enter into China without leave of the Louthids, nor be

To the about faid is joyned the common people to bee greatly in feare of the Louthias. wherefore none of them durst become a Christian without their licence, or at the least many would not doeit. Therefore as a man cannot be feeled in the Country, hee cannot continue Preaching, and by confequence he cannot freetifie and preferre the fruit. There was not withstanding one way how to Preach freely, and fruit might be made in the Country, without any to dogge barking at the Preacher, nor any Louchia doe him hurt any way : which is, if hee hair a licence for it of the King : And it might bee obtayned if a folemne Embassage were sent with a for Notes

It feemeth that because this sinne is common among them, God was willing to fend them a grieuous punishment in some places of the earth, the which was common iff all China. The principall Londing of Sanxi and of Santon, wrote vnto the King, faying, that in those Prounces the earth did flake terribly; and the dayes waxed darke like night (hee Japh not how long) a South-faver told them all that should happen. In the yeere before in the moneth of September, the earth opened in many places, and under it were heard great noyles like the found of Bells, there followed a great winde with much rayne, and the winde ranne about all the Compatie. Before that wee doe come to Cinese, we have to passe through many places, fides the two 20 and some of great importance. For this Country is so well inhabited neere the Sea side, that royall Proun-

From these places in number infinite, you shall come vnto two Cities very populous, and be- same, and so ing compared with Cincee, not possibly to bee discerned which is the greater of them. These the despetical this Gine. Cities are as well walled as any Cities in all the world. As you come into either of them, flan-Pofte Horfer. deth fo great and mightie a Bridge, that the like thereof I have never feene in Portugall, nor else Their months 30 where. I heard one of my fellowes say, that he told in one Bridge fortie Arches. The occasion Excellent wale wherefore these Bridges are made so great, is for that the Country is toward the Sea very plaine and an admiand low, and ouerwhelmedeuer as the Sea-water encreafeth. The breadth of the Bridges, although it be well proportioned vnto the length thereof, yet are they equally built, no higher in the middle than at either end, in fuch wife that you may directly fee from the one end to the other, the fides are wonderfully well engraved after the manner of Rome Workes. But that wee Magnificent did most maruell at, was therewithall the hugenesse of the stones, the like wheref, as we came in- stones, to the City, we did see many set up in places dishabited by the way, to no small charges of theirs. howbeit to little purpole, wheras no body feeth them but fuch as do come by. The Arches are not made after our fashion, vaulted with sundry stones set together: but paued, as it were, whole stones 40 reaching from one Pillar to another, in fuch wife that they lie both for the Arches heads, & gallantly ferue also for the high-way. I have been astonied to behold the hugenesse of these aforesaid stones, some of them are twelue paces long and vpward, the least eleuen good paces long, and an tiones, tome or treatment of the state of th want of Stone they vie to lay Bricke: in this voyage we travelled ouer certaine Hills, where the bricked, or wayes were pitched, and in many places no worfe paued than in the plaine ground.

The Countrey is so well inhabited, that no one foot of ground is left vntilled : small store of Culture and cattell haue we feene this way, we faw onely certaine Oxen wherewithall the countrey-men busbander. doe plough their ground. One Oxe draweth the Plough alone, not onely in this Shire, but in other places also, wherein is greater store of cattell. These countrey-men by art doe that in til-to lage, which we are constrained to doe by force. Here be fold the voydings of Close-stooles, although there wanteth not the dung of beafts : and the excrements of man are good marchandise throughout all China. The Dung-fermers seeke in enery street by exchange to buy their durtie ware for Hearbs and Wood. The custome is very good for keeping the Citie cleane. There is great abundance of Hennes, Geese, Duckes, Swine, and Goates, Wethers have they none: the Hennes are fold by weight, and so are all other things. Two pound of Hennes flesh, Goose, or Ducke, is worth two Foi of their money, that is, three halfe pence. Swines flesh is fold at a peny the pound. Beefe beareth the same price, for the scarcitie thereof, howbeit Northward from Fuquies, and further from the Sea coast, there is Beefe more plentie, and fold better cheape, Beefe onely excepted, great aboundance of all these Viands wee have had in all the Cities wee passed

60 through. And if this Countrey were like vnto India, the Inhabitants whereof eate neither Hen, Beefe, nor Porke, but keepe that onely for the Portugals and Moores, they would bee fold here for nothing. But it fo falling out that the Chineans are the greatest eaters in all the world, they doe feed vpon all things, specially vpon Porke, the fatter that is vnto them, the leffe lothiome. The highest price of these things aforesaid, I have set downe, better cheape shall you sometimes

In another Citie neere to this, there happened the same, but in this none escaped. In a Citie called Lenchimon the River increased in such sort, that it ouer-flowed the Citie, where infinite people were drowned. In a Citie called Hien, was an Earthquake, with the which many hou les fell, which flew neere eight thousand soules. In Puckers, the house of the Kings kinsman fell and flew all that were in the house, except a Childe of seuen or eight yeeres old his sonne. In a Countrey called 20 Enchmoen, at midnight the houses fell, and the Citie remayned desolate and ruined, where perished neere one hundred thousand soules. In a Citie called Inchangen, in one day and a night, the Riner did flow and ebbe ten times, and with the great floud many people perished. Hitherto the translation of the Letter: that which followeth, was heard by word of mouth of the Portugals that were in the Port of Causan in the moneth of May, and I received the Letter in September.

Sanxi

In a Citie called Sanzi, from midnight till fine of the clocke in the morning, the earth shooke three times, the eighteenth of lanuarie, 1556. and the next day after, from midnight till noone, three times the eight extensive and the state of the fayd month, the earth flooke mightily after midnight with great Thunder and Lightnings, and all the Prounce was burn, 30 and all the people thereof, and all the Suburbes, Townes, and Cities: they fay it is from bound to bound, fiftie or fixtie leagues, that there was not one faued but a Childe, fonne to a kinfman of the King, which was carried to the King. And the third of Februarie in the same yeere, in the Citie of Panquin where the King is, fell a shower of rayne like bloud. These newes brought one of China that came to Cantan, from a Citie neere to Sanki, to give newes to a Louthis that hee should resort to his owne house, and said, that the Citie where he was a dweller was ouerflowne, and that he knew not whether it would perifh with the reft. That which ought to bee held for truth, is, that in three Prounces which commonly are fayd to be deflroyed, there was no more destruction then of those places whereof the Letter maketh mention, or little more, The agreeing in the Childe, sheweth that the Towne whereof the Letter maketh mention with 40 the childe, was in the Prouince of Sanxi. This hath more apparance of truth, because the Letter was written from the Court, then to fay that all the three Prouinces perifhed.

After the happening of the things about aid : the same yeere in the Province of Contana Woman which went to the Panchasi, told him that the Province of Cansi would bee destroyed with power from Heaven, the which after shee was well whipt, was imprisoned : but in the moneth of May of the same yeere, there fell great store of rayne verie hot, with the which the earth seemed to burne, and many people perished with the great heate : but the Prouince perished not altogether: wherefore this woman was carried to the King, which was in prison in the place where the Portugals were, which told this.

The name Louses is more generall and common vnto moe, than equalitie of honour thereby fignified, agreeth withall. Such Lonces that doe setue their Prince in weightie matters for inflice, are created after triall made of their learning : but the other which serue in smaller affaires, as Capitaines, Constables, Sergeants by Land and Sea, Receivers, and such like, whereof there be meuery Citie, as also in this, very many are made for fauour : the chiefe Loutess are ferued kneeling. The whole Province China is divided, as I have faid, into thirteene Shires, in every Shire at the cours al, chaen. leaft is one Gouernour, called there Tutan, in fome Shires there be two. Chiefe in office next vnto them be certaine other named Chians, that is, high Commissioners, as you would say, or Visiters, with full authoritie in fuch wife, that they doe call vnto an account the Tutores themselves. 30 but their authoritie lasteth not in any Shire longer than one yeere. Neuerthelesse, in euery Shire, being at the least seuen Cities, yea, in some of them fifteene or sixteene, besides other Boroughs and Townes, not well to be numbred, these Visiters where they come, are so honoured and feared, as though they were fome great Princes. At the yeeres end their circuit done, they come wnto that City which is chiefe of others in the Shire, to doe Iuffice there : finally, bufying themfelues in the fearthing out of fuch as are to receive the order of Lonedist hereof more shall be faid in another place.

Ouer and belides these officers in the chiefe Citie of each one of these aforesaid thirteene Prouinces, is resident one Ponchiassi, Captaine thereof, and Treasurer of all the Kings repenues. This Magistrate maketh his abode in one of the foure greatest houses that be in all their head Cities. In the second great house dwelleth another Magustrate, called Anchiassi, a great officer also, for he hath dealings in all matters of luftice. Twzi, another officer fo called, lieth in the third house, a Magistrate of importance, specially in things belonging vnto warfare, for thereof hath hee charge. There is resident in the fourth house a fourth Officer, bearing name Tail. In this house is the principall prison of all the Citie. Each one of these Magistrates aforesaid may both lay euill doers in prilon, and deliuer them out againe, except the tact bee heynous and of importance : in fuch a cale they can doe nothing, except they doe meet altogether. And if the deed deserve death, all they together cannot determine thereof, without recourse made voto the Chian wheresoeuer he be, or to the Tutan: and eftloones it falleth out, that the case be referred vnto higher power.

In all Cities, not onely chiefe in each Shire, but in the rest also are meanes found to make mencement or Loutens. Many of them doe studie at the Prince his charges, wherefore at the yeeresend they resort vnto the head Cities, whither the Chians doe come, as it hath beene earst said, as well to giue these degrees, as to sit in judgement ouer the prisoners.

The Chians goe in circuit every yeere, but fuch as are to be chosen to the greatest off ces, meet not but from three yeeres to three yeeres, and that in certain large halls appointed for them to be examined in. Many things are asked them, whereunto if they doe answere accordingly, and be found fufficient to take their degree, the Chian by and by granteth it them : but the Cap and Girdle whereby they are knowne to be Lonteas, they weare not before that they bee confirmed by the King. Their examination done, and triall made of them, fuch as have taken their degree 60 wont to be given them with all Ceremonies, vie to banquet and feast many daies together (as the Chineans failion is to end all their pleatures with eating and drinking) and for maine chofen to doe the King feruice in matters of learning. Neither We, that is, the is the Nation onely civill at meat, but also in conversation and in courtesie they seeme to exceed Italian; and all other. Likewile in their dealings, after their manner they are lo readie, that they farre paffe Spaniards, all other Gentiles and Moores: the greater States are so vaine, that they line their clothes with the best filke that may be found. The Louisarare an idle generation, without all manner of exercises and pastimes, except it be eating and drinking. Sometimes they walke abroad in the fields, to make the Souldiers shoot at Prioks with their Bowes, but their eating passeth : they 40 will fland eating even when the other doe draw to shoot. The Pricke is a great Blanket spread Shooting. on certaine long Poles, he that striketh it; hath of the best man there standing a piece of Crimson

The Inhabitants of China, bee very Idolaters, all generally doe worship the heavens: and as Idolater we are wont to lay, Godknowethit: to fay they at enery word, Tien Tautee, that is to fay, The Heavens doe know it. Some doe worship the Sunne, and some the Moone, as they thinke good, for none are bound more to one then to another. In their Temples, the which they doe call Meani, they have a great Altar in the same place as we have, true it is, that one may goe round about it. There fet they up the Image of a certaine Laures of that Countrey, whom they have in great reverence for certaine notable things he did. At the right hand flandeth the Deuill, much 50 more vely painted then we doe vie to det him out, whereunto great homage is done by fuch as come into the Temple to aske counsell, or to draw lots: this opinion they have of him, that he is malicious and able to doceuill. If you aske them what they doe thinke of the foules departed, they will answer, that they be immortall, and that as soone as any one departeth out of this life, he becommeth a deuil, if he have lived well in this world, if otherwise, that the same deuil changeth him into a Bufle, Oxe, or Dog. Wherefore to this Deuill doe they much honour, to him do they facrifice, praying him that he will make them like vnto himselfe, and not like other beafts. They have moreover another fort of Temples, wherein both vpon the Altars, and also on the walls doe fland many Idols well proportioned, but bare headed : Their beare name Omishofon, accounted of them spirits, but such as in heaven doe neither good nor euill, thought to bee such

Againe, they hold opinion, that if a man doe well in this life, the heavens will give him many temporall bleffings, but if he doe euill, then shall he have infirmities, diseases, troubles, and penurie, and all this without any knowledge of God. Finally, this people knoweth no other thing then to live and die, yet because they be reasonable creatures, all seemed good vnto them we spake in our language, though it were not very sufficient. Our manner of praying so well liked them, that in prison importunately they befought vs to their kindred and friends doe refort of custome, with presents of Iewells or Money, receiving againe for their reward good cheere. They keepe in like manner a generall Feaft, with great Banquets that day their King was borne. But their most principall and greatest Feat of all, and best cheare, is the first day of their new yeere, namely, the first day of the New Moone of Februarie, so that their first moneth is March, and they reckon the times ac-

a King. Now will I speake of the manner the which the Chinems doe observe in doing Justice. Be-29 cause the Chinish King maketh his abode continually in the City Pachin, his Kingdome so great, the shires to many, as before it hath beene said : in it therefore the Gouernours and Rulers. much like vnto our Sheriffes be so appointed suddenly, and speedily discharged againe, that they haue no time to grow nought. Furthermore, to keepe the State in more fecuritie, the Longe that governe one shire, are chosen out of some other shire distant farre off, where they must leave their Wives, Children, and Goods, carrying nothing with them but themselves. True it is, that at their comming thither they doe find in a readinesse all things necessarie, their House, Furniture, Seruants, and all other things in such perfection and plentie, that they want nothing, Thus King is well ferued without all feare of Treason.

In the principall Cities of the shires be fourechiese Louiess, before whom are brought all 30 matters of the inferiour Townes, throughout the whole Realme. Divers other Loness have the managing of Iuftice, and receiving of Rents, bound to yeeld an account thereof vnto the greater Officers. Other doe fee that there be no euill rule kept in the Citie : each one as it behough him. Generally all these doe imprison Malesactors, cause them to be whipped and racked hovfing them vo and downe by the armes with a cord, a thing very viuall there, and accounted no shame. These Louteas doe vie great diligence in the apprehending of the Theeues, so that it is a wonder to fee a Thiefe escape away in any Towne, Citie, or Village. Vpon the Sea neere vn-

to the shoare many are taken, and looke even as they are taken, so be they first whipped, and af-HardPrisons. terward laid in Prison, where shortly after they all dye for hunger and cold. At that time, when we were in Prison, there dyed of them aboue threescore and ten. Their whips be certaine pie-40 ces of Canes, clett in the middle, in fuch fort that they feeme rather plaine then sharpe. He that is to bee whipped lyeth groueling on the ground. Vpon his thighes the Hangman layeth on blowes mightily with these Canes, that the standers by tremble at their crueltie. Tenne stripes draw a great deale of bloud, twentie or thirtie spoyle the fiesh altogether, fiftie or threescore will require long time to be healed, and if they come to the number of one hundred, then are they incurable. The Louteas observe moreover this: when any man is brought before them to bee examined, they aske him openly in the hearing of as many as be prefent, be the offence neuer fo great. Thus did they also behave themselus with vs. For this cause amongst them can there be no false witnes as daily amongst vs it falleth out. This good commeth thereof that many being alwayes about 50 the Judge to heare the Euidence, and beare witnesse, the Processe cannot be fallissed, as it hapnets Iometimes with vs. The Moores, Gentiles, and Ienes, have all their fundry Oathes, the Moores doe sweare by their Moffafos, the Brachmans by their Fili, the rest likewise by thethings they doe worship. The Chineans, though they be wont to sweare by Heauen, by the Moone, by the Sunne, and by all their Idols, in judgement neuerthelesse they sweare not at all. If for some offence an Oath be vied of any one, by and by with the least enidence hee is tormented; fo be the Witnesses he bringeth, if they tell not the truth, or doe in any point disagree, except they bee men of worthip and credit, who are beleeved without any farther matter: the rest are made to fo low, that they dare not once flirre. Againe, thele Lonteas as great as they bee, not with standing the multitude of Noraries they have, not trusting any others, doe write all great Processes and matters of importance themselves. Moreover, one vertue they have worthy of great praise, and that is, being men io well regarded and accounted of as though they were Princes, they bee confesse the truth by force of Torments and Whips. Besides this order observed of them in Examinations, they doe feare so much their King, and he where he maketh his abode keepeth them 60

nations about measure in giving audience. Wee poore strangers brought before them might say what we would, as all to be Lyes and Falaces that they did write, nor did we fland before them with the vivall Ceremonies of that Country, yet did they beare with vs fo patiently that they caused vs to wonder, knowing specially how little any Aduocate or Judge is wont in our Countrey to beare with vs. For wherefocuer in any Towne of Christendome should bee accused ynknowne men as we were, I know not what end the very Innocents cause would have that wee in a Heathen Countrey, having our great Enemies two of the chiefest men in a whole Towne, Senere Inflicewanting an Interpreter, ignorant of that Countrey Language, did in the end fee our great Adperfaries cast into Prison for our take, and deprived of their Offices and Honour for not doing Inflice; yea, not to escape death, for as the rumour goeth, they shall bee beheaded. Somewhat is now to be faid of the Lawes that I have beene able to know in this Countrey, Lawes, and first, no Theft or Murther, is at any time pardoned; Adulterers are put in Prison . and the fact once proued, condemned to dye, the woman's Husband must accuse them; this order is kept with men and women found in that fault, but Theeues and Murtherers are imprisoned as I have faid, where they shortly dye for hunger and cold. If any one haply escape by bribing the lavlor to give him meate, his Processe goeth farther, and commeth to the Court where hee is condemned to dye. Sentence being given, the Priloner is brought in publike with a terrible band of A Pillorie men that lay him in Irons hand and foot, with a board at his necke one handfull broad, in length board.

reaching downe to his knees, cleft in two parts, and with a hole one handfull downe-ward in 20 the Table fit for his necke, the which they enclote up therein, nayling the board fast together. one handfull of the board standeth vp behind in the necke; the sentence and cause wherefore the fellon was condemned to dye, is written in that part of the Table that standeth before. This Ceremonie ended, he is laid in a great Prison in the company of some other condemned persons. the which are found by the King as long as they doe lue. The board aforefaid fo made tormenteth the Prifoners very much, keeping them both from the rest, and eke letting them to eate commodiously, their hands being manicled in Irons under that board, fo that in fine there is no remedie but death. In the chiefe Cities of euery shire, as we have beforefaid, there be foure principall Houses, in each of them a Prisoner: but in one of them where the Tails maketh his abode. there a greater and a more principall Prison then in any of the rest : and although in every Citie there be many, neuerthelesse in three of them remayne onely such as bee condemned to dye. Their death is much prolonged, for that ordinarily there is no execution done but once a yeere, though many dye for hunger and cold, as we have frene in this Prifon. Execution is done in this Execution manner The Chian, to wit the high Commissioner or Lord Chiefe Iuitice, at the yeares end goeth to the head Citie, where hee heareth againe the causes of such as bee condemned. Many times he deliuereth some of them, declaring that board to have beene wrongfully put about their neckes : the visitation ended, he chooseth out seuen or eight, not many more or lesse, of the greatest Malefactors, the which, to feare and keepe in awe the people, are brought into a great Market place, where all the great Louiess meete together, and after many Ceremonies and Superstitions, as the vie of the Countrey is, are beheaded. This is done once a yeare; who so escapeth that day, may be sure that he shall not be put to death all that yeare following, and so remayneth at the Kings charges in the greater Prison. In that Prison where wee lay were alwayes one hundred and moe of these condemned persons, besides them that lay in other Prisons. These Pritons wherein the condemned captines doe remayne are so strong, that it hath not strength of beene beard, that any Prisoner in all China bath escaped out of Prison, for indeed, it is a thing the Prisons impossible. The Prisons are thus builded. First, all the place is mightily walled about, the wals be very frong and high, the gate of no lefte force : within it three other gates, before you come where the Prisoners doe lye, there many great Lodgings are to be seene of the Louteas, Notaries, Parthions, that is, fuch as doe there keepe watch and ward day and night, the Court large and paued, on the one fide whereof flandeth a Prison, with two mighty gates, wherein are kept 50 fuch Prisoners as haue committed enormious offences. This Prison is so great, that in it are fireets and Market places wherein all things necessary are fold. Yea, some Prisoners line by that kind of Trade, buying and felling, and letting out beds to hire: some are daily fent to Prison, some daily delivered, wherefore this place is never voyd of feven or eight hundred men that goe at Store of Prifolibertie. Into one other Prison of condemned persons shall you goe at three Iron gates, the Court pa-

ued and vaulted round about, and open aboue as it were a Cloyfter. In this Cloyfter bee eight Roomes with Iron Doores, and in each of them a large Gallerie, wherein enery night the Priioners doe lye at length, their feet in the stockes, their bodies hampered in huge woodden grates that keepe them from litting fo that they lye as it were in a Cage, fleepe if they can : in the mor-60 ning they are looted againe that they may goe into the Court. Notwithstanding the strength of this Prison, it is kept with a Garrison of men, part whereof watch within the House, part of them in the Court, some keepe about the Prison with Lanthornes, and Watch-bels, answering one another flue times every night, and giving warning to lowde, that the Loutea relling in a Chamber not neere thereunto may heare them. In these Prilons of condemned persons remay ne fome fifteene, other twentie yeares imprisoned, not executed, for the love of their honourable Friends that feeke to prolong their lines. Many of these Prisoners bee Shoomakers, and have from the King a certayne allowance of Rice : fome of them worke for the Keeper, who fuffee reth them to goe at libertie without fetters and boards, the better to worke. Howbeit when the Loutes calleth his Checke Roll, and with the Keeper vieweth them, they all weare their Lineries, that is, boards at their neckes, Ironed hand and foote. When any of these Prisoners dveth, he is to bee seene of the Lonten and Notaries, brought out at a gate so narrow, that there can but one be drawne out there at once. The Prisoner beeing brought forth, one of the afore. faid Parthians, ftriketh him thrice on the head with an Iron fledge, that done, hee is delivered unto his friends, if hee haue any, otherwise the King hireth men to carrie him to his buriall in to the fields.

Thus Adulterers and Theeues are vied, Such as be imprisoned for Debt once knowne, lye there untill it be paid. The Taiffu or Louisa calleth them many times before him by the vertue of his Office, who understanding the cause wherefore they doe not pay their Debts, appointeth them a certaine time to doe it, within the compasse whereof if they discharge not their Debts beeing Debters indeed, then they be whipped and condemned to perpetual! Imprisonment : if the Cre-Depters indeed, then they do wanted before another, they doe, contrary to our manner, pay ditors be many, and one is to be paid before another, they doe, contrary to our manner, pay him first, of whom they last borrowed, and so ordinarily the rest, in such fort that the first Len der be the last Receiver. The same order is kept in paying Legacies: the last named, received

When I faid that fuch as be committed to Prison for Theft, and Murther, were judged by the Court, I meant not them that were apprehended in the deed doing, for they need no tryall, but are brought immediately before the Tutan, who out of hand giveth sentence. Other not taken so openly, and doe need tryall, are the Malefactors put to execution once a yeare in the chiefe Cities, to keepe in awe the people : or condemned, doe remayne in Prison, looking for their day. Theeues being taken, are carried to Prison from one place to another in a Chest vpon mens shoulders, hired therefore by the King, the Cheft is fixe handfuls high, the Prisoner sitteth therein vpon a bench, the couer of the Chest is two boards; amidst them both a Pillory-like hole, for the Prisoner his necke, there sitteth he with his head without the Chest, and the rest of his bodie within, not able to moue or turne his head this way or that way, nor to plucke it in: the necess. ties of nature he voideth at a hole in the bottome of the Cheft, the meate he eateth is put into his mouth by others. There abideth he day and night during his whole Iourney: if happily his Porters stumble, or the Chest doe jogge, or be set downe carelesly, it turneth to his great paints that fitteth therein, all fuch motions being vnto him hanging as it were. Thus were our companions carried from Cinces, seuen dayes journey, neuer taking any rest as afterward they told vs. and their greatest griefe was to stay by the way : as soone as they came beeing taken out of the Chefts, they were not able to stand on their feet, and two of them dyed shortly after.

When we lay in prison at Fuquico, we came many times abroad, and were brought to the Palaces of Noble men, to be seene of them and their wives, for that they had never seene any Portugall before. Many things they asked vs of our Country, and our fashions, and did 40 write every thing, for they be curious in novelties aboue measure. The Gentlemen shew great curtesie vnto strangers, and so did we finde at their hands, and because that many times we were brought abroad into the Citie, formwhat will I fay of fuch things as I did fee therein, being a gallant Citie, and chiefe in one of the thirteene shires afore-said. The Citie Fnquieo, is very great and mightly walled with square stone both within and without, and as it may seeme by the breadth thereof, filled vp in the middle with Earth, laid ouer with Bricke, and couered with Tyle, and after the manner of Porches or Galleries, that one might dwell therein. The flayres they vie, are so easily made, that one may goe them vp and downe a Horse-backe, as eftsoones they doe : the streets are paued, as alreadie it hath beene faid : there bee a great number of Merchants, every one hath written in a great Table at his doore fuch things as hee hath to fell. In 30 like manner every Artizan painteth out his craft: the Market places be large, great abundance of all things there be to be fold. The Citie standeth vpon water, many streames runne through it, the bankes pitched, and so broad that they ferue for ffreets to the Cities vie. Querthe Breames are fundry Bridges both of Timber and Stone, that being made levell with the streets, hinder not the passage of the Barges to and fro, the Chanels are so deepe. Where the streames come in and goe out of the Citie, be certayne Arches in the Wall, there goe in and out their Parai, that is a kind of Barges they have, and this onely in the day time : at night these Arches are closed up with gates, fo doe they that up all the gates of the Citie. These streames and Barges doe embellish much the Citie, and make it as it were to seeme another Venice. The buildings are euen, well made, high not lofted, except it be some wherein Merchandize is lail. It is a World 60 to fee how great these Cities are, and the cause is, for that the houses are built even, as I have said, and doe take a great deale of roome. One thing we faw in this Citie that made vs all to wonder, and is worthy to be noted : Namely, ouer a Porch at the comming into one of the afore faid foure Houses, the which the King hath in every shire for his Governours as I have before faid,

Parai. Another frandeth a Towre built vpon fortie Pillars, each one whereof is but one stone, each one fortie Tower files handfuls or spans long: in breadth or compasse twelve, as many of vs did measure them. Besides dingonierie this, their greatnesse such in one piece, that it might seeme impossible to worke them : they bee Pilkrs each of moreouer couered, and in colour, length, and breath so like, that the one nothing differeth one from.

Wee are wont to call this Countrey China, and the people Chineans, but as long as wee were Name of China Prisoners, not hearing amongst them at any time that name, I determined to learne how they were called : and asked fometimes by them thereof, for that they vnderstood vs not when wee called them Chineans, I answered them, that all the Inhabitants of India named them Chineans. To wherefore I prayed them that they would tell me, for what occasion they are so called, whither peraduenture any Citie of theirs bare that name. Hereunto they alwayes answered me, to have no fuch name, nor ever to have had. Then did I aske them what name the whole Countrey beareth, and what they would answer being asked of other Nations what Countrey-men they were! It was told me, that of ancient time in this Countrey had beene many Kings, and though prefently it were all under one, each Kingdome neuertheleffe enjoyed that name it first had. thef-Kingdomes are the Prouinces I spake of before. In conclusion, they sayd, that the whole Tamen the pro-Countrey is called Tamen, and the Inhabitants Tamegines, fo that this name China or Chineans, pername of is not heard of in that Countrey. I doe thinke that the neareneffe of another Province therea. China Taliga bout called Cochinchina, and the inhabitants thereof Cochineffes, first discourred before that Chi-20 #4 Was, lying not farre from Malacca, did give occasion both to the one Nation and to the one recre Poles ther of that name Chineans, as also the whole Countrey to bee named China. But their proper name of Manname is that aforefaid. I have heard moreover, that in the Citie Nanguim, remayneth a Table of gold, and in it writ- gines.

ten a Kings name, as a memorie of that residence the Kings were wont to keepe there. This ta- Tables reueble standeth in a great Palace, couered alwayes, except it bee in some of their festivall dayes, at renced. what time they are wont to let it bee feene : couered neuertheleffe as it is, all the Nobilitie of the Citie south of dutie to doe it every day reverence. The like is done in the head Cities of all the other Shires, in the Palaces of the Ponchiassini, wherein these aforesaid tables doe fland with the Kings name written in them, although no reverence bee done thereunto but in 30 folemne Featts.

I have likewise vnderstood that the Citie Pachin, where the King maketh his abode, is so great, that to goe from one fide to the other, befides the Suburbs, (which are greater then the Citie it felfe) it requireth one whole day a horfebacke, going hackney pace. In the Suburbs bee many wealthy Merchants of all forts. They told me furthermore, that it was Moted about, and in the Motes great store of Fish, whereof the King maketh great gaynes. It was also told mee Their enemies that the King of China had no King to wage battell withall, belides the Tartars, with whom hee had concluded a peace more then fourefcore veeres agoe.

There bee Hospitals in all their Cities, alwayes full of people, wee neuer faw any poore bodie beg. We therefore asked the cause of this : answered it was, that in every Citie there is a great 40 circuit, wherein bee many houses for poore people, for Blinde, Lame, Old folke, not able to trauell for age, nor having any other meanes to live. These folke have in the aforesaid houses, ever plentie of Rice during their lives, but nothing elfe. Such as bee received into these houses, come in after this manner. When one is sicke, blinde, or lame, hee maketh a supplication to the Ponchiassi, and prouing that to bee true he writeth, hee remaineth in the aforesaid great lodging as long as he lineth : befides this, they keepe in thefe places Swine and Hennes, whereby the poore bee releeved without going a begging.

I say I before that China was full of Rivers, but now I minde to confirme the same anew : for the farther wee went into the Country, the greater we found the rivers. Sometimes we were Store of rivers so farre off from the Sea, that where wee came no Sea-fish had beene seene, and Salt was there

50 very deare, of fresh-water Fish yet was there great abundance, and that fish very good : they keepe it good after this manner. Where the Rivers doe meete, and so passe into the Sea, there lyeth great flore of Boates, specially where no falt-water commeth, and that in March and Aprill. These Boates are so many that it seemeth wonderfull, neither serue they for other then to take small fish. By the rivers sides they make leyres of fine and strong Nets, that lye three Plentic of fish; handfuls under water, and one aboue, to keepe and nourish their Fish in, untill such time as o- and their keether fifters doe come with Boates, bringing for that purpose certaine great Chests lyned with ping of them. paper, able to hold water, wherein they carrie their fish vp and downe the riner, enery day renewing the cheft with fresh-water, and selling their fish in every Citie, Towne, and Village, where they passe, vnto the people as they need it : most of them have Net-leyres to keepe Fish 60 in alwayes for their prouision. Where the greater Boates cannot passe any farther forward, they take leffer, and because the whole Countrey is very well watred, there is so great plentie of diuers forts of Fish, that it is wonderfull to see : assuredly, wee were amazed to behold the manner of their prouision. Their Fish is chiefly nourished with the dung of Busles and Oxen, that greatly fatteth it. Although I fayd their fishing to bee in March and April, at what time wee faw them doe it, neverthelesse they told vs that they fished at all times for that viually they doe feed on Fish, wherefore it behooueth them to make their project

He seeketh of When wee had pasted Fuquien, we went into Quicen-shire, where the sine Clay vestellis He speaketh or made, as I sayd before : and we came to a Citie, the one side whereof is built vpon the sore Quanti where of a hill, whereby passet a River navigable: there we tooke Boate, and went by water toward the Sea: on each fide of the River we found many Cities, Townes, and Villages, wherein we faw great store of Merchandise, but specially of fine clay : there did we land by the way to buy vi-Etuals and other necessaries. Going downe this river Southward, wee were glad that we drew neere vnto 2 warmer Countrey, from whence we had beene farre diffant : this Countrey were to passed through in eight dayes, for our journey lay downe the streame. Before that I doe say any thing of that Shire wee came into, I will first speake of the great Citie of Quicin, wherein al. wayes remayneth a Tutan, that is a Gouernour, as you have feene, though fome Tutan doe gouerne two or three Shires. That Tutan that was condemned for our cause, of whom I spake before, was borne in this

Alus Cheuchi. and flore of Boarer

Countrey, but hee gouerned Fuquien-Shire : nothing it auayled him to bee io great an Officer. This Countrey is fo great, that in many places where wee went, there had beene as yet no talke of his death, although he were executed a whole yeere before. At the Cirie Quanche whither wee came, the river was fo great that it feemed a fea, though it were fo little where we tooke water, that wee needed small Boates. One day about nine of the clocke, beginning to to row neare the walls with the streame, wee came at noone to a bridge made of many Barges, ouer-linked all together with two mightie chaynes. There stayed we vntill it was late, but wee faw not one goe either up thereon or downe, except two Louibia's that about the going downe of the Sunne came and fet them downe there, the one in one fide, the other on the other fide, Then was the bridge opened in many places, and Barges both great and small to the number of fixe hundred began to passe : those that went vp the streame, at one place, such as came downe, at another. When all had thus shot the Bridge, then was it shut up againe. Wee heard fav that enery day they take this order in all principall places of Merchandile, for paying of the custome wnto the King, specially for Salt, whereof the greatest reuenues are made that the King hath in this Countrey. The passages of the bridge where it is opened, bee so neere the shore, that no- 10 thing can passe without touching the same. To flay the Barges at their pleasure, that they goe Bridge #1114 no farther forward are vied certaine yron instruments. The Bridge consisteth of one hundred and twelve Barges, there stayed we vntill the Eevening that they were opened, lothfomly oppressed by the multitude of people that came to fee vs, fo many in number, that we were enforced to goe aside from the banke vntill such time as the bridge was opened : howbeit, wee were neuerthelesse thronged about with many Boates full of people. And though in other Cities and places where we went, the people came so importunate vpon vs, that it was needfull to withdrawour felues: yet were wee heere much more molested for the number of people, and this bridge, the principall way out of the Citie vnto another place fo well inhabited, that were it walled about, it might bee compared to the Citie. When we had fhot the bridge, we kept along the Citie vn-40 till that it was night, then met wee with another river that loyned with this, we rowed up that 3000.Barges. by the walls, untill we came to another bridge gallantly made of Barges, but leffer a great deale then that other bridge over the greater streame : heerestayed we that night, and other two dayes with more quiet, being out of the prease of the people. These rivers doe meete without at one corner-point of the Citie. In either of them were so many Barges great and small, that wee all thought them at the least to bee aboue three thousand : the greater number thereof was in the lesser river, where we were. Amongst the rest, heere lay certaine greater vessels, called in their language Parai, that serue for the Tutan, when hee taketh his voyage by other rivers that ioyne with this, towards Pachin, where the King maketh his abode. Denrous to fee those Parai we got into some of them, where we found some chambers set foorth with gilded Beds very richly, 50 other furnished with tables and seates, and all other things so neate and in perfection, that

with faire

Quiacim-Shire, as farre as I can perceiue, lyeth upon the South. On that fide we kept at our first entrie thereinto, travelling not farre from the high mountaines we saw there. Asking what people dwelleth beyond those mountaines, it was told me that they bee Theeues, and men of a strange language. And because that vnto sundry places neere this River, the mountaines doe approach, whence the people issuing downe, doe many times great harme, this order is taken at the entrie into Quacim-Shire. To guard this River whereon continually goe to and fro Parai great and small fraught with Salt, Fish powdered with pepper, and other necessaries for that Countrey : they doe lay in divers places certaine Parai, and great Barges armed, wherein 60 watch and ward is kept day and night in both fides of the River, for the safetie of the passage, and securitie of such Parai as doe remayne there, though the travellers never goe but many in company. In every rode there bee at the least thirtie, in some two hundred men, as the passage requireth.

CHAP. II. Moorish feet and observation. Mogores, Bremes.

This guard is kept viually, vntill you come to the Citie Onebio, where continually the Tutan of this Shire, and eke of Cantan, maketh his abode. From that Citie vpward, where the river waxeth more narrow, and the paffage more dangerous, there be alwayes armed one hundred and fiftie Parai, to accompany other veilels fraught with merchandife, and all this at the Kings charges. This feemed vinto me one of the ilrangest things I did see in this Countrey,

When wee lay at Fuguien, we did fee certaine Moores, who knew to little of their feet, that Moores they could say nothing else, but that Wahomet was a Moore, my father was a Moore, and I am a Moore, with some other words of their Alcoran, wherewithall, in abilinence from Swines flesh, they live vntill the Deuill take them all. This when I faw, and being fure, that in many to Chinish Cities the reliques of Mahomer are kept, as toone as wee came to the Citie where these fellowes bee, I informed my felfe of them, and learned the truth. These Moores, as they told me. in times past came in great Ships fraught with merchandise from Pachin ward, to a Port granted vnto them by the King, as hee is wont to all them that trafficke into this Countrey. where they being arrived at a little Towne standing in the hauens mouth, in time converted unto their Sect the greatest Louisa there. When that Louisa with all his family was become Moorilb, the reft began likewise to doe the same. In this part of China the people bee at libertie, euery one to worship and follow what him liketh best. Wherefore no bodie tooke heed thereto, vntill fuch time as the Moores perceiving that many followed them in superstition. and that the Louten fauoured them, they began to forbid wholly the eating of Swines-flesh But all this Countrey men and women, choosing rather to forlake Father and Mother, then to leave off eating of Porke, by no meanes would yeeld to that proclamation. For besides the great defire they all have to eate that kind of meate, many of them doe lue thereby : and therefore the people complained vnto the Magistrates, acculing the Moores of a conspiracie pretended betwixt them and the Loutes, against their King. In this Countrey, as no suspition. no not one trayterous word is long borne withall : to was the King fpeedily aduertifed thereof, who gave commandement out of hand that the aforetaid Louten should bee put to death, and with him the Moores of most importance : the other to be layd first in Prison, and afterward to bee fent abroad into certaine Cities, where they remayned perpetual flaues vnto the King. To this Citie came by hap men and women threefcore and odde, who at this day are brought

20 to fine men and toure women, for it is now twentie yeeres agoe this happened. Their offipring passeth the number of two hundred, and they in this Citie, as the reit in other Cities. whither they were fent, have their Moscheas, whereunto they all refort enery Friday to keepe That is their their Holiday. But, as I thinke, that will no longer endure, then whiles they doe line, that Temples came from thence, for their posteritie is so consuled, that they have nothing of a Moore in them, but abstinence from Swines-fleih, and yet many of them doe eate thereof privily. They tell me that their natiue Countrey hath name Camarian, a firme land, wherein bee many Kings, and the Indish Countrey well knowne vnto them. It may to be: for as soone as they did fee our feruants (our feruants were Prenzaretes) they judged them to bee Indians : many of their words founded upon the Perficke tongue, but none of vs could understand them. I asked them. 40 whither they converted any of the Chinish Nation vnto their Scet : they answered me, that with much adoe, they concerted the women with whom they doe marrie, yeelding me no o. ther cause thereof, but the difficultie they finde in them to bee brought from eating Swinesflesh, and drinking of Wine. I have learned mor over, that the Sea whereby their Moores It seemeth that came to China were wont to travell, is a very great gulfe, that falleth into this Country they came up cut from Tartaria and Persia, leaung on the other side all the Countrey of China, and land thermer from of the Mogornes, drawing alwayes toward the South : and of all likelyhood it is even fo, the Caffin lea because that these Moores, the which wee have seene, bee rather browne then white, whereby they shew themselves to come from some warmer Countrey then China is, neere to Pachin, where the Rivers are frozen in the winter for cold, and many of them so vehemently, that Carts may paile o er them.

50 Wee did he in this Citie many Tartars, Mogorites, Bremes, and Laoynes, both men and Tarians. women. The Tartars are men very white, good librie-men, and Archers, confining with China on that fide where Pachin standeth, separated from thence by great Mountaines that are betwixt thele Kingdomes. Ouer them bee certaine wayes to paile, and for both fides, Ca- Monte Ular. files continually k pt with Souldiers : in time past, the Tariars were went alwayes to have w. rres with the Chineans, but these fourescore yeeres past they were quet, vintill the second yeere of our Imprisonment.

The Mogores bee in like manner white, and Heathen wee are aduertifed that of one fide they border upon these Tartars, and confine with the Perficke Tartares on the other fide, whereof wee faw in them fome tokens, as their manner of cloathes, and that kinde of Hat the Sa-

As ich the Bremes, was have feene in this Citie Chenchi certaine men and women, amongst Erimen. whom, there was one that came not long time, having as yet her havre tyed up after the Pe-ques fashion : this woman, and other moe with whom a blacke Moore damosell in our company had conference, and did vnderstand them well enough, had dwelt in Peebs. This new come woman, imagining that wee meant to make our abode in that Citie, bid vs to bee of good comfort, for that her Countrey was not distant from thence aboue fine dayes journey, and that out of her Countrey, there lay a high way for vs home into cur owne. Being asked the way, shee answered that the first three dayes the way lyeth ouer certaine great mountaines and wildernesse, afterward people to bee met withall againe. Thence two dayes journey more to the Bremes Countrey. Wherefore I doe conclude, that Chenchi is one of the confines of this Kingdome, separated by certaine huge Mountaines, as it hath beene already fayd, that lye out towards the South. In the residue of these mountaines standeth the Prouince Sian, the Lasyns to Countrey, Cambaia, Chinapa, and Cochinchina.

This Citie, chiefe of other fixteene, is fituated in a pleasant Playne, abounding in things necessarie. Sea-fish onely excepted, for it standeth farre from the Sea : of fresh Fish so much store. that the Market-places are neuer emptie. The walls of this Citie arevery strong and high: one day did I fee the Lomeas thereof goe vpon the walls, to take the view thereof, borne in their scates I spake of before, accompanied with a troupe of Horse-men, that went two and two: It was told me they might have gone three and three. Wee have feene moreover, that within this aforefaid Citie the King hath more than a thousand of his kindred lodged in great Palaces, in divers parts of the Citie : their gates bee red, and the entrie into their houses, that they may be knowne, for that is the Kings colour. Thefe Gentlemen, according to their nearenesse in bloud vnto the King, as soone as they bee married, receive their place in Honour: this place neither encreaseth nor diminisheth in any respect, as long as the King liueth, the King appointeth them their Wines and Familie, allowing them by the monethall things neceffarie abundantly, as hee doth to his Governours of Shires and Cities, howbeit, not one of these hath as long as hee lineth, any charge or government at all. They give themselves to eating and drinking, and bee for the most part burley men of bodie, insomnch that espying any one of them, whom wee had not feene before, wee might know him to bee the Kings Corfin. They bee neuertheleffe very pleafant, courteous, and fayre conditioned : neither did wee finde, all the time we were in that Citie, so much honour and good entertainment any where, as at their hands. They bid vs to their houses, to eate and drinke, and when they found vs not, or wee were not willing to goe with them, they bid our fernants, and slaues, causing them to fit downe with the first. Notwithstanding the good lodging these Gentlemen have fo commodious that they want nothing, yet are they in this bondage, that during life they neuer goe abroad. The cause, as I did vnderstand, wherefore the King so vseth his Coufins, is that none of them at any time may rebell against him : and thus bee shutteth them vp in three or foure other Cities. Most of them can play on the Lute : and to make that kinde of pastime peculiar vnto them onely, all other in the Cities where they doe line, bee forbidden that Instrument, the Curtizans and blinde folke onely excepted, who bee Musicians,

No Lordsbut

This King furthermore, for the greater securitie of his Realme, and the anoyding of tumults, 40 letteth not one in all his Countrey to bee called Lord, except hee be of his bloud. Many great Estates and Gouernours there be, that during their office are lodged Lord-like, and doe beare the port of mightie Princes : but they bee so many times displaced, and other placed anew, the put of migneter transcis. Does may be commany amount process and the they have not the while to become corput. True it is, that during their Office they be well prouided for, as afterward, also lodged at the Kings charges, and in penfon as long as they line, payed them monethly in the Cities where they dwell, by certaine officers appoint ted for that purpose. The King then is a Lord onely, not one besides him as you have seene, except it bee such as be of his bloud. A Nephew likewise of the King, the Kings Sisters sonne, lyeth continu-lly within the walls of the Citie, in a strong Palace built Castle-wise, euen as his others Coufins doe, temayning alwayes within doores, ferued by Eunuches, neuer dealing with 50 any matters. Their festivall dayes, new Moones, and full Moones, the Magistrates make great banquets, and so doe such as bee of the Kings bloud. The King his Nephew, hath name Vanfull, his Palace is walled about, the wall is not high, but four square, and in circuit nothing in-feriour to the walls of Goa, the out-side is painted red, in every square a Gate, and our each gate a Tower, made of timber excellently well wrought : before the principall Gate of the foure, that openeth into the high-street, no Louten, bee he neuer so great, may passe on horsebacke, or carried in his feate. Amidst this quadrangle, standeth the Palace where that Gentleman lyeth, doubtleffe, worth the fight, although wee came not in to fee it. By report the roofes of the towers and house, are glased greene, the greater part of the Quadrangle set with fauage Trees, as Oakes, Chefnuts, Cypreffe, Pine-apples, Cedars, and other fuch like that wee doe want, after the manner of a Wood, wherein are kept Stagges, Oxen, and other beafts, for that Lord his recreation neuer going abroad, as I have faid.

One preheminence this Citie hath aboue the rest where wee haue beene, and it of right as we doe thinke, that befides the multitude of Market-places, wherein all things are to bee fold, through every threete continually are cryed all things necessarie, as Flesh of all forts, fresh-Fish, Hearbes, Oyle, Vineger, Meale, Rice, In famma, all things to plentifully, that many houses need no feruants, euerie thing being brought to their doores. Most part of the Merchants remayne in the Suburbs, for that the Cities are that vp every night, as I have favil The Merchants therefore, the better to attend their bufinelle, doe choose rather to make their abode without in the Suburbs, then within the Citie. I have feene in this River a pretie kinde Fifthing with abode without in the Suburbs, then within the Citic. A faue teene in this court a precie angue of Fishing, not to be comitted in my opinion, and therefore will I fee it down. The King Comments, the bred are the day of the three days they bred are the day of they they then hath in many rivers good flore of Barges full of Sea-crowes, that breed, are fed, and doe dye hath in many there good store of parges that of Sca-crowes, that breed, are sed, and doe dye georges, that therein, in certaine Cages, allowed monethly a certaine promition of Rice. These Barges the they wallow To Kine bestoweth upon his greatest Magistrates, giving to some two, to some three of them, not their prer. as hee thinketh good, to Fish therewithall after this manner. At the houre appointed to Fish, One hath praas hee thinketingoos, to Pant the twister and the River is shallow, and the Crowes diddth all the Barges are brought together in a circle, where the River is shallow, and the Crowes bondon, tyed together vnder the wings, are let leape downe into the water, fome vnder, fome 2-

boue, worth the looking vpon : each one as hee hath filled his bagge, goeth to his owne

Barge and emptieth it, which done, hee returneth to fish againe. Thus having taken good store of Fish, they fet the Crowes at libertie, and doe fuffer them to fish for their owne pleasure. There were in that Citie, where I was, twentie Barges at the leaft, of these aforesaid Crowes. I went almost euery day to fee them. yet could I neuer bee throughly fatisfied to fee fo strange a kinde of Fishing. (..)

having with her a Pinnace and a Boat : William Geffer fon was Maffer of the faid flip. The Edward Bonauentere was of an hundred and fixty tunnes, and had with her a Pinnace and a Boat, in which went Riebard Chan-

The Captaines and Mafters were fwome to doe their true intent, and the ships prouided of necoffaries let forth on the tenth of May, 1553, for the discourie of Cathay, and discuss other Regious, Dominions, Ilands, and places vnknowne. The fourteenth of July they discovered Land Eastward, and went on shoare with their Pinnace, and found thirty little houses, the Initabifound written tants field. The Land was full of little llands, called as they after learned, Egeland and Hal. in the springer geland, in 66, degrees. The diffance betweene Orfordnesse and Ageland two hundred and fifty leagues. Then we fayled from thence twelue leagues North-west, and found many other lands red a Arter, 1 segues 1 the control of the nineteenth day, and manned our Pinnace, and went on shoare to the Ilands, and found people mowing and making of Hay, which came to the shoare and welwere froz. no commed vs. In which place were an innumerable forc of llands, which were called the llesof In Rost, being under the Dominion of the King of Denmarke: which place was in latitude 66, de. grees and 30, minutes. The winde being contrarie, we remayined there three dayes, and there was an innumerable fort of Fowles of divers kindes, of which we tooke very many.

The two and twentieth day, the winde comming faire, wee departed from Rost, fayling North North-east, keeping the Sea vntill the feuen and twentieth day, and then we drew neer which the Land, which was fill Eaft off vs: then went forth our Pinnace to lecke harbour, and found many good barbours, of the which we entred into one with our flips, which was called Stanfin, and the Land being Ilands, were called , Lemfoot, or Lofoot, which were plentifully inhabited, and very gentle people, being allownder the King of Demmarke: but wee could not learne how farre it was from the mayne Land; and we remay ned there virtill the thirtieth day, 20 being in latitude 68, degrees, and from the foresaid Ross about thirtie leagues North North east

The thirtieth day of July about noone, wee weighed our anchors, and went into the Seas, and fayled along these Ilands North North-east, keeping the Landstill in fight virtill the second of Avoust: then hailing in close abourd the Land, to the intent to know what Land it was, there came a Skiffe of the Hand aboord of vs, of whom wee asked many questions, who shewed vntovs, that the Hand was called Segnam, which is the latitude of seuenty degrees, and from Stanfew thirty leagues, being also under the King of Denmark, & that there was no merchandife there, but only dried fish, and Trane-oile. Then we being purposed to goe vinto Finnarke, enquired of him, if we might have a Pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, and he faid, that if we could be are in, we should have a good Harbour, and on the next day a Pilot to bring vs to Finmarke, vnto the Ward- 30 house, which is the strongest Hold in Finmark, & most reforted to by report. But when he would have entred into an Harbour, the Land being very high on every fide, there came fuch flawes of wind and terrible whirle-winds, that we were not able to beare in, but by violence were conftrained to take the fea againe, our Pinnace being vnshipt: we failed North and by East, the wind encreasing so fore, that we were not able to beare any fayle, but tooke them in, and lay adrift. to the end to let the florme ouer-passe. And that night by violence of winde, and thicknesses mills, we were not able to keepe together within light, and then about midnight wee loft our Pinnace, which was a difcomfort vnto vs. As soone as it was day, and the fogge over-past, we looked about, and at the last wee descried one of our ships to lee-ward off vs: then wee spred an hullocke of our fore-fayle, and bare roome with her, which was the Confidence, but the Ed. 40 ward we could not fee. Then the flaw fomething abating, wee and the Confidence hoyfed up our and entred the fayles the fourth day, fayling North-east and by North, to the end to fall with the Ward-house, as we did confult to doe before, in case we should part companie. Thus running North-east and by North, and North-east fifty leagues, then wee founded, and had one hundred and fixty fathoms, whereby we thought to be farre from Land, and perceived that the Land lay not as the Globe made mention. Wherefore we changed our courfe the fixth day, and fayled South-east and by South, eight and forty leagues, thinking thereby to finde the Ward-house.

The eighth day much winde rising at the West North-west, we not knowing how the coult lay, firooke our fayles, and lay adritt, where founded and found one hundred and fixty fathoms as before. The ninth day, the winde bearing to the South South-east, we sayled North-east fiee 50 and twenty leagues. The tenth day we founded, and could gee no ground, neither yet could fee any Land, whereat we wondered : then the winde comming at the North-east, we ran Southeast about eight and forty leagues. The elementh day the winde being at South, wee sounded and found torty fathoms, and faire fand. The twelfth day, the winds being at South analy East, we lay with our sayle East, and East and by North thirty leagues.

The fourteenth day early in the morning wee deferred Land, which Land wee bare within, hoyling out our Boat to discouer what land it might be : but the Boat could not come to Land, the water was so sha'low, where was very much Icealso, but there was no similitude of habitation, and this Land lieth from Seynam East and by North, one hundred and fixty leagues, being in latitude 72. degrees. Then we plyed to the Northward, the fitteenth, fixteenth, and feuen-

The eighteenth day, the winde comming at the North-east, and the Confidence being troubled with bilge water, and flocked, wee thought it good to seek harbour for her redresses then wee bare roome the eighteenth day South South-east, about truinty leagues. The one and twentieth day wee founded, and found ten fathoms, after that wee founded againe, and found but feuen fathoms, to shallower and shallower water, and yet could fee no Land, whereat we maruelled greatly: to avoide this danger, we bare toomer into the Sea all that night Northwest and by West.

The next day we founded, and had twenty fathoms, then shaped our course, and ranne West South-west vntill the three and twentieth day : then we descried lowe Land, vnto which wee bare as nigh as we could, and it appeared vnto vs vnhabitable. Then we plyed Westward along by that Land, which lieth West South-west, and East North east, and much winde blowing at the West, we haled into the Sea North and by East thirtie leagues. Then the winde comming to about at the North-east, wee sayled West North-west: after that, the winde bearing to the North-well, wee lay with our fayles Well South-well, about fourteene leagues, and then deferied Land, and bare in with it, being the eight and twentieth day, finding shallow water. and bare in till we came to three fathom, then perceiting it to be shallow water, and also seeing drie fands, we haled out againe North-east along that Land, vntill we came to the point thereof. That Land turning to the Westward, we ranne along fixteene leagues North-west: then comming into a faire Bay, we went on Land with our Boat, which place was vninhabited, but yet it appeared vnto vs that the people had beene there, by croffes, and other fignes: from thence we went all along the coast Westward.

The fourth day of September we loft fight of Land , by reason of contrarie windes, and the September. 20 eighth day we descried Land againe. Within two dayes after we loft the fight of it : then running West and by South about thirtie leagues, we gat the fight of Land againe, and bare in with it vntill night: then perceiuing it to bee a lee shoare, we gat vs into the Sea, to the end to have Sea roome. The twelfth of September wee haled to shoare-ward againe, having then indifferent winde and weather: then being neere vnto the shoare, and the tide almost spent, wee came to an anchor in thirtie fathoms water. The thirteenth day we came along the coast, which lay North-weit and by Weit, and South-east and by East. The fourteenth day we came to an anchor within two leagues off the shoare, having fixtie fathoms. There wee went ashoare with our Boat, and found two or three good Harbours, the Land being rocky, and high, but as for people could we see none. The fitteenth day we ran still along the coast untill the seuenteenth 30 day: then the winde being contrarie vnto vs, we thought it best to returne vnto the Harbour which we had found before, and so we have roomer with the same, howbeit wee could not accomplish our defire that day. The next day being the eighteenth, we entred into the Hauen, and there came to an anchor at fix fathoms. This Hauen runneth into the Mayne, about two leagues, In this Hauen and is in bredth halfe a league, wherein were very many Seale-fishes, and other great fishes, and they died. vpon the Mayne wee faw Beares, great Deere, Foxes, and diuers strange beafts, as * Guloines, *Or, Ellons. and such other which were to vs vnknowne, and also wonderfull. Thus remayning in this Hamen the space of a weeke, seeing the yeere farre spent, and also very euil weather, as Frost. Snow, and Hayle, as though it had beene the deepe of Winter, wee thought best to winter there. Wherefore we fent out three men South South-west, to search if they could finde peo-40 ple, who went three dayes journey, but could finde none : after that, we fent other three Westward foure dayes journey, which also returned without finding any people. Then sent we three Herreendeth men South-east three dayes journey, who in like fort returned without finding of people, or any Sir Hugh Wil-fimilitude of habitation.

The River or Hauen wherein Sir Hugh Willoughby with the companie of his two ships perio was written shed for cold, is called Arzina in Lapland, necrevnto Kegor. But it appeareth by a Will found with his owne in a ship that Sir Hueb Willoughby, and most of the companie were aliue in Ianuary, 1554.

Porasomech as it is meet and necessarie for all those that minde to take in hand the travell into strange Countries, to endeasome themselves not onely to understand the orders, commodities, and finisfuncing thereof, but also to apply them to the setting forth of the same, whereby it may incourage others to the thereig, on ago to apply stem to the first part of the fame, watery it may incoming that my tra-like trankel, therefore haute I may thought good to make a briefe thearfall of the orders of thu my tra-nell in Rulla, and Mutcoula, and other Countries thereunte adopting t, because it was my chance to fall with the North parts of Russia, before I came towards Moscouia, I will partly declare my knowledge therein. Rusha is very plentiful both of Land and People, and also wealthie for such commodities as they 60 bane. They be very great fishers for Salmons and small Cods: they have much Oyle which wee call Trane Oyle, the most whereof is made by a River called Duins. They make it in other places, but not Duina, so much as there. They have also a great trade in seething of salt water. To the North part of that Countrey are the places where they have their Furres as Sables, Marterns, greeffe Beuers, Foxes white, blacke, and red, Minkes, Ermines, Miniuer, and Harts. There are also a fishes teeth, which fish is cilled a Morsse. The takers thereof dwell in a place called Postesora, which bring them upon Hatts to Lampas to fell, and from Lampas carrie them to a place called Colmogro, where the high Market is holden on Saint Nicolas day. To the West of Colmogro there is a place called Gracanoue, in our Linguage Nouogorode, where much fine Flaxe and Hempe groweth, and also much Waxe and Honie. The Dutch Merchants baue a Staple-bouse there. There is also great store of Hides, and at a place called Plesco: and thereabout is great flore of Flaxe, Hempe, Waxe, Honie; and that Towne is from

Colmogro one hundred and twentie miles,

There is a place called Vologda; the commodities whereof are Tallow, Waxe, and Flaxe: but no fo great plentie as is in Gratanoue. From Vologda to Colmogro there runneth a Ruer called Duina. lo great pentic as 13 to a landau of the Sea. Colmogro fernesb Gracanoue, Vologda, and the Moko, with 10 all the Country thereabout with Salt and falt Fish. From Vologila to Iereslaue is two hundred miles which Towne is very great. The commodules thereof are Hides, and Tallow, and Corne in great plen.

The Molco is from letallane two hundred miles. The Country between them is very well replusifired with frame Unique, whose they over the littled with people, that it is wonder to fee them: the ground is will flored with from the first it is wonder to fee them: the ground is will flored with Corne, which they carrie to the Citie of Molco in such abundance that it is wonder to Cott. Tou half meet in a morning senen or eight hundred Sleds comming or going thirber, that carrie Corne, and some carrie sist. You shall have some that carrie Corne to the Moteo, and some that setch Corne from thence, that at the least dwell a thousand miles off: and all their carriage is on Sleds. Those which come so farre dwell in the North parts of the Dukes Dominions, where the cold will suffer to no Corne to grow, it is so extreme. They bring thither Fishes, Furres, and Beasts shinnes. Inthose parts they have but (mill store of Cattell.

The Mosco is selse is great: I take the whole Towne to be greater then London with the Suburbes but it is very rude, and standeth without all order. Then houses are all of timber very dangerous for fire. There is a faire Castle, the walls whereof are of bricke, and very high: they say they are eighteene foot thicke, but I doe not beleeve it, it doth not fo feeme; notwithstanding, I doe not certainly know it for no stranger may come to view it. The one side is disched, and on the other side runneth a Riner, called Moli ua , which runneth into Tartarie, and fo into the Sea, called Mare Calpium : and on the North side there is a base Towne, the which hath also a Bricke wall about it, and so it in neth with the Castle wall. The Emperour lieth in the Castle, wherein are nine faire Churches, and therein are Reli-30 guos men. Also there is a Metropolisan with diners Bispon, I will not sand in description of their buildings, nor of the strength thereof, because we have bester in all points in England. They be well furnished with Ordnance of all forts.

The Emperours or Dukes house neither in building nor in the outward shew, nor yet within the house is so sumptuous as I have seene. It is very lowe built in eight square, much like the old building of Ene-

Now to declare my comming before his Maiestie: After I had remayned twelve dayes, the Secreturie which hath the hearing of strangers did send for mee, advertising me that the Dukes pleasure was to have me to come before his Maiestie, with the King my Masters Letters: whereof I was right glad, Hee commeth and fo I gauc mine attendance. And when the Duke was in his place appointed, the Interpreter came to for mee into the outer Chamber, where sate one hundred or moe Gentlemen, all in cloth of Gold very Sumplusion, and from thence I came into the Counfell-chamber, where face the Duke himselfe, with his Nobles, which were a faire companie: they fate round about the Chamber on high, yet so that he himselfe sate much higher then any of his Nobles, in a Chaire gilt, and in a long garment of beaten Gold, with an ! mper sall (rowne upon his bead, and a Staffe of (riffall and Gold in his right hand, and his other hard halfe le ning on his Chaire. The Chancellour flood up with the Secretarie before the Duke. After my distie done, and my Letter delivered, he bade me welcome, and enquired of mee the health of the King my Master, and I answered, that he was in good health at my departure from his Court, and that my trust was, that he was now in the same. Upon the which he bade me to dinner. The Chancellor pre-Sented my Present unto his Grace bare-headed (for before they were all couered) and when his Grace 50 bid received my Letter, I was required to depart: for I had charge not to speake to the Duke, but when be stake to mee. So I departed unto the Secretaries Chamber, where I remayned two hours, and then I was sent for againe unto another Palace, which is called, The golden Palace, but I saw no cause why it should be so called; for I have seene many fairer then it in all points: and so I came into the Hall, which was small and not great as is the Kings Maiestees of England, and the Table was conered with a Table-cloth; and the Marshall sate at the end of the Table with a little white rod in his hand, which Board was full of vessell of Gold: and on the other side of the Hall did stand a faire Cupboord of Plate.

From thence I came into the during Chamber, where the Duke himselfe sate at his Table without Cloth of estate, in a Gowne of Silver, with a Crowne Imperiall upon his head, he fate in a Chaire some - 60 what high: there fate none neere him by a great way. There were long tables fet round about the chamber, which were full fet with such as the Duke had at dinner: they were all in white. Also the places where the tables stood were higher by two steps then the rest of the house. In the middlest of the chimber stood a Table or Cupboord to set Plate on; which stoodfull of Cups of Gold: and among tall the

By the Cupboard flood two Gentlemen with Naphins on their shoulders, and in their hands each of them had a Cup of Gold fet with Pearles and Precious Golden Vell-1. Stones, which were the Dukes owne drinking Cups: when hee was disposed, hee drunke them off at a draught. And for his fernice at meate it came in without order, yet it was very rich fernice; for all were fermed in Gold; not onely be him felfe, but also all the rest of us, and it was very massic: the super also were of Gold and very massie. The number that dined there that day was two bundred persons and all were fermed in Golden Veffell. The Gentlemen that wayted were all in Cloth of Gold, and then ferned him with their Caps on their heads. Before the fernice came in , the Duke fent to every man a

And then last of all bee gineth the Mar[ball Bread, whereof he eateth before the Dukes Grace, and fo doth renerence and departeth. Then commets the Dukes service of the Swans all in pieces, and every one in a severall dish: the which the Duke senderb as be did the Bread, and she Bearer sails the same words as bee said before. And as I said before, the service of his meate is in no order, but commeth in Dish by Dish: and then af-Ana. a. 1 paa sejver, no serwer oj voo meate is in no oraer, om commettoro Dijo ez Dijo : ana toen aj-ter that the Duke sendeth drinke, with the like sajing as before is told. one day. And thus when his service was all come in, hee gave to every one of his Gentlemen Wayters 20 meate with his owne hand, and so likewise drinke. His intent thereby is, as I have beard, that every man shall know perfectly his sernants. Thus when Dinner is done bee calleth his Nobles before him name by name, that it is wonder to bear to bow be could name them, heating formany at bee bath. This when Din-ner was done I departed to my Lodging, which was an house within night.

I will leave this, and Speake no more of him nor his Housbold: but I will somewhat declare of his Land and people, with their nature and power in the Warres. This Duke is Lord and Emperour of ma- Dukes forces. ny Countries, and bu power is marnelloss great. For bee is able to bring into the field two or three bundred thou fand men : he neuer goeth into the field him felfe with under two hundred thou fand men : And when hee goeth himselfe, hee furnisheth his Border; all with men of Warre, which are no small number. He leasest on the Borders of Liestand forthe thou fand men, and upon the borders of Letto, fixthe thom-

30 fand men, and toward the Nagay an Tartars fix the thousand, which is wonder to heare of . yet doth hee neuer take to his Warres neither Husbandman nor Merchant. All his men are Horfe-men: bee efeth no Foot-men, but such as goe with the Ordnance and Labourers, which are there theusand. The Aimcur and Horse-men are all Archets, with such Bowes as the Turkes have, and they ride stort as doet he Turkes. rich atyce. Their Armour is a Coate of Plate, with a skullow their heads. Some of their Coates are concred with Veluet or Cloth of God: their desire is to be sumptuous in the sield, and especially the Nobles and Gentlemen: as I have heard their trimming is very costly, and partly I have seene it, or elfe I would scarcely have believed it : but the Duke himself is richly attyred about all measure : hie Paulion is covered eyther with Cloth of Gold or Silner, and fo fet with stones that it is wonderfull to fee it. I have seen the Kings Maiesties of England and the French Kings Paulions, which are faire, yet not like unto his. 40 And when they be fent into farre or strange Countries, or that strangers come to them, they be very gergeom. Elfe the Duke himselfe goeth but meanly in apparell: and when bee goeth betweet one place and another bee is but reasonably apparelled oner other times. In the while that I was in Mosco, the Duke sent two Ambassadours to the King of Peleland, which had at the lest five hundred Horses; their sumptuousnesse was about measure, not onely in themselves, but also in their Horses, as Veluet, Cloth of Jampinsungange was acone mediure, not one; missenseines, one my travels, and each of solver fee with Pearles, and not feast. What field I further fay? I never beard of Extremes. nor faw men so sumptnow : but it is no daily guize, for when they bame not occasion, as I saidbefore, all the just means. And now to the effect of their Warres: They are men without all order in the Vadiciplined their away to our mount. As a now we was you we want to a sure you are not a sure of the s that which they do, they do it all by stealth. But I believe they be such men for hard living at arenot under tom won to very way, we man a many premium, core on commentary as you can a comment man a comment of the Sunne : for no cold will burst them. Thus doe the most of all his men except they be Gentlemen which have other proussion of their owne. Then lying in the field is not so strange is is their hardnesse: for every man must carrie and make provision for himfelfe, and his Horse for a moneth or two, which is very wonderfull. For hee himselfe shall twe voon water and Oate-meale mingled together cold, and drinke water thereto: his Horse Pall cate greene wood, and such like baggage, and shall stand open in the cold field without conert and

Now what mught bee made of these men if they were trayred and broken to order and knowledge of Civill Warres: if this Prince had within bu Countries such man as could make them to understand the things aforefaid. I doe beleeve that two of the best or greatst Princes in Christendome were not well able to match with him, considering the greatnesse of his power and the hardnesse of his people, and straight listing both of people and Horse, and the small charges which his War; stand him in: for he giveth no wages, except to strangers. They have a yearely stipend and not much. As for bu swee Countreymen, enery one serueth of his owne proper costs and charges, faxing that hee gineth to bis Harquebusiers certaine allowance for Powder and Shot : or else no man in all bis Countres Knights Fee. bath one penie wages. But if any man hath done very good seruice, he giucth him a Ferme, or a piece of Land; for the which be ss bound at all times to be readie with so many men as the Duke shall appoint? who considereth in his minde, what that Land or Ferme is well able to find: and so many shall be be bound to furnilh at all and enery such time as Warres are holden in any of the Dukes Dominions. For thereis no man of liming, but be is bound likewife, whether the Duke call for eyther Souldier or Labourer, to furnish them with all such necessaries as to them belong.

Whereupon immediately his living shall be taken away from him, saving a lutle to find himselfe and his Wife on and be may not once repine thereat : but for answere bee will say, that bee bath nothing, but it is Gods and the Dakes Graces, and cannot fay, as wee the common people in England fay, if wee bane any thing: that it is Gods and our owns. If they knew their strength, no man were able to make match with them: for the that dwell neere them fould have any rest of them. But I thinke it is not Gods will : For I may compare them to a young Horse that knoweth not his strength, whom a little (bild ruleth and guideth with abridle, for all bis great strength : for if b: did, neither Child nor man could rule bim. Then Warres are holden against the Crimme Tartarians, and the Nagayans.

I will begin with the Commons of the Country, which the Gentlemen nauerule on : And that is, that 40 enery Gentleman bath Rule and lustice upon his owne Tenants. And if it fo fall out that two Gentlemens Seruants or Tenants doe disagree, the two Gentlemen examine the matter, and bane the parties Suits & tryals. before them, and fo give the Sentence. And yet cannot they make the end between them of the Controuerfie, but e ther of the Gentlemen must bring his Sernant or Tenant before the high Indee or Infine of that Country, and there present them, and declare the matter and case. The Plaintiffe Saith, Irequire the Law; which is granted : then commeth an Officer and arrest eth the partie Defendant, and vfeth him contrary to the Lawes of England. Their order in one point is commendable. They have no man of Law to plead their Causes in any Court : but enery man pleadeth his owne Cause, and giveth Bill and A fivere in writing : contrary to the order in England. The Complaint is in manner of a Supplication , and made to the Dukes Grace, and delinered him into his owne hand, requiring to have Instice as in his Complaint is alleaged. The Duke gineth sentence himselfe upon all matters in the Law. Which is very commendable, that such a Prince will take paines to fee ministration of Instice. Yet notwithstanding it is wonderfully abused : and thereby the Duke is much deceived. But if it fall out that the Officers be espied in cloking the truth ship bis Oath upon the Crucifive, whether he be in the right or no. Then is demanded, if the Plaintiffe bet Combat-triall. any thing able further to make proofe: if he be not; then sometimes he will say, I am able to proue it by my body and hands, or by my Champions body, so requiring the Campe. After the other hash his Oath, it is granted as well to the one as to the other. So when they goe to the field, they sweare upon the Ctucifixe, that they bee both in the right, and that the one Shall make the other to confesse the truth before they depart foorth of the field : and fo they goe both to the bassell armed with fuch weapons as they wife in that Countrey : they fight all on foot, and seldome the parties themselves doe fight, except they bee Gentlemen, for they stand much upon their reputation, for they will not fight, but with such as are come of as good an house as themselves. So that if either partie require the combate, it is granted vinto them, and no Champion is to serue in their roome; wherein is no deceit; but otherwise by champions there is. For although they take great outher upon them to doe the battell truely, yet is the contrary often seene : because the common Champions have no other lining. And afforne as the one partie bath gotten the victorie, hee To demandeth the debt, and the other is carried to Prifon, and there is hamefully a fed till bee take order.

There is also another order in the Law, that the plaintiffe may sweare in some causes of debt. And if the partie defendant bee poore, bee Shall be fet under the Crucifixe, and the partie plaintiffe must sweare ouer his bead, and when hee bath taken his oath, the Duke taketh the partie defendant home to his house, and veet bim as his bond-man, and patteth bim to labour, or letteth bim for bire to any Bondage. such anneede him, untill such time as bis friends make provision for his redemption : or else hee seemanneth in bondage all the dayes of his life. Againe, there are many that will sell themselves to Punishments Gentlemen or Merchants, to bee their bond men, to have during their life, meate, drinke and cloath, for Crimete and at their comming to base a piece of money; yea, and some will sell their wines and children to be bawds and drudges to the buyer. Also they have a Law for Fellons and pickers contrary to the Lawes of Eng-20 land. For by their Law they can bang no man for his first offence ; but may keepe him long in Prifon. and oftentimes be ate him with whips and other punishment : and there bee shall remaine untill his filends bee able to bayle him. If hee be a picker or a cut-purse, as there bee very many, the second time he is taken, hee bath a piece of his Nose cut off, and is burned in the fore-head, and kept in prison till be finde sureties for bu good behauiour. And if bee be taken the third time, be to hanged. And at the first time bee is extreamely punished and not released, except be have very good friends, or that some Gentleman require to have him to the warres : And in fo doing, hee shall enter into great bonds for him : by which meanes the Countrey is brought into good quietnesse. But they bee naturally ginen to great de-Beating. ceit, except extreame beating did bridle them. They bee naturally given to bard living as well in fare as in lodging. I beard a Russan fay, that it was a great deale merrier liuing in Prison then foorth, but for the great beating. For they have meate and drinke without any labour, and get the charitie of well disposed people: But being at libertie they get nothing. The poore is very innumerable, and line most miserably : for I have seene them eate the pickle of Herring and other flinking Fish : nor the Fish cannot bee fo flinking nor rotten, but they will eate it and praise it to bee more whole some then other fill or fresh meate. In mine opinion there bee no such people under the Sunne for their hardnesse of liming, Well, I will leave them in this point, and will in part declare their Religion.

They have the old and new Testament, which are daily read among them : and yet their superstition is no lesse. For when the Setuice. For all the while the Priest readeth, the people fit downe and one talke with another. But when the Priest is at service no man sitteth, but gaggle and dueke like so many Geese. Speake to them of the Commandements, and they will say they were given Commande. so Moses in the Law, which Christ bath now abrogated by his precious Death and Passion : there- ments, fore, (say they) wee observe little or none thereof. And I doe beleeve them. For if they were examined of their Law and Commandements together, they foculd agree but in free points. They have the Sacra-ment of the Lords Supper in both kindes, and more ceremonies then we base. They prefess them in a diffe on both kinds together, and carrie them round about the Church upon the Priests head, and so doe minister at all such times as any shall require. SERICHARD Chargelar with his Ship and companie being thus left alone, and become very pensiue, hearie, and fortowfull, by this dispersion of the Fleet, hee (according to the order before taken.) shapeth his course for ward boufe in Normay, there to expect and ahide the arruell of the saibof the Shipe, And being come thither, and having flave ed there the inace of leaven dayes, and looked in vaine for their comming, hee determined at length to proceed alone in the purpoled towage. And as hee was preparing himselfe to depart, it happened that hee fell in companie and speech with certaine Seatiff men : who having yo- 40 derstanding of his intention, and wishing well to his actions, began earneftly to diffwade him from the further profesurion of the discourrie, by amplifying the dangers which hee was to fall into, and emitted no reason that might sense to that purpose. But he holding nothing so ignominious and reproachfull, as inconfrancie and leurite of minde, and perswading himtelfe that a man of valour could not commit a more dishonourable part, then for feare of danger to anoyd and flungreat attempts, was nothing at all changed or discouraged with the speeches and words of the Seer, remayning fledfall and immutable in his first resolution : determining either to bring that to paffe which was intended, or elfe to dye the death.

Which constancie of minde in all the companie did exceedingly increase their Captaines carefulnesse; for hee being swallowed up with like good will and loue towards them, feared left through any errous of his, the fafetie of the companie should bee indangered. To con-clude, when they law theindefire and hope of the articall of the rest of the Ships to be every day more and more frustrated, they prouded to Sea againe, and Master Chanceler held on his courie towards that vulknowne part of the world, and fayled fo farre, that hee came at last to the 60 place where hee found no night at all, but a continuall light and brightnesse of the Sunne shi-They make in the Bay of ming deceptly upon the lung and mightic Sea. And it is ftrange to confider how much fauour afterwards in that place, this humanitie of his did purchase to himselfe. For they being dismissed, spread by and by a report abroad of the arrivall of a Grange Nation, of a fingular gentlenesse and courtesie : whereupon the common people came together, offering to these new-come ghests victuals freely, and not refusing to, traffigue with them. excent they had beene bound by a certaine religious vie and cuttome, not to buy any fortaine commodities, without the knowledge and confent of the King.

CHAP. I.S.I. Difcouerie of Russia by Englishmen, their Entertainment.

By this time our men had learned, that this Countrey was called Ruffia, or Mufcouie, and The Diffense that Inan Vasilimich (which was at that time their Kings name) ruled and governed farre and ricof Ruffi, wide in those places. And the barbarous Russes asked likewise of our men whence they were, and what they came for : wheretunto answer was made, that they were Englishmen sent into those coasts, from the most excellent King Edward the fixt, having from him in commandement certaine things to deliuer to their King, and feeking nothing elle but his amitie and friendthip, and traffique with his people, whereby they doubted not, but that great commoditie and profit would grow to the subjects of both Kingdomes,

The Barbarians heard these things very gladly, and promised their ayde and furtherance to acquaint their King out of hand, with so henest and a reasonable a request. In the meane time Mailer Chanceler intreated victuals for his money, of the Gouernour of that place (who together with others came abourd him) and required hostages of them likewise, for the more affurance of faferie to himfelfe and his companie. To whom the Governours answered, that they 20 knew not in that case the will of their King, but yet were willing in fach things as they might lawfully doe, to pleasure him : which was as then to affoord him the benefit of victuals.

Now, while these things were a doing, they secretly sent a messenger vnto the Emperour, to Messengersea certifie him of the arrivall of a strange Nation, and withall to know his pleasure concerning to the Empethem. Which message was very welcome vnto him, infomuch that voluntarily he inuited them rour. to come to his Court. But if by reason of the tediousnesse of so long a journey, they thought it not best so to doe, then hee granted libertie to his Subiects to bargaine, and to traffique with them : and further promifed, that if it would pleafe them to come to him, hee himfelfe would beare the whole charges of poste Horses. In the meane time the Gouernours of the place, differred the matter from day to day, pretending divers excuses, and saying one while, that the consent of all 40 the Gouernours, and another while, that the great and weightie affaires of the Kindome compelled them to differ their answer: and this they did of purpose, so long to protract the time, vntill the messenger (sent before to the King) did returne with relation of his will and pleasure.

But Master Chancelor, (seeing himselfe held in this suspense with long and vaine expectation, and thinking that of intention to delude him, they posted the matter off so often,) was very infant with them to performe their promise : Which if they would not doe, hee told them that be would depart and proceed in his voyage. So that the Musconies (although as yet they knew not the minde of their King) yet fearing the departure indeed of our men, who had such wares and commodities as they greatly defired, they at last resoluted to furnish our people with all things necessarie, and to conduct them by land to the presence of their King. And so Master Sc Chancelor began his journey, which was very long and most troublesome, wherein he had the vie of certaine fleds, which in that Countrey are very common, for they are carried themselves vpon fleds, and all their carriages are in the same fort, the people almost not knowing any other manner of carriage, the cause whereof is, the exceeding hardnesse of the ground congested in the Winter time by the force of the cold, which in those places is very extreame and horrible, whereof hereafter wee will fay fomething. But now they having passed the greater part of their journey, met at last with the Sled-man (of whom I spake before) fent to the King secretly from the luitices or Governours, who by some ill hap had lost his way, and had gone to the Sea-side, which is neere to the Countrey of the Tarrars, thinking there to have found our ship. But having long erred and wandered out of & his way, at the Jast in his direct returne, hee met (as he was comming) our Captaine on the way. To whom hee by and by deliuered the Emperours letters, which were written to him with all courtefie and in the most louing manner that could bee : wherein expresse commande- The Emperore ment was given, that post Hories should be gotten for him and the rest of his company without ters to Master any money. Which thing was of all the Ruffer, in the rest of their iourney so willingly done, thenciar, that they began to quarrell, yea, and to fight also in firming and contending which of them should put their poste horses to the Sled : so that after much adoe, and great paines taken in this long and wearie journey, (for they had trauelled very neere fifteene hundred miles) Mafter Chancelor came at last to Mose, the chiefe Citie of the Kingdome, and the feate of the King.

Touching the Ropean Mountainer, whereupon the Snow lyeth continually, and where hence in times past it was thought that Tanais the river did spring, and that the rest of the wonders of nature, which the Grecians fained and invented of old, were there to bee feene : our men which lately came from thence, neither faw them, nor yet haue brought home any perfect relation of them, although they remay ned there for the space of three moneths, and had gotten in that time fome intelligence of the language of Mosconie. The whole Countrey is plaine and champion, so and few hils in it : and towards the North, it hath very large and spacious Woods, wherein is great store of Firre trees, a wood very necessarie, and fit for the building of houses: there are also wilde beafts bred in thole woods, as Buffes, Beares, and blacke Wohles, and another kinde of beaft vnknowen to vs, but called by them Roffomakka: and the nature of the fame is very rare and wonderfull : for when it is great with young, and ready to bring foorth, it feeketh out some narrow place betweene two stakes, and so going through them, pressent it selfe, and by that meanes is eased of her burthen, which otherwise could not bee done. They hunt their Buffes for the most part a horse-backe, but their Beares a foot, with woodden forkes. The North parts of the Countrey are reported to bee to cold, that the very Ice or water which distilleth out of the moyil wood which they lay vpon the fire, is prefently congealed and frozen: the diversitie 60 growing fodainly to bee to great, that in one and the felfe-fame fire-brand, a man shall fee both he and ice. When the winter doth once begin there, it doth fill more and more increase by a perpetuite of cold: neither doth that cold flake, until the force of the Sunne beames doth difference of the Sunne bea folue the cold, and make glad the earth, returning to it againe. This Letter was written in the Mosconian Tongue, in Letters much like to the Greeke Letthis Letter was written in Paper, with a broad Seale hanging at the fame, fealed in Paper you Waxe. This Seale was much like the Broad Seale of England, having on the one fide the Image of a man on Horle-backe in complete Harneffe fighting with a Dragon. Vnder this Letter was another Paper written in the Duch Tongue, which was the Interpretation of the other written in the Mofconian Letters. These Letters were sent the next yeare after the date of King

After this, entercourfe of Letters and Emballages palled betwirt King Philip and Queene Marie, and the Molcounterand the Molcoune Company was inflituted and received Printedges both from their and the MOLCOURE and the MOLCOUR Supposed from May 1555, and Maffer George onne and that Fortame Prince, a freend Voyage been fat forthin May, 1555, and Maffer George bone may coast cortains a made their first Agent; the particulars whereof are found at large in Master Authory fift Tome of Voyages, as also abor things touching that Trade then foiled: which beere I emit, and come to Master lenkinlons Voyages to Molco, and thence to Tartaria. * Hee made three others afrer, one as Embaffidour from Oucene Elizabeth to the Muscouite.

The first * Voyage made by Master Anthonie Ienkinson. from the Citie of London, toward the Land of Russia, begunne the twelfth of May, in the yeare

Irft, by the grace of God, the day and yeare aboue mentioned, I departed from the fail ditie, and the fame day at Grameford, embarked my fifte in a good flip, named the first of the first grant of the first grant gra the Primrofe, being appointed, although vnworthy, chiefe Captaine of the fame, and alfo of the other three good ships, to fay, the Iohn Enargelist, the Anne, and the 10

Trinitie, having also the conduct of the Emperour of Ruffia, his Ambaffadeur named Ofen Nepea Gregorimsch, who passed with his company in the said Primrofe. And thus our foure tall ships being well appointed, af well for men, as victuals, as other necessary furniture, the said twelfth day of the moneth of May, we weighed our Anchors, and departed from the faid Grauefend, in the after-noone, and plying downe the Thames, the wind being Easterly, and faire weather the thirteenth day we came a ground with the Primrofe, vpon a fand called the blacke tayle, where wee fate fast vitill the fourteenth day in the morning, and then God bee prayfed, shee came off : and that day we plyed downe as farre as our Ladie of Holland, and there came to an Anchor, the winde being Eafterly, and there remayned vntill the twentieth day : then wee weved and went out at Goldmore gate, and from thence in at Balfey flade, and fo into Orwell wands, where 20 we came to an Anchor : but as we came out at the faid Goldemore gate, the Trinitie came on ground on certayne Rockes, that lye to the North-ward of the faid gate, and was like to be bilged and loft. But by the ayde of God, at the last she came off againe, being very leake; and the one and twentieth day the Primrofe remaining at an Anchor in the wands, the other three ships bare into Orwell Hauen, where I caufed the faid Trinitie to be grounded, fearched, and repayred. So we remayned in the faid Hauen, vntill the eight and twentieth day : and then the wind being Westerly, the three ships that were in the Hauen, weighed and came forth, and in comming forth the Iohn Euangelist came on ground upon a Sand, called the Andros, where the remayned one tyde, and the next full Sea the came off againe without any great hurt, God be prayfed.

The nine and twentieth day in the morning all foure thips weighed in the Wands, and that to tyde went as farre as Orfordnesse, where we came to an Anchor, because the wind was Northerly : And about fixe of the clocke at night, the wind vered to the South-west , and we weighed Anchor, and bare cleere of the Neffe, and then fet our courie North-east and by North vntill mid-night, being then cleare of Tarmouth fands. Then wee winded North and by Weft, and North North-west, vntill the first of June at noone, then it waxed calme, and continued so vntill the second day at noone: then the wind came at North-west, with a tempest, and much raine, and we lay close by, and caped North North-east, and North-east and by North, as the wind shifted, and so continued vntill the third day at noone : then the winde vered Westerly againe, and we went North our right course, and so continued our way vntill the fourth day at three of the clocke in the after-noone, at which time the winde vered to the North-west 40 againe and blew a fresh gale, and so continued vntill the seventh day in the morning, wee lying with all our thips close by, and caping to the Northwards: and then the winde vering more Northerly, we were forced to put roomer with the Coast of England againe, and fell overthwart New-castle, but went not into the Hauen, and so plyed vpon the Coast the eight day

The tenth day the wind came to the North North-west, and wee were forced to beare roomer with Flamborow head, where we came to an Anchor, and there remayned vntill the feuenteenth day. Then the wind came faire, and we weighed, & fet our courfe North and by East, time and to continued the fame with a merry wind vntill the one and twentieth at noone, at which we took the Sunne, and had the latitude in fixtie degrees. Then we shifted our course, and went 10 North North-east, & North-east and by North, vntill the five and swentieth day. Then we dis-Hellick Hands couered certain Hands, called Hellick Hands, lying from vs Northeaft, being in the latitude of fixty fixe degrees, fortie minutes. Then we went North and by West, because we would not come too nigh the Land, and running that course foure houres, we discovered, and had fight of Rost Ilands, joyning to the mayne Land of Finmarke. Thus continuing our course along the Coast of Normay and Firmarke, the feuen and twentieth day we tooke the Sunne, being as farre flot as Lofoot, and had the latitude in fixtie nine degrees. And the same day in the atternoone appeared ouer our heads a Rain-bow, like a Semicircle, with both ends vpward. Note, that there is betweene the faid Roft Hands and Lofoot, a Whirle-poole called Malestrand, which from halfeebbe until strange whirle halte floud, maketh such a terrible noyse, that it shaketh the Rings in the doores of the Inhabi-60 tants Houses of the faid Ilands ten miles off. Also it there commeth any Whale within the current of the fame, they make a pittifull cry. Moreover, if great Trees be carryed into it by force of ffreames, and after with the ebbe be cast out againe, the ends and boughes of them have beene to beaten, that they are like the stalkes of Hempe that is bruized. Note, that all the Coast of Finnarke is high Mountaynes and Hils, being couered all the yeare with Snow. And hard aboard the shoare of this Coast, there is one hundred, or one hundred and fiftie fathomes of water in depth. Thus proceeding and fayling forward, we fell with an Iland called Zenam, being in the Zenam Iland. latitude of feuentie degrees. About this Iland wee faw many Whales, very monfrous, about out flips, fome by estimation of fixtue foote long; and being the ingendring time they roared and cryed terribly. From thence we fell with an Hand, called Kettlewicke.

This Coast from Roft vnto Lofoot lyeth North and South, and from Lofoot to Zenam Northeast and South-west, and from Zenam to Kettelwicke, East North-east and West South-west. From the faid Kettelwicke we fayled East and by North ten leagues, and fell with a Land called

To Inger found, where we filled, being becaimed, and tooke great plentie of Cods. Thus plying a. Inger found. long the Coast, we fell with a Cape, called the North Cape, which is the Northermost Land The North that we palle in our Voyage to Saint Niebolas , and is in the latitude of feuencie one degrees Cape. and ten minutes, and is from Inger found East, and to the North-wards fifteene leagues. And being at this North Cape the fecond day of July, wee had the Sunne at North foure degrees abeing at this North Cape the record day of house the Horizon. The third day we came to Wardbouse, having such mists that we could not ward house. fee the Land. This Wardhouse is a Castle standing in an Iland two miles from the mayne of Finland, lubject to the King of Denmarke, and the Eattermost Land that he hath. There are two other llands nevre adjoying vnto that, whereon the Caffle of Wardboufe standeth. The Inhabitants of those three llands liue onely by fifting, and make much Stock-fifth, which they dry them from other places. They have small store of Cattle, which are also fed with fish. From Cattellied W. ordbonfe we sayled South South-east ten leagues, and fell with a Cape of Land called Kegor, with tift. the Northermoit part of the Land of Lappia. And betweene Wardhouse, and the faid Cape is a great Bay, called Dommes haff, in the South part whereof is a Monaltery of Monkes of the The Monafter Ruffes Religion, called Pechinchon. Thus proceeding forward and fayling along the Coaft of rie of Pechinthe faid Land of Lappia, winding South-east, the fourth day through great mists and darknesse chow. we lost the company of the other three ships, and met not with them againe, vntill the seuenth day, when we fell with a Cape or head-land called Smetings, which is the entring into the Bay of Saint Nieholas. At this Cape lyeth a great fione, to the which the Barkes that paffed there-

30 by, were wont to make Offerings of Butter, Meale, and other Victuals, thinking that vnleffe they did so, their Barkes or Vessels should there perish, a sit hath beene oftentimes seene: and there it is very darke and mystie. Note, that the fixt day wee passed by the place where Sir Hugh Willoughby with all his company perished, which is called Araina reca, that is to fay, the River where

The Land of Lappin is an high Land, having from lying on it commonly all the yeere. The loughly was people of the Countrey are halfe Gentiles: they live in the Summer time neere the Sea fide, frozenand vie to take fift, of the which they make bread, and in the Winter they remove up into the Countrey into the Woods, where they vie hunting, and kill Deere, Beares, Wolues, Foxes, and other bealts, with whose flesh they be nourished, and with their skins apparelled in such strange

They have none other habita- The Lapping tion, but only in Tents, remouing from place to place, according to the feafon of the yeere. They covered all faknow no arte nor facultie, but onely flooting, which they exercise daily, as well men as woo ung their cies, men, and kill fuch beafts as ferue them for their food. Thus proceeding along the coast from Swetinoz aforesaid, the ninth day of July wee came to Cape Grace, being in the latitude of 66. degrees and 45. minutes, and is at the entring in of the Bay of Saint Nicolas. Aboard this Land there is twentie or thirtie fathoms water, and fundry grounds good to anchor in. The current at this Cape runneth South-west and North-east. From this Cape wee proceeded along The corrent at untill we came to Croffe Hand, which is feuen leagues from the faid Cape South-west : and from Cape Grace. this Iland, wee fet ouer to the other fide of the Bay, and went South-well, and fell with an

Head-land, called Foxenofe, which is from the faid Iland flue and twentie leagues. The entring The entring 50 of this Bay from Croffe Hand to the neerest Land on the other fide is feuen leagues ouer. From or the Bay of Foxense proceeding forward the twelfth day of the faid moneth of fully, all our four thipsarri, and had faited at the Road of Saint Nicolas; in the Land of Ruffles, where we anchored, and had found found for the fail of th fayled from London unto the faid Road seuen hundred and fiftie leagues. The Russian Ambasta-least. dour and his companie with great joy got to shoare, and our ships heere forthwith discharged themselves : and being laden againe, and having a faire winde, departed toward England the hrit of August. The third of the faid moneth I with other of my companie came vnto the Citie of August. Colmogro, being an hundred verifes from the Bay of Saint Nicolas, and in the latitude of 64. degrees 25. minutes. I tarried at the faid Colmogro vntill the fifteenth day : and then I departed in a little Boat up the Ricer of Duina, which runneth very swiftly, and the selfe same day passed 60 by the mouth of a Riner called Pinego, leaving it on our left hand fitteene verites from Colmogro. Pinego Riner-On both fides of the mouth of this River Pinego is high Land, great Rockes of Alabafter, great Woods, and Fine-apple trees lying along within the ground, which by report have lyen there fince Noes thook, And thus proceeding forward the nineteenth day in the morning . I came in to a Towne called Temps, an hundred verites from Colmogre. All this way along they make much Tarre, Pitch, and ashes of Aspen trees. From thence I came to a place called Offing, an ancient Citie, the lait day of August. At this Citie meet two Rivers: the one called Iug, and the other Sucana. both which fall into the aforefaid River of Duna. The River Ing hath his spring in the Land of the Tartars, called Cheremizzi, joyning to the Countrey of Permia: and Sucana hath his head from a Lake not farre from the Citie of Volegda. Thus departing from Ufling, and passing by the River Sucana, we came to a Towne called Totma. About this place the water is very thallow, and fronie, and troublesome for Barkes and Boats of that Countrey, which they call Nassades, and Dosneckes, to passe that way: wherein merchandise are transported from the call Nasjades, and Deprecess, to parte that way: whether the scaled Nassades, are very long builded, to aforefand Colmogro to the Citie of Volegda. These vessels called Nassades, are very long builded, to broad made, and close aboue, flat bottomed, and draw not aboue foure foot water, and will carrie two hundred tunnes: they have no Iron appertayning to them but all of Timber, and when the winde serueth, they are made to sayle. Otherwise they have many men, some to hale and draw by the neckes with long small ropes made fast to the said Boats, and some set with long poles. There are many of these Barkes vpon the River of Duina: And the most part of them belongeth vnto the Citie of Vologda: for there dwell many Merchants, and they occupie the faid Boats with carrying of Salt from the Sea fide vnto the faid Vologda. The twentieth of September I came vnto Vologda, which is a great Citie, and the River paffeth through the midft of the same. The houses are builded with wood of Firre trees, joyned one with another, and of the lame. The modes are four fquare without any Iron or flone worke, courted with round without: the houles are four fquare without any Iron or flone worke, courted with 10 Birch barkes, and wood ouer the fame: Their Churches are all of wood, two for every Parith. one to be heated for Winter, and the other for Summer. On the tops of their houses they lay much earth, for feare of burning: for they are fore plagued with fire. This Volegda is in 50. degrees 11. minutes, and is from Colmogro, one thousand verstes.

December.

All the way I neuer came in house, but lodged in the Wildernesse, by the Rivers side, and care for Travellers, ried provision for the way. And he that will travell those wayes, must carrie with him an Harchet , a Tinder boxe, and a Kettle , to make fire and feethe meat, when he hath it : for there is small succour in those parts, vnlesse it be in Townes.

The first day of December, I departed from Vologda in poste in a Sled, as the manner is in Winter. And the way to Moscua is as followeth. From Vologda to Commelie, seuen and twentie verstes; fo to Olmer fine and twentie verstes, fo to Telepske twentie verstes, fo to Vrethir. 30 tie verstes, so to Volbanske thirtie verstes, then to Teraslane thirtie verstes, which standeth vpon the great River Volga, fo to Rollome fiftie verftes, then to Rogarin thirtie verftes, fo to Pera-Same ten verstes, which is a great Towne, standing hard by a faire Lake, From thence to Doub. nay thirtie verstes, so to Godoroke thirtie verstes, so to Onebay thirtie verstes, and last to the Mosco sine and twentie verstes, where I arrived the sixt day of December.

There are fourteene Posts called Tannes, betweene Vologda and Mosco, which are accounted fiue hundred verftes af under.

The tenth day of December, I was fent for to the Emperours Caftle by the faid Emperour. and deliuered my Letters vato the Secretarie, who talked with mee of diuers matters, by the 40 commandement of the Emperour. And after that my Letters were translated, I was answered that I was welcome, and that the Emperour would give mee that I defired.

The fine and twentieth day, being the day of the Natinitie, I came into the Emperours pre fence, and kiffed his hand, who fate aloft in a goodly Chaire of estate, having on his head Crowne most richly decked, and a staffe of Gold in his hand, all apparelled with Gold, and gar nished with Precious stones. There sate distant from him about two yards his Brother, and next vnto him a Boy of twelue yeeres of age, who was Inheritor to the Emperour of Cafan, conquered by this Emperour eight yeeres paff. Then fate his Nobilitie round about him, richly apparelled with Gold and stone. And after I had done obeyfance to the Emperour, he with his owne mouth calling me by my name, bade me to dinner, and fo I departed to my lodging till dinner time, which at fixe of the clocke, by Candle light.

The Emperour dined in a faire great Hall, in the midft whereof was a Pillar foure square, very artificially made, about which were divers Tables set, and at the uppermost part of the Hall fate the Emperour himfelfe, and at his Table fate his Brother, his Vncles fonne, the Metropolitan, the young Emperour of Casan, and divers of his Noblemen, all of one side. There were divers Embassadours, and other thrangers, as well Christians as Heathens, diversly apparelled, to the number of fixe hundred men, which dined in the faid Hall, befides two thousand Tartars, men of warre, which were newly come to render themselues to the Emperour, and were appointed to ferue him in his warres against the Lief-landers, but they dined in other Halls. I was set at a little Table, having no stranger with mee, directly before the Emperours face. Being 60 thus fet and placed, the Emperour fent mee divers bowles of Wine, and Meade, and many dishes of Meate from his owne hand, which were brought mee by a Duke, and my Table ferued all in Gold and Silver, and so likewise on other Tables, there were set bowles of Gold, set with Stone, worth by estimation 400. pounds sterling one cup, besides the Plate which served the tables.

There was also a Cupboord of Plate, most sumptuous and rich, which was not vied: among Rich femice. the which, was a piece of Gold of two yards long, wrought in the top with Towers, and Dragons beads, also divers barrels of Gold and Silver, with Cattles on the bungs, richly and artificially made. The Emperour, and all the Hall throughout was ferued with Dukes: and when dinner was ended, the Emperour called mee by name, and gaue me drinke with his owne hand. and fo I departed to my lodging. Note, that when the Emperour drinketh, all the companie fland vp, and at every time he drinketh, or tafteth of a dish of meate he blesseth himselfe. Many other things I faw that day, not here noted.

The fourth of Januarie, which was Twelf-tide with them, the Emperour, with his brother Twelfstide. 10 and all his Nobles, all most richly apparelled with Gold, Pearles, Precious stones, and coully Furres, with a Crowne vpon his head, of the Tartarian tashion, went to the Church in Procesfion, with the Metropolitan, and divers Bishops and Priests. That day I was before the Emperour againe in Russe apparell, and the Emperour asked if that were not I, and his Chancellour aniwered, yea. Then he bad me to dinner: then came hee out of the Church, and went with the Proceilion upon the River, being all frozen, and there standing bare-headed, with all his Nobles, there was a hole made in the Ice, and the Metropolitan hallowed the water with great Moles Rives folemnitie and feruice, and did cast of the faid water voon the Emperours sonne, and the Nobi- ballowed, litie. That done, the people with great thronging filled pots of the faid water to carrie home to their houses, and divers children were throwne in, and sicke people, and plucked out quickly a-

20 gaine, and divers Tarrars christned: all which the Emperour beheld. Also there were brought the Emperours best Horses, to drinke at the said hallowed water. All this being ended, hee re-Riner of holy turned to his Palace againe, and went to dinner by Candle light, and fate in a woodden house, water for horse very fairely gilt. There dined in the place, aboue three hundred frangers, and I fate alone as I and man, did before, directly before the Emperour, and had my Mear, Bread, and Drinke fent mee from

The Citie of Mosco is great, the houses for the most part of wood, and some of stone, with Citie of Mosco. windowes of Iron, which serue for Summer time. There are many faire Churches of stone, but more of wood, which are made hot in the Winter time. The Emperours lodging is in a faire and large Castle, walled foure square of Bricke, high, and thicke, situated vpon an Hill, two 30 miles about, and the River on the South-west file of it, and it hath sixteene gates in the walls, and as many Bulwarkes. His Palace is separated from the rest of the Cassle, by a long wall going North and South, to the River fide. In his Palace are Churches, some of stone, and some of wood, with round Towres fairely gilded. In the Church doores, and within the Churches are Images of Gold : the chiefe Markets for all things are, within the faid Castle, and for fundry things fundry Markets, and enery science by in take. And in the Winter there is a great Market without the Callle, voon the River being frozen, and there is fold Corne, earthen Pots, Tubs, Sleda, &c. The Caltle is in circuit two thousand and nine hundred paces.

The Countrey is full of marish ground, and Playne, in Woods and Rivers abundant, but it The Countrie, bringeth forth good plentie of Corne. This Emperour is of great power : for he hath conquered 40 much, as well of the Lieflanders, Poles, Lettoes, and Smethers, as also of the Tarears, and Gensiles, called Samoeds, having thereby much inlarged his Dominions. Hee keepeth his people in great subjection : all matters passe his judgement, bee they never so small. The Law is sharpe for all

The Metropolitan dealeth in matters of Religion, as himselfo listeth, whom the Emperour The Metropogreatly honoureth. They wie the Ceremonies and Orders of the Greeke Church. They worship litan. many Images painted on Tables, and specially the Image of Saint Nicholas. Their Priests bee married, but their wives being dead, they may not marry the second time, and so become Monks, whereof there are a great number in the Land. They have foure Lents in the yeere, and the weeke before Shrouetide, they call the Butter weeke, &c. 50 They have many forts of meats and drinks, when they banket and delight in eating of groffe Means and meates, and flinking fish. Before they drinke they vie to blow in the Cup : their greatest friend-drinker. ship is in drinking: they are great Talkers and Lyars, without any faith or trust in their words, Flatterers and Dislemblers. The Women be there very obedient to their Husbands, and are kept straightly from going abroad, but at some seasons.

At my being there, I heard men and women that drunke away their children, and all their Drunkennesse, goods at the Emperours Tauerne, and not being able to pay, having impawned himselfe, the Tauerner bringeth him out to the high way, and beats him wpon the legs : then they that paffe by, knowing the caule, and having peraduenture compassion upon him, give the money, and so hee is ransomed. In enery good Towne there is a drunken Tauerne, called a Cursemay, which the 60 Emperour sometime letteth out to farme, and sometimes bestoweth for a yeare or two on some Duke or Gentleman, in recompense of his service : and for that time hee is Lord of all the Towne, robbing and spoyling, and doing what pleaseth him: and then hee being growne rich, is taken by the Emperour, and fent to the warres againe: where hee shall spend all that which he hath gotten by ill meanes: so that the Emperour in his warres is lette charged, but all the burden lyeth upon the poore people. They vie faddles made of wood and finewes, with the tree gilded with damaske worke, and the feat couered with cloth, fometimes of gold, and the reft Saphian leather, well stitched. They vse little drummes at their saddle bowes, by the found whereof their hories vie to runne more iwiftly.

The Ruffe is apparelled in this manner : his vpper garment is of cloth of gold, filke, creloth. long, downe to the foot, and buttoned with great buttons of filuer, or elfe laces of filke, fet on with Brooches, the sleeues thereof very long, which he weareth on his arme, ruffed vp. Vnder that he hath another long garment, buttoned with filke buttons, with a high coller flanding vp of fome colour, and that garment is made straight. Then his shirt is very fine, and wrought with red filke, or forme gold, with a coller of pearle. Vnder his shirt lie hath linnen breeches, vpon his to legs, a paire of hole without feet, and his bootes of red or yellow leather. On his head hee weareth a white Colepeck, with buttons or filuer, gold, pearle, or stone, and voder it a black Fore cap, turned vp very broad. When he rideth on horse-back to the warres, or any journey, he hath a fword of the Tweish fashion, and his Bowe and Arrowes of the same manner. In the Towne he weareth no weapon, but onely two or three paire of kniues, having the hafts of the tooth of a Fith, called the Morfe.

In the Winter time, the people trauell with Sleds, in Towns and Country, the way being hard, and smooth with snow; the waters and Rivers are all frozen, and one horse with a Sled. will draw a man upon it four hundred miles in three dayes : but in the Summer time, the way is deepe with myre, and trauelling is very ill.

The Ruffe, if he be a man of any abilitie, neuer goeth out of his house in the winter, but your his Sled, and in fummer vpon his Horse: and in his Sled hesits vpon a Carpet, or a white Beares skin : the Sled is drawne with a Horse well decked, with many Foxes and Woolues tailes at his necke, and is conducted by a little boy vpon his backe : his ferunts stand vpon the taile of the Sled, &c.

Notes taken out of another mans Relation of the same Voyage, touching the Ruffian Rites.

N Christmasse day we were all willed to dine with the Emperors Maiessie, where for bread, meate, and drinke, we were ferued as at other times before : but for goodly and rich Plate, we never faw the like or to much before. There dined that day in the Emperors prefence aboue fine hundred strangers, and two hundred Ruffes, and all they were ferued in veffels of Gold, and that as much as could fland one by another vpon the Tables. Belides this, there were foure Cup-boards garnished with goodly Plate both of gold and filuer. Among the which there were twelve barrels of filuer, contaying about twelve gallons a piece, and at each end of every Barrell were fix hoopes of fine gold : this dinner conti-40

nued about fix houres. Euery yeere voon the twelfth day, they vie to bleffe or fanctifie the River Mojone, which of the River of runneth through the Citie of Mofco, after this manner. First, they make a square hole in the Ice about three farhoms large enery way, which is trimmed about the fides and edges with white boords. Then about nine of the clocke they come out of the Church with procession towards the

> First and foremost there goe certaine young men with waxe Tapers burning, and one carrying a creat Lanthorne : then follow certaine Banners, then the Croffe, then the Images of our Lady, of Saint Nicholas, and of other Saints, which Images men carry vpon their shoulders: after the Images follow certaine Priefts to the number of one hundred or more : after them the Metropo- 50 litan who is led betweene two Priefts, and after the Metropolitan came the Emperour with his Crowne voon his head, and after his Maiestie all his Noble men orderly. Thus they followed the Procession vnto the water, and when they came vnto the hole that was made, the Priests fet themselves in order round about it. And at one side of the same Poole there was a Scaffold of boords made, vpon which stood a faire Chaire in which the Metropolitan was fet . but the Empercurs Maiestie stood voon the Ice.

> After this the Priests began to fing, to blesse and to sense, and did their service, and so by that time that they had done, the water was holy, which being fanctified, the Metropolitan tooke a little thereof in his hands, and cast it on the Emperour, likewise vpon certaine of the Dukes, and then they returned agains to the Church with the Priests that fate about the water : but that prease that there was about the water when the Emperour was gone, was wonderfull to behold, 69 for there came about five thousand Pots to be filled of that water : for that Mosconite which hath no part of that water, thinks himselfe vnhappy. And very many went naked into the water, both Men and Women and Children : after the prease was a little gone, the Emperours Iennets and Horses were brought to drinke of the same water, and likewise many other men brought their Horfes thither to drinke, and by that meanes they make their Horfes as holy as themselves. All these ceremonies being ended, we went to the Emperour to dinner, where we were served in veffels of filger, and in all other points as we had beene beforetime.

The Ruffer begin their Lent alwayes eight weeks before Eafter: the first weeks they cate Egs, The Ruffer Milke, Cheefe and Butter, and make great cheare with Pan-cakes, and fuch other things, one Lent. friend vifiting another, and from the fame Sunday watill our Shroue-funday, there are but few Rulles fober , but they are drunke day by day , and it is accounted for no reproach or fhame among them.

The next weeke being our first weeke in Lent, or our cleanling weeke, beginning our Shrousfunday, they make and keepe a great Fast. It is reported, and the people doe verily beleeue that the Metropolitan neither eateth nor drinketh any manner of thing for the space of feuen daves and they fay that there are many Religious men which doe the like. The Emperous Maiefise eateth but one morfell of bread, and drinketh but one draught of drinke once in the day during that weeke and all men that are of any reputation come not out of their houses during that time, so that the streets are almost voide of companie, saving a few poore folkes which wander to and fro. The other fixe weekes they keepe as we doe ours, but not one of them will cate either Butter, Cheefe, Egs, or Milke.

On Palme-funday they have a very folemne Procession, in this manner following. First, they Palme-funday haue a Tree of a good bigneffe which is made fast vpon two Sleds, as though it were growing Procession, there, and it is hanged with Apples, Raifins, Rigs, and Dates, and with many other fruits abundantly. In the midft of the same Tree stand sue Boyes in white vestures, which sing in the Tree, hefore the Procession : after this there followed certaine young men with Wax Tapers in their hands burning, and a great Lanthorne that all the light should not goe out: after them followed two with long Banners, and fixe with round plates fet vpon long states: the plates were of Copper very full of holes, and thinne: then followed fixe, carrying painted images upon their fhoulders, after the Images followed certaine Priests, to the number of one hundred of more, with goodly vestures, whereof ten or twelue are of white Damaske, set and embroidered sound about with faire and orient Pearles, as greates Peafe, and among them certains Saphires and other 20 Rones. After them followed the one halfe of the Emperours Noblemen: then commeth the Em-

perours Maiestie and the Metropolitan, after this manner,

First, there is a Horse coursed with white linnen cloth downe to the ground, his eares being The Emperor made long wish the same cloth, like to an Affes eares. Voon this Horse the Metropolican fits lead the made long wises the same teach, same to the same tears. The teach the same teach field long like a woman; in his lappe hich a faire Booke, with a Crucifike of Gold-fmith the same worke upon the cour; which he holdesh faft with his left hand, and in his right hand he hath a critical teach the same teach teach the same teach teach teach the same teach teach teach the same teach Crosse of Gold, with which Crosse he ceaseth not to blesse the people as hee rideth. There are to the number of thirtie men which fpread abroad their garments before the Horfe; and as foone as the Horse is past ouer any of them, they take them vp againe and runne before, and faread them againe, fo that the Horse doch alway goe on some of them. They which spread 40 the garments are all Priests sonnes, and for their labours the Emperour giveth visto them

One of the Emperours Noblemen leadeth the Horfe by the head, but the Emperour himfelfe going on foot , leadeth the Horfe by the end of the reyne of his Bridle with one of his hands, and in the other of his hands hee had a branch of a Palme tree : after this followed the reft of the Emperours Noblemen and Gentlemen, with a great number of other people. In this order they went from one Church to another within the Caftle, about the distance of two flight shot: and so returned againe to the Emperours Church , where they made an end of their service. Which being done, the Emperours Maiestie, and certaine of his Noblemen went to the Metropolitan his house to dinner, where of delicate fishes and good drinkes there was no lacke. The rest of shis weeke vntill Easter day they kept very solemnely, continuing in their houses for the 50 most part, and upon Munday or Thursday the Emperour doth alwaies vie to receive the Sacra-Vpon Good-friday they continue all the day in contemplation and prayers, and they wie eucry yeere on Good-friday to let loofe a Prisoner in the flead of Barrabas. The night following they goe to the Church, where they sleepe vntill the next morning, and at Easter they have the Refurrection, and after enery of the Lents they eate flesh the next weeke following, Friday, Sa-

They have an order at Easter, which they alwaies observe, and that is this : every yeere against Easter to dye or colour red with Brazell a great number of Egges, of which every man and woman giveth one vnto the Priest of their Parish vpon Easter day in the morning. And 60 moreouer, the common people vie to carrie in their hands one of their red Egges, not onely vpon Easter day, but also three or foure dayes after, and Gentlemen and Gentlewomen have Egges gilded which they carrie in like manner. They vie it, as they fay, for a great loue, and in token of the Refurrection, whereof they reloyce. For when two friends meet during the Eafter holy daves, they come and take one another by the hand : the one of them faith, the Lord or Christie rifen, the other answereth, it is fo of a truth, and then they kiffe and exchange their Egges both munand women, continuing in kiffing foure dayes together,

His Maiestie heareth all Complaints himselfe, and with his owne mouth giveth sentence and judgement of all matters, and that with expedition but Religious matters hee medleth no: withall, but referreth them wholly vnto the Metropolitane. His Majestie retayneth and well rewardeth all strangers that come to serue him, and especially men of Warre. He delighteth noe greatly in Hawking, Hunting, or any other pastime, nor in hearing Instruments or Musicke, her fetteth all his whole delight vpon two things: First, to serue God, as vndoubtedly hee is very deuout in his Religion, and the fecond, how to fubdue and conquer his enemies.

He hath abundance of Gold and Siluer in his owne hands or Treasurie: but the most part of his know not a Crowne from a Counter, nor Goldfrom Copper, they are fo much cumbred therewithall, and he that is worth two, three, or foure Grotes, is a rich man,

Mon1steries and Monker

Images.

They have both Monkes, Friers, and Nunnes, with a great number of great and rich Monasteries : they keepe great Hospitalitie, and doe releeve much poore people day by day. I have bin in one of the Monasteries called Troietes, which is walled about with Bricke very strongly like Castle, and much Ordnance of Brasse vpon the walls of the same. They told mee themselves that there are seuen hundred Brethren of them which belong vnto that House. The most part of the Lands, Townes, and Villages which are within fortie miles of it, belong vinto the fame. They shewed me the Church, wherein were as many Images as could hang about, or wpon the wals of the Church round about, and even the Roofe of the Church was painted full of Images.

The chiefe Image was of our Ladie, which was garnished with Gold, Rubies, Saphirs, and o. ther rich Stones abundantly. In the midft of the Church flood twelve Waxe Tapers of two vards long, and a fathome about in bignesse, and there stands a Kettle full of Waxe with about one hundred weight, wherein there is alwayes the wicke of a Candle burning, as it werea Lampe which goeth not out day nor night.

Mitacles.

They shewed mea Coffin coursed with Cloth of Gold, which stood voon one side within their Church, in which they told me lay a holy man, who never eate or dranke, and yet that he liueth. And they told me (luppoling that I had beleeved them) that he healeth many Difeafes. and giveth the blind their fight, with many other Miracles, but I was hard of beliefe, because I faw him worke no miracle whilft I was there: After this they brought me into their Sellers, and made me tafte of divers kinds of Drinkes, both Wine and Beere. Meade and Quaffie, of fundry colours and kinds. Such abundance of Drinke as they have in their Sellers. I doe suppose few Princes have more, or so much at once. Their Barrels or Veffels are of an vnmeasurable bignesse and size: some of them are three yards lone and more, and two yards and more broad in their heads: they contayne fixe or feuen tuns apiece: they have none in their Sellers of their owne making that are leffe then a tunne. They have nine or ten great vaultes which are full of those Barrels which are seldome removued : for they haue trunkes which come downe through the Roofe of the vaults in fundry places, through which they powredrinke downe, having the Caske right under it to receive the same, for it to should be a great trouble to bring it all downe the staires.

Drinkes and

The Hospitali-

They give Bread, Meate, and Drinke vnto all men that come to them, not onely while they are at their Abbey, but also when they depart, to serue them by the way. There are a great number of fuch Monasteries in the Realme, and the Emperours Majette rideth oftentimes from one to another of them, and lyeth at them three or foure dayes together.

Monke Merchants.

The same Monkes are as great Merchants as any in the Land of Russia, and doe occupie buying and felling as much as any other men, and have Boates which palle to and fro in the Rivers with Merchandize from place to place where any of their Countrey doe traffique.

Dyerand Ap-

They eate no flesh during their liues as it is reported : but vpon Sunday, Munday, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday, it is lawfull for them to cate Egges, Butter, Cheefe, and Milke, and at 10 all times to eate fish, and after this fort they lead their lines. They weare all blacke Garments. and so doe none other in all the Land, but at that Abbey onely.

They have no Preachers, no not one in all the Land to instruct the people, so that there are Want of Press many, and the most part of the poore in the Countrey, who if one aske them how many Gods there be, they will fay a great many, meaning that every Image which they have is a God : for rance and Ido all the Countrey and the Emperours Majestie himselfe will blesse and bow, and Rnocke their heads before their Images, infomuch that they will cry earneftly vnto their Images to helpe them to the things which they need. Al men are bound by their Law to have those Images in their Houses, and ouer every gate in all their Townes and Cities are Images set up, unto which the people bow and bend, and knocke their heads against the ground before them: as often as they come by any Church or Croffe they doe in like manner. And when they come to any House, they bleffe themselues three or foure times before they will salute any man in the

When any child is borne, it is not baptized votill the next Sunday, and if it chance that it be not baptized then, it must tarry vntill the second Sunday after the birth, and it is lawfull for them to take as many God-fathers and God-mothers as they will, the more the better.

When they goe to the Church, the Mid-wife goeth foremost, carrying the Childe, and the Bantifine God-fathers and God-mothers follow into the midft of the Church, where there is a small Table readie let, and on it an Earthen Pot full of warme water, about the which the God-fathers and God-mothers, with the Childe, fertle themfelues : then the Clerke giveth vnto every of them a small Waxe Candle burning, then commets the Priest, and beginnets to say certaine words, which the God-tathers and God-mothers must answere word for word, among which

30 one is, that the Child shall forfake the Devill, and as that name is pronounced they must all ship at the word as often as it is repeated. Then he bleffeth the water which is in the Pot, and doth breathe ouer it : then he taketh all the Candles which the Goffips have, and holding them all in one hand letteth part of them drop into the water, and then giveth every one his Candle againe, and when the water is fanctified, he taketh the Child and holdeth it in a small Tub, and one of the God-fathers taketh the Pot with warme water, and powreth it all vpon the Childes head. After this he hath many more Ceremonies, as anounting Eares and Eyes with Spittle, and making certayne Croffes with Oyle vpon the backe, head, and breit of the Childe : then taking the Childe in his armes, carryeth it to the Images of Saint Nicholas, and our Ladie, &c. and fpea-

keth vnto the Images, defiring them to take charge of the Childe, that he may line, and believe 40 as a Christian man or woman ought to doe, with many other words. Then comming backe from the Images, he taketh a paire of sheares and clippeth the young and tender haires of the Childes head, in three or foure places, and then delivereth the Childe, whereunto every of the God-fathers and God-mothers lay a hand: then the Prieft chargeth them, that the Childe bee brought up in the faith and feare of God or Chrift, and that it be instructed to clinege, and bow to the Images, and to they make an end : then one of the God-fathers must hing a Crosse about the necke of the Childe, which hee must alwayes weare, for that Rolle which hath not a Crosse about his necke they efterme as no Christian man, and thereupon they fay that wee are no Christians, because we doe not weare Crosses as they doe.

Their Matrimonie is nothing folemnized, but rather in most points abominable, and as neere Of their 160so as I can learne, in this wife following.

First, when there is loue betweene the parties, the man sendeth voto the woman a small Cheft or Boxe, wherein is a Whip, Needles, Threed, Silke, Linnen Cloth, Sheares, and fuch necestaries as the shall occupie when the is a Wife, and perhaps sendeth therewithell Raisins, Figs, or fome such things, giving her to vinderstand, that if the doe offend, she must be beaten with the Whip, and by the Needles, Threed, Cloth, &c. that the should apply her selfe diligently to few, and doe such things as she could best doe, and by the Raisins or Fruits he meaneth if she doe well, no good thing shall bee with-drawne from her, nor bee too deare for her : and shee sendeth vnto him a Shirt, Hand-kerchers, and some such things of her owne making. And now to the effect. When they are agreed, and the day of Marriage appointed, when they shall goe towards the

60 Church, the Bride will in no wife confent to goe out of the House, but relifieth and ftriueth with them that would have her out, and fayneth her felfe to weepe, yet in the end, two women get her out, and lead her towards the Church, her face being couered close, because of her diffimulation, that it should not be openly perceived for shee maketh a great noyle, as though she were folding and weeping, untill fhe come at the Church, and then her face is voccouered. The man commeth after among other of his friends, and they carrie with them to Church a great Pot of Wine or Meade: then the Priest coupleth them together much after our order, one promiling to loue and ferue the other during their lines together, &c. which being done, they be ginnne to drinke, and first the woman drinketh to the man, and when he hath drunke he letteth the cup fall to the ground, hafting immediately to tread upon it, and so doth she, and whether of the cap tail to the ground, must have the victorie and be Matter at all times after, which commonly happeneth to the man, for he is readiest to set his foot on it, because he letteth it fall himselfe. then they goe home againe, the womans face being vncouered. The Boyes in the streets cry out, and make a noyfe in the meane time, with very dishonest words.

When they come home, the Wife is fet at the vpper end of the Table, and the Husbandnext to which her: they fall then to drinking till they be all drunke, they perchance have a Minstell or two, and two naked men, which led her from the Church, dance naked a long time before all the company. When they are wearie of drinking, the Bride and the Bridegroome get them to Beel, for it is in the Euening alwayes when any of them are marryed: and when they are going to Bed, the Bridegroome putteth certayne Money, both Gold and Siluer, if he haue it, into one of his Boots, and then fitteth downe in the Chamber, croffing his legges, then the Bride muft pluck off one of his Boots, which she will, and if she happen on the Boot wherein the Money is, shee hath not onely the Money for her labour, but is also at such choice, as she need not ever from that day forth to pull off his Boots, but if thee miffe the Boot wherein the Money is, the doth not onely lole the Money, but is also bound from that day forwards to pull off his Boots 10

Then they continue in drinking and making good cheere three dayes following, being accompanied with certayne of their friends, and during the same three dayes, he is called a Duke. and the a Dutches, although they be very poore persons, and this is as much as I have learned of their Matrimony : but one common rule is amongst them, if the woman be not beaten with the Whip once 2 Weeke, she will not be good, and therefore they looke for it orderly, and the wemen fay, that if their Husbands did not beate them, they should not love them,

They vie to marry there very young, their Sonnes at fixteeene and eighteene yeares old, and the Daughters at twelue or thirteene yeares or younger: they vie to keepe their Wives very closely. I meane those that be of any reputation, so that a man shall not see one of them but at 30 a chance, when shee goeth to Church at Christmasse or at Easter, or else going to visit some of

The most part of the women vse to ride a-stride in Saddles with stirrops, as men doe, and some of them on Sleds, which in Summer is not commendable. The Husband is bound to find of Raffia paint the Wife colours to paint her with all, for they vie ordinarily to paint themselves: it is fucha common practice among them, that it is counted for no shame: they grease their faces with such colours, that a man may discerne them hanging on their faces almost a flight shoot off: I cannot so well liken them as to a Millers Wife, for they lookeas though they were beaten about the face with a bagge of Meale, but their Eye-browes they colour as blacke as leat. The best propertie that the women haue, is that they can fewe well, and imbroider with Silke and Gold 40

When any man or woman dyeth, they firetch him out, and put a new paire of shooes on his feet, because he hath a great Journey to goe : then doe they wind him in a sheet, as wee doe, but they forget not to put a testimonie in his right hand, which the Priest giueth him, to testifie vnto Saint Nieholas that he dyed a Christian man or woman. And they put the Corse alwayes in a Coffin of Wood, although the partie be very poore : and when they goe towards the Church, the Friends and Kinfmen of the partie departed carrie in their hands small Waxe Candles, and they weepe, and howle, and make much lamentation. They that bee hanged or beheaded, or such like, have no testimonie with them : how they are recived into Heaven, it is a wonder,

There are a great number of poore people among them which dye daily for lacke of sustenance, which is a pitifull case to behold : for there hath bin buried in a small time, within these two yeares, about eightie persons youg and old, which have dyed onely for lacke of suffenance. for if they had had straw and water enough, they would make shift to line : for a great many are forced in the Winter to dry straw and stampe it, and to make bread thereof, or at the least they Bread made of eate it in stead of bread. In the Summer they make good shift with grasse, herbes, and roots: barkes of Trees are good meat with them at all times. There is no people in the World, as I suppole, that live to miterably as doe the povertie in those parts: and the most part of them that have sufficient for themselves, and also to relieve others that need, are so vinmercifull that they care not how many they see dye of famine or hunger in the streets.

It is a Countrey full of Discases, divers, and evill, and the best remedie is for any of them, as they hold opinion, to goe often vnto the Hot-houses, as in a manner every man hath one of his owne, which he heateth commonly twice every weeke, and all the houshold tweat, and wash

The third day we came vnto the place where old Rp. Reg. n. 40 zanwas fituate, being now moit of it ruined and ouer-growne, and diffant from the faid Perg-

But leaving Cassim on our left hand, the eight day Moron. we came vnto a faire Towne, called Morom, from Coffin twentie leagues, where wee tooke the Sunne, and found the latitude fiftie fixe degrees: and proceeding forward the elementh day, wee came voto another faire Towne and Cattle, called Nofe Nonegrod, fituated at the falling of the Not Novegred. foresaid River Occa, into the worthy River of Volga, distant from the said Moron five and twentie leagues, in the latitude of fiftie fixe degrees eighteene minutes. This Towne or Castle had his name of this Emperours Father, who was called Pasting, and Gored in the Russe Tongue is as much to lay, as a Castle, so that Pasting-vasting gered is to fay , Vafilm Callle : and it was the furthest place that the faid Emperour 6c conquered from the Tartars. But this present Emperour his Sonne, called Inan Vasilio wich, hath had great good fucceffe in his Warres, both against the Christians, and also the Mabomeiists, and Gentiles, but especially against the Tartars, inlarging his Empire even to the Cupian Sea, having conquered the famous River of Volga, with all the Countreyes thereabout adjacent. Thus proceeding on our journey, the fine and twentieth day of May afore-fail,

The eight and twentieth day we came vnto a great Hill, where was in times past a Castle made by the Crimmes, but now it is ruined, being the just mid-way betweene the fand Cazan and Afrachan, which is two hundred leagues or thereabout, in the latitude of one and fiftie degrees. frachus, which is two nundredleagues or thereacons, and the sacross of summer Root runnerth fortie feuen minutes. Thus going forward, the fixt day of July we came to a place called Perouolog, fo named be- Perouolog. 10 cause in times past the Tartars carried their Boats from Volga, voto the River Tanais, otherwise Dus or Tanais. called Don, by Land, when they would rob fuch as passed downe the said Volga to Astracan, and also such as rassed downe by the River Tanais, to Afon, Casfa, or any other Towne situated vpon Mare Euxinum, into which Sea Tanais falleth, who lith his Springs in the Countrey ot the Rezen, out of a plaine ground. It is at this threight of Perouolog from the one River to the other, two leagues by Land, and is a dangerous place for Theeues and Robbers, but now it is not so euill as it hath beene by reason of the Emperour of Russia his Conquests.

Departing from Perouolog, hauing the Wildernesse on both sides, wee fawa great Heard of Nagarans pasturing, as is abouesaid, by estimation aboue a thousand Camels drawing of Cares with Houses upon them like Tents, of a strange fashion, seeming to bee afarre off a Towne:

20 that Herd was belonging to a great Murfe, cailed Smille, the greatest Prince in ail Nagay, who hath flaine and driven away all the rest, not sparing his owne Brechen and Children, and hauing peace with this Emperour of Ruffia, hee hath what hee needeth, and ruleth alone : to that now the Russes live in peace with the Nagayans, who were wont to have mortall Warres

The fourteenth day of July passing by an old Castle, which was Old Astracan, and leaving it vpon our right hand, we arrived at New Afracan, which this Emperour of Rollin conquered fixe yeares paft, in the yeare 1552. It is from the Moseo votto Afracan fixe hundred leagues, or Afracan thereabout. The Towne of Astracan is fituated in an Iland vpon a Hill fide, hauing a Castle within the fame, walled about with Earth and Timber, neither faire nor firong: The Towne is 30 also walled about with Earth: the Buildings and Houses (except it be the Captaines Lodging, and certaine other Gentlemens) most base & simple. The Ilanu is most destitute and barren of wood and pailure, and the ground will beare no Corne : the A re is there most insected, by reason (as I Store of Store fuppose) of much fish, and specially Sturgeon, by which onely the Inhabitants live, having geons, & Byess great scarlitie of slesh and bread. They hang up their fish in their streets and Houses to dry for their prouision, which causeth such abundance of flyes to increase there, as the like was never feene in any Land, to their great Plague. And at my beeing at the faid Afracan, there was a great Famine and Plague among the people, and specially among the Tartars, called Nagarans. who the same time came thither in great numbers to render themselves to the Ruffer their Encmies, and to feeke succour at their hands, their Countrey being destroyed, as I said before : but 40 they were but ill entertayned or releeued, for there dyed a great number of them for hunger, which lay all the Hand through in heapesdead, and like to beafts viburied, very pittifull to behold : many of them were also sold by the Ruffer, and the rest were banished from the Iland. At that time it had beene an easie thing to have converted that wicked Nation to the Christian Fith, if the Ruffes themiclaes had been good Christians: but how should they shew compassion vnto other Nations, when they are not mercifull vnto their owner At my being there I could haue bought many goodly Tartars Children, if I would have had a thousand, of their owne Fahaue bought many goosty tartars continues, it was a loafe of bread worth fixe pence in England, there and Mothers, to fay, a Boy or a Wench for a Loafe of bread worth fixe pence in England, Miresible Fabut we had more need of victuals at that time then of any such Merchandize. This Afracan is the furthest h.ld that this Emperour of Russia hath conquered of the Tartars towards the Ca-

56 frien Sea, which he keepeth very strong, sending thither energy years promision of men, and vi-There is a certayne Trade of Merchandize there yied, but as yet fo finall and beggeily, that it is not worth the making mention, and yet there come Merchants thather from divers places. The chiefest Commodities that the Russes bring thither are red Hides, red sheeps skinnes, woo iden Vessels, Bridles, and Saddles, Knives, and other Trifles, with Corne, Bacon, and other Vi-Stuals. The Tartars bring thither divers kinds of Wares made of Cotton Wooll, with divers kinds of wrought Silkes and they that come out of Perfia, namely, from Shamsely, doe bring fewing Silke, which is the courseft that they vie in Ruffeland, Craft, divers kinds of pide Silkes for Girdles, Shirts of Male, Bowes, Swords, and fuch like thing: and some yeares Corne, and

6c Wal-nuts, but all fuch things in fuch small quantitie, the Merchants being to begge. Iv and proce that bring the same, that it is not worth the writing, neither is there any hope of Trade in all

This forestard stand of Astracan is in length twelste leagues, and in breadth three, and ly the East and West in the latitude of fortie some degrees, nine minutes; we tarred there would the

we came to another Cattle called Sabonfbare, which wee left on our right hand, diffant from Valiliagorod, fixteene leagues. The Countrey hereabout is called Mordonits, and the Habitante did protesse the Law of the Gentiles: but now beeing conquered by this Emperour of Russia most of them are christened, but lye in the Woods and Wildernesse, without Towner Ha

The feuen and twentieth day we passed by another Castle, called Smyasko, distant from Shabon. Bare aforelaid, twentie fiue leagues : we left it on our right hand, and the nine and twentierh Extantination (came vinto an Iland one league from the Citie of Cazan, from which falleth downe a River called Cazankareca, and entreth into the forefaid Volga. Cazan is a faire Towne after the Ruffe or Tartar fashion, with a strong Castle situated upon a high Hill, and was walled round about with 10 Timber and Earth, but now the Emperour of Ruffia hath given order to pluckedowne the olde wals, and to build them againe of free stone. It hath beene a Citie of great Wealth and Riches. and being in the hands of the Tariars, it was a Kingdome of it felfe, and did more vexe the Ruc. les in their Warres, then any other Nation : but nine yeares past, this Emperour of Rallia conquered it, and tooke the King caprine, who being but young is now baptized, and brought voin his Court with two other Princes, which were also Kings of the said Cazan, and being each of them in time of their Raignes in danger of their Subiects through civill discord, came and rendred themselues at severall times vnto the said Emperour, so that at this present there are three Princes in the Court of Russia, which hadbeene Emperours of the faid Cazar, whom the Emperour vieth with great honour.

We remayned at Cazan till the thirteenth day of June, and then departed from thence : and the same day pailed by an Iland called the Iland of Merchants, because it was wont to be a place where all Merchants, as well Ruffes and Cazanites, as Nagayans and Crimmes, and diversother Nations did refort to keepe Mart for buying and felling, but now it is forfaken, and standeth without any fuch refort thither, or at Canan, or at any place about it, from Mofce vnto Mare Thus proceeding forward, the fourteenth day we paffed by a goodly river called Cama, which The River of we left on our left hand. This River falleth out of the Countrey of Permis into the River of

The lland of

Volga, and is from Cazan fifteene leagues: and the Countrey lying betwixt the faid Cazan, and the faid River Cama on the lett hand of Volga is called Vachen, and the Inhabitants bee Gentiles, 10 and live in the Wilderneffe without House or Habitation: and the Countrey on the other fide of Volga, ouer against the faid River Cama, is called the Land of Cheremizes, halfe Gentiles, halfe Taxars, and all the Land on the left hand of the faid Volga, from the faid River vnto Aitraca, and so following the North and North-east side of the Caspian Sea, to a Land of the Tarters

Hords.

Mangat or Na. called Turkemen, is called the Countrey of Mangat or Nagar, whole Inhabitants are of the Law of Mahomet, and were all destroyed in the yeare 15,8. at my beeing at Astracan, through Ciuill Warres among them, accompanied with Famine, Pettilence, and such Plagues, in such fort that in the faid yeare there were confumed of the people, in one fortand another, aboue one hundred thousand : the like Plague was never seene in those parts, so that the said Countrey of Nagay, being a Countrey of great Paffure, remayneth now vnreplenished to the great conten- an tation of the Ruffes, who have had cruell Warres a long time together.

The Nagayaus when they flourished, lived in this manner: they were divided into divers companies called Hords, and every Hord had a Ruler, whom they obeyed as their King, and was called a Murfe. Towne or Houfe they had none, but lived in the open fields, every Murfe or King having his Hords or people about him, with their Wives, Children, and Cattell, who having confumed the Pasture in one place, remoued onto another; and when they remooue they have Houses like Tents set upon Waggons or Carts, which are drawne from place to place with Camels, and therein their Wines, Children, and all their Riches, which is very little, is carried about, and every man hath at the leaft foure or five Wives belides Concubines. Vie of money they have none, but doe barter their Cattell for apparell and other necessaries. They delight in 10 no Art nor Science, except the Warres, wherein they are expert, but for the most part they bee pasturing people, and have great store of Cattell, which is all their Riches. They eate much fielh. and especially the Horse, and they drinke Mares Milke, wherewith they be oftentimes drunke: they are feditious and inclined to Theft and Murther. Corne they fow not, neither doe eate any Bread, mocking the Christians for the same, and disabling our strengths, saying, wee line by eating the top of a Weed, and drinke a Drinke made of the fame, allowing their great denouring of flelh, and drinking of Milke to be the increase of their strength. But now to proceed forward

The Crinme

All the Countrey upon our right hand the River Volga, from over against the River Cama unto the Towne of Astracan, is the Land of Crimme, whose Inhabitants bee also of the Law of 60 Mahomet, and live for the most part according to the fashions of the Nagares, having continual Warres with the Emperour of Ruffia, and are valuant in the field, having countenance, and support from the great Turke.

The fixteenth day of June we passed by certayne Fishermens Houses, called Peronse, twentie

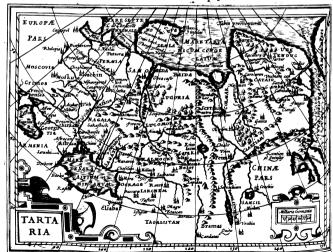

fixt day of August, and having bought and provided a Boate in company with certaine Tartars and Perfians, wee laded our goods and imbarked our felues, and the fame day depart Theventerin. ted I, with the faid two lohnfons, having the whole charge of the Navigation downe the to the Cashian faid River Volga, beeing very crooked, and full of flats toward the mouth thereof. Wee entred into the Caspian Sea the tenth day of August at the Easterly side of the said River, being twentie leagues from Astracan aforelaid, in the latitude of fortie fixe degrees, twentie

Volga.

Volsa hath feuentie mouthes or fals into the Sea: and we having a large wind, kept the Northeast shoare, and the eleventh day we sayled seven leagues East North-east, and came vnto an Hand having an high Hill therein, called Accurgar, a good Marke in the Sca. From thence to East ten leagues, we fell with another Iland, called Bambieta, much higher then the other. Within thefe two Ilands to the Northwards, is a great Bay called the Blue Sea. From thence wee fayled East and by North ten leagues, and having a contrary wind, wee came to an Anchorina fathome water, and fo rid vntill the fifteenth day, having a great fforme at South-east, being a most contrary wind, which we rid out. Then the wind came to the North, and wee weighed, and fet our course South-east, and that day fayled eight leagues.

Thus proceding forwards, the feuenteenth day we loft light of Land, and the fame day fayled thirtie leagues, and the eighteenth day twentie leagues winding East, and fell with a Land Brugblesta be- called Bangbleata, being senentie four eleagues from the mouth of the said Volga, in the latitude ing 74. eagues of fortie fixe degrees fiftie foure minutes, the Coast lying neerest East and by South, and West 20 and by North. At the point of this lland lyeth buried a holy Prophet, as the Tartars call him, of their Law, where great denotion is vied of all fuch Mahometiffs as doe paffe that way.

CHAP.I.S.4. River laic. Azi an holy Tartar. Manguflaue Port.

The nineteenth day the winde being West, and wee winding East South-east, we sayled ten leagues, and passed by a great River called Iaic, which hath his spring in the Land of Siberia, Iaic River. nigh vnto the forefaid River Cama, and runneth through the Land of Nagar, falling into this Mare Caspinen. And up this River one dayes journey is a Towne called Serachicke, libitect Setachicke to the forelaid Tartar Prince , called Murfe Smille , which is now in friendship with the Emperour of Russia. Heere is no trade of merchandife vied, for that the people have no vie of money, and are all Men of warre, and Pallurers of cattell, and given much to theft and murcher. Thus being at an anchor against this River laie, and all our men being on Land, saving I, who lay fore ficke, and fine Tarrars, whereof one was reputed a holy man, because hee came from 10 Mecca, there came vnto vs a Boat with thirtie men well armed and appointed, who boorded vs. and began to enter into our Barke, and our holy Tartar, called Azy, perceiving that, asked them what they would have, and withall made a prayer: with that these Rouers stayed, declaring that they were Gentlemen, banished from their Countrey, and out of living, and came to iee if there were any Ruffes, or other Christians (which they call Caphars) in our Barke: To whom this Asi most stoutly answered, that there were none, anowing the same by great oaths of their Law, (which lightly they will not breake) whom the Rouers beleeved, and youn his words departed. And so through the fidelitie of that Tartar, I with all my companie and goods were faued, and our men being come on boord, and the wind faire, we departed from that place, and winding East and South-east, that day being the twentieth of August failed fixteene leagues.

The one and twentieth day we passed ouer a Bay of sixe leagues broad, and fell with a Cape of Land, having two Hands at the South-east part thereof, being a good marke in the Sea : and doubling the Cape the Land trended North-east, and maketh another Bay, into which falleth the greater River Tem, springing out of the Land of Colmack. The two and twentieth, three and twentieth, and foure and twentieth dayes, we were at anchor. The five and twentieth, the winde came faire, and we fayled that day twentie leagues, and paffed by an lland of loweland, and thereabout are many flats and fands: and to the Northward of this Iland there goeth in a great Bay, but we fet off from this Iland, and winded South to come into deepe water, being much troubled with shoalds and flats, and ranne that course ten leagues, then East South-east. twentie leagues, and fell with the maine Land, being full of copped Hills, and passing along the 30 coast twentie leagues, the further we sayled, the higher was the Land.

The feuen and twentieth day we croffed ouer a Bay, the South shoare being the higher Land, and tell with a high point of Land: and being ouerthwart the Cape, there role such a storme at the East, that we thought verily we should have perished: this storme continued three dayes. From this Cape we passed to a Port called Manguslaue. The place where we should have arriued at the Southermost part of the Cafpian Sea , is twelve leagues within a Bay : but we being Mangullane. fore tormented and toffed with this forefaid ftorme, were driven vnto another Land on the other fide the Bay, ouerthwart the faid Mangustuse being very lowe Land, and a place as well for the ill commoditie of the Hauen, as of those brute field people, where neuer Barke nor Boat had before arrived, not liked of vs.

40 But yet there we sent certaine of our men to Land to talke with the Gouernour and People. as well for our good viage at their hands, as also for prouision of Camels to carrie our goods from the faid Sea fide to a place called Sellyzare, being from the place of our landing fine and twentie dayes journey. Our Mellengers returned with comfortable words and faire promifes

Wherefore the third day of September 1558, we discharged our Barke, and I with my companie were gently entertayned of the Prince, and of his people. But before our departure from land thence, we found them to bee a very bad and brutish people, for they ceased not daily to molest vs, either by fighting, flealing or begging, rayling the price of Horle, and Camels, and Victuals, double that it was wont there to be, and forced vo to buy the water that we drinke : which 50 caused ws to hasten away, and to conclude with them as well for the hire of Camels, as for the price of such as wee bought, with other proussion, according to their owne demand: So that for every Camels lading, being but foure hundred weight of ours, we agreed to give three Hides of Raffia, and foure wooden dithes, and to the Prince or Gouernour of the faid people one ninth, and two feuenths: namely, nine feuerall things, and twice feuen feuerall things: for money they vie none.

And thus being ready, the fourteenth of September we departed from that place, being a Carauan of a thousand Camels. And having travelled five dayes journey, wee came to another Princes Dominion, and vpon the way there came vnto vs certaine Tartars on horiebacke, being wellarmed, and feruants vnto the faid Prince called Timor Sultan, Governour of the faid Coun-60 trey of Mangustase, where were meant to have arrived and discharged our Barke, if the great florme aforetaid had not disappointed. Their foods of the great of Mangustase or Mangustase. forme aforefaid had not disappointed. These aforesaid Tartars stayed our Caranan in the name it stands in of their Prince, and opened our Wares, and tooke fich things as they thought best for their 45. faid Prince without money, but for such things as they tooke from mee, which was a ninth (after much diffention) I rode vnto the same Prince, and presented my selte before him , requesting his fanour, and Pasport to trauell thorow his Countrey, and not to be rollbed or spoyled of his people: Which request he granted me, and entertayned me very gently, commanding me to be well feasted with flesh and Mares milke: for Bread they vie none, nor other drinks except was ter: but money he had none to give me for fuch things as he tooke of me, which might be of value in Russe money, fifteene Rubbles, but hee gaue mee his Letter, and a Horse worth seuen Rubbles. And fo I departed from him being glad that I was gone: for he was reported to bee a very tyrant, and if I had not gone vnto him, I vnderstood his commandement was, that I should haue beene robbed and deftroved.

This Sultan lived in the fields without Castle or Towne, and sate, at my being with him, in a little round house made of reeds covered without with Felt, and within with Carpets. There was with him the great Metropolitan of that wilde Country, effeemed of the people, as the Bishop of Rome is in most parts of Europe, with divers other of his chiefe men. The Sultan with this Metropolitan demanded of mee many questions, as well touching our Kingdomes, Lawes, and Religion, as also the cause of my comming into those parcs, with my further pretence. To whom I answered concerning all things, as ynto me seemed best, which they tooke in good part. So having leave I departed, and overtooke our Caravan, and proceeding on our Twentie dayes in good part of nature to the transfer of the without feeing Town to the See fide without feeing Town or habitation, carrying provision of victuals with vs for the same time, and were drinen by necefficie to ease one of my Camels and a Horse for our part, as other did the like: and during the faid twentie dayes we found no water, but fuch as we drew our of old deepe Wells, being very on brackish and salt, and yet somtimes passed two or three dayes without the same. And the fire day Another Guire of October enfuing, we came vnto a Gulfe of the Calpian Sea againe, where we found the water very fresh and tweet: at this Gulte the Customers of the King of Turkeman met vs. who tooke cultome of enery fine and twentie one, and fenen ninths for the faid King and his brethren, which being received they departed, and we remayned there a day after to refresh our selves. Note, that in times past there did fall into this Gulfe the great River Oxin, which hath his fprings in the Mountaines of Paraponifus in India, and now commeth not fo fa-re, but falleth in-Will de Rubricis to another River, called Ardock, which runneth toward the North, and confimeth himselfe in de cribeth this the ground, patting under the ground aboue fine hundred miles, and then issueth out agains and Riu: t of Ardok, falleth into the Lake of Kuhay.

We having refreshed our felues at the foresaid Gulse, departed thence the fourth day of Octo-Sellique, or ber, and the feuenth day arrived at a Cattle, called Sellizure, where the King, called Azim Can. remayined with three other of his brethren, and the ninth day I was commanded to come before his presence, to whom I delivered the Emperours Letters of Russia: and I also gave him a Prefent of a ninth, who entertayned me very well, and caused me to cate in his presence as his brethren did, feaffing me with fiesh of a wilde Horse, and Mares milke without Bread. And the next day he fent for me againe, and asked of me divers questions, as well touching the affaires of the Emperour of Ruffia, as of our Countrey and Lawis, to which I answered as I thought Letters of fafe good: fo that at my departure he gaue mee his Letters of fafe conduct.

This Calle of Sellizure is ituated upon an high H Il, where the King called the Can lieth, 40 whose Palace is built of earth very basely, and not strong: the people are but poore, and have little trade of merchandise among them. The South part of this Ca'lle is low land, but very fruitfull, where growe many good fruits, among which there is one called a Dynie, of a great bigneffe. and full of morfture, which the people doe eate after meate in stead of drinke. Also there growes another fruit, called a Carbufe, of the bignesse of a great Cucumber, yellow, and fiveet as Sugar: alio a certaine Corne, called legar, whole stalke is much like a Sugar cane, and as high, and the Grane like Rice, which groweth at the top of the cane like a cluster of Grapes; the water that ferueth all that Country is drawne by disches out of the River Oxus, vnto the great deftruction of the faid River, for which cause it falleth not into the Caspian Sea, as it hath done in times part, and in short time all that Land is like to be destroyed, and to become a Wildernesse 50 for want of water, when the River of Oxus shall faile.

The fourteenth day of the moneth wee departed from this Castle of Sellizure, and the fix-Vigence, in 42. teenth of the same wee arrived it a Citie called Orgence, where we payed Custome as well for deg. 18. min. our owne heads, as for our Camels and Hories. And having there forourned one moneth, attending the time of our further travel!, the King of that Countrev calle! Aly Sultan, brother to the fore-named Azym Can, returned from a Towne called Corafan, within the borders of Persia, which he lately had co. quered from the Persians, with whom hee and the rest of the Kines of Terraria have continuall warres. Before this King alfo I was commanded to come, to whom I likewise presented the Emperours Letters of Russia and he entertayeed me well and demanded of me divers questions, and at my departure gave me his Letters of fafe conduct.

This Citie or Towne of Vrgence standeth in a plaine ground, with walls of the earth, by esti- 60 mation foure miles about it. The buildings within it are also of earth, but ruined a dout of good order: it hath one long street that is covered above, which is the place of their Market, It hath beene wonne and loft foure times within fenen yeeres by civil warres, by meanes whereof there are but few Merchants in it, and they very poore, and in all that Towne I could not fell about foure Kerfeys. The chiefest commodities there fold are fuch wares as come from Booker, and cut of Persia, but in most small quantitie not worth the writing. All the Land from the Castian Sea to this Citic of Orgence, is called the Land of Turkeman, and is subject to the faid Azim The Country Can, and his brethren which bee fiue in number, and one of them hath the name of the chiefe of Tattemen. King called (an, but he is little obeyed fauing in his owne Dominion, and where hee dwellethe for enery one will be King of his owne portion, and one brother feeketh alwaies to destroy another, having no naturall love among them, by reason that they are begotten of divers women. and commonly they are the children of flaues, either Christians or Gentiles, which the father to doth keepe as Concubines, and every Can or Sultan hath at the least foure or five wives besides young maidens and boyes, living most viciously: and when there are warres betwixt these brethren, (as they are feldome without) he that is ouercome if hee be not flaine, fleeth to the field with such companie of men as will follow him, and there liueth in the Wilderneffe, reforting to watering places, and so robbeth and spoyleth as many Carauans of Merchants and others, as they be able to our rome, continuing in this fort his wicked life, vneill fuch time as he may get power and aide to inuade some of his brethren againe. From the Caspian Sea vnto the Castle of Sellizare aforelaid, and all the Countries about the faid Sea, the people line without Towne or habitation in the wilde fields, remoouing from one place to another in great companies with their Cattell, whereof they have great store, as Camels, Horses, and Sheepe both tame and 20 wilde. Their sheepe are of great stature with great buttockes, weighing sixtie or eightie pound in weight. There are many wilde Horses which the Tartars doe many times kill with their Hawkes, and that in this order. The Hawkes are lured to feize upon the beafts neckes or heads, which with chafing of them-

felues, and fore beating of the Hawkes are tyred: then the Hunterr following his game doth flay the Horse with his Arrow or Sword. In all this Land there groweth no graffe, but a certaine brush or heath, whereon the Cattell feeding become very fat.

The Tartars neuer ride without their Bowe, Arrowes, and Sword, although it bee on hawking, or at any other pleafure, and they are good Archers both on horse-backe, and on foot also. There people haue not vie of Gold, Siluer, or any other coyne, but when they lacke apparell or other necessaries, they barter their Cattell for the same. Bread they have none, for they nei-30 ther till nor fowe: they be great denourers of fielh, which they cut in small pieces, and eate it by handfuls most greedily, and especially the Horse flesh. Their chiefest drinke is Mares milke fowred, as I have faid before of the Nagayans, and they will bee drunke with the fame. They haue no Riuers nor places of water in this Countrey, vntill you come to the foresaid Gulfe, distant from the place of our landing twentie dayes journey, except it bee in Wells, the water whereof is laltish, and yet distant the one from the other two dayes journey and more. They eate their meate voon the ground, fitting with their legs double vider them, and so also when they pray. Arte or Science they have none, but live most idlely, sitting round in great companies in the fields, deuising, and talking most vainely.

They fixe and twentieth day of Nouember, wee departed from the Towne of Vrgence, and The River of hauing trauelled by the Riuer Oxus one hundred miles, wee passed ouer another great Riuer, Ardocefalleth called Ardocke, where wee payed a certaine petie custome. This River Ardocke is great, and into the Lake very fwift, falling out of the forelaid Oxus, and paffing about one thousand mile to the North- of Kitag. ward, it then consume that selfe in the ground, and passing vinder the same about five hundred miles, issueth out againe, and falleth into the Lake of Kitay, as I have before declared.

The feuenth of December following, we arrived at a Castle called Kair, Subject to a Sulian The Castle of called Saramet Sultan, who meant to have robbed all the Christians in the Caravan, had it not Kest. beene for feare of his brother the King of Vrgence, as we were informed by one of his chiefeft Counsellours, who willed vs to make him a present, which he tooke, and deliuered : besides, so wee payed at the faid Caille for Custome, of every Camell one red hide of Russia, besides petie gifts to his Officers.

Thus proceeding in our journey, the tenth day at night being at rest, and our watch set, there came vnto vs foure Horlemen, which we tooke as Spies, from whom we tooke their weapons, and bound them, and having well examined them, they confessed that they had seene the tract of many Horsemen, and no footing of Camels, and gaue vs to vnderstand, that there were Rouers and theeues abroad: for there trauell few people that are true and peaceable in that Countrey, but in companie of Carauan, where there be many Camels: and Horse-feeting new without Camels were to be doubted. Whereupon we consulted and determined amongst our schoes, and fent a Poste to the said Sulsan of Kaite, who immediatly came himselfe with three hundred 60 men, and met these source suspected men which wee sent vnto him, and examined them so straightly, and threatned them in such fort, that they confessed, there was a banished Prince with fortie men three dayes journey forward, who lay in wait to destroy vs, if hee could, and that they themselves were of his companie.

The Sultan therefore vinderstanding, that the Theenes were not many, appointed vs eightie men well armed with a Captaine to goe with vs, and conduct vs in our way. And the Sultan himselfe returned backe again, taking the foure theenes with him. Thefe fouldiers trauelled with vs two dayes, confuming much of our victuals. And the third day in the morning very early they let out before our Carauan, and having ranged the wildernesse for the space of four hours. they met vs, comming towards vs as fast as their horse could runne, and declared that they had round the tract of hories not farre from vs, perceiving well that wee should meete with enemies. and therefore willed vs to appoint our felues for them, and asked vs what wee would give them to conduct vs further, or elle they would returne. To whom wee offered as we thought good. but they refused our offer, and would have more, and so wee not agreeing they departed from but they refuted our offer, and would make more, and to wee and egreening may departed from ves, and went backe to their Sultan, who (as wee confectured) was printe to the confeptitation, and went backet to their Sultan, who is a supersimple selled body went described by the sultandard by the sultan But they being gone, certaine Tartars of our companie called holy men, (because they had been at Mecca) cauled the whole Carauan to flay, and would make their prayers, and divine how we should prosper in our journey, and whether wee should meet with any ill companie or no: To which, our whole Carauan did agree. And they tooke certaine sheepe and killed them and tooke the blade bones of the same, and first sod them, and then burnt them, and tooke of the

bloud of the field sheepe, and mingled it with the powder of the said bones, and wrote certaine

Characters with the faid bload, vfing many other ceremonics and words, and by the famedia uined and found, that wee should meere with enemies and theenes (to our great trouble) but fhould ouercome them, to which forcerie, I and my companie gaue no credit, but wee found it day of December, in the morning, wee escryed farre off divers horsemen which made towards true : for within three houres after that the fouldiers departed from vs, which was the fifteenth 10

vs, and we (perceiving them to bee rouers) gathered our felues together, being fortie of vs well appointed, and able to fight, and wee made our prayers together every one after his Law, profeiling to live and dye one with another, and to prepared our felues. When the theeues were nigh vnto vs, wee perceiued them to be in number thirtie feuen men well armed, and appointed with bowes, arrowes, and swords, and the Captaine a Prince banished from his Country. They willed vs to yeeld our feines, or elfe to bee flaine, but wee defied them, wherewith they shot at vs all at once, and we at them very hotly, and so continued our fight from morning vntill two houres within night, divers men, horfes and camels being wounded and flaine on both parts: Hand-gunsve- and had it not beene for foure hand-guns, which I and my companie had and vfed, wee had 30 ryprofitable. beene ouercome and deltroyed : for the theeues were better armed, and were also better Archers

then wee; But after we had flaine divers of their men and hor es with our Guns, they durft not approach so nigh, which caused them to come to a truce with vs vntill the next morning, which wee accepted, and encamped our felues vpon a hill, and made the fashion of a Cassle, walling it about with packes of wares, and layd our Horses and Camels within the same, to saue them from the shot of arrowes : and the theeues also incamped within an arrow shot of vs, but they were betwixt ye and the water, which was to our great discomfort, because neither wee nor our Camels had drunke in two dayes before.

Thus keeping good watch, when halfe the night was spent, the Prince of the Theeues sent a meslenger halfe way vnto vs, requiring to talke with our Captaine, in their tongue, the Cara-40 uan Balha, who answered the messenger, I will not depart from my companie to goe into the halfe way to talke with thee : but if that thy Prince with all his companie will sweare by our Law to keepe the truce, then will I fend a man to talke with thee, or elfe not. Which the Prince understanding as well himselfe as his company, swore so loude that wee might all heare. And then we fent one of our companie (reputed a holy man) to talke with the same messenger. The meliage was pronounced aloude in this order. Our Prince demandeth of the Carauan Basha, and of all you that bee Buffarmans, (that is to fay, Circumcifed) not desiring your blonds, that you deliner into his hands as many Caphars, that is, unbelieners (meaning vs the Christians) as are arrong you with their goods, and in so doing, bee will suffer you to depart with your goods in quietnesse, and on the contrarie, you hall bee handled with no leffe cruelty then the Caphars, if hee ouercome you, as hee doubteth not, 50 To the which our Caranan Bafta answered, that hee had no Christians in his companie, nor other flrangers, but two Turker which were of their Law; and although hee had, hee would rather dye then deliuer them, and that wee were not afraid of his threatnings, and that fhould hee know when day appeared. And so palling in talke, the Thecues (contrary to their eath) carried our hely man away to their Prince, crying with a loude voyce in token of victorie, Ollo, ollo. Fidelitieofan Wherewith wee were much discomforted, fearing that that holy man would betray vs : but he being cruelly handled and much examined, would not to death confesse any thing which was to vs prejudiciall, neither touching vs, nor yet what men they had flaine and wounded of ours the day before. When the night was ipene, in the morning wee prepared our felies to battell againe : which the theeues perceiving, required to fall to agreement, and asked much of vs : And to bee briefe, the most part of our company being loach to goe to battell againe, and having lit- 60 tle to lose, and fafe conduct to palle, wee were compelled to agree, and to give the theenes twentie ninths (that is to fay) twentie times nine scuerall things, and a Camell to carrie away the same, which being received, the theeres departed into the Willerneffe to their olde habitation, and wee went on our way forward. And that night came to the River Ox 100, The river of where wee refreshed our selues, having beene three dayes without water and drinke, and tarrio 0.484 ed there all the next day, making merrie with our flaine Horles and Camels, and then departed from that place, and for feare of meeting with the faid theeues againe, or fuch like, wee left the from that place, and to read to meaning and passed through a wildernesse of fand, and trangh way which were stored to the same before wee came to water: and then came to a Well, the water of sind. being very brackish, and we then as before were in need of water, and of other victuals, being

In this wildernesse also, wee had almost fallen into the hands of Theenes: for one night been ing at rest, there came certaine scouts, and carried away certaine of our men which lay a little separated from the Carauan wherewith there was a great shoute and crie, and we immediatly laded our Camels, and departed being about midnight, and very darke, and droue fore till we came to the river Oxm againe, and then wee feared nothing being walled with the faid river : and whether it was for that wee had gotten the water, or for that the same threues were farre from vs when the fourts discourred vs, we know not, but weefcaped that danger.

So you the three & twentieth day of December, we arrived at the Citie of Bogbar in the land Bogbar a Citie of Baltria. This Bogbar is fituated in the lowest part of all the Land, walled about with a high of Baltria in wall of earth, with divers Gates into the fame: it is divided into three partitions, whereof two parts are the Kings, and the third part is for Merchants & Markets, and enery Science hath their 20 dwelling and market by themselves. The Citie is very great, and the houses for the most part of Earth, but there are also many Houses, Temples, and Monuments of stone sumptuously builded, and gilt, and specially Bath-stones so artificially built, that the like thereof is not in the world : the manner whereof is too long to rehearle. There is a little river running through the Aftrange midft of the faid Citie, but the water thereof is most vnwhole some, for it breedeth sometimes in Wome in men that drinke thereof, and especially in them that bee not there borne, a Worme of an ell mens lege. long, which lyeth commonly in the leg, betwire the fleth and the skin, and is pluckt out about the Ancle with great art and cunning, the Surgeons being much practifed therein, and if shee breake in plucking out, the partie dyeth, and every day the commeth out about an inch, which is rolled up, and so workerh till the bee all out. And yet it is there forbidden to drinke any o-20 ther thing then water, and Mares milke, and who locuer is found to breake that Law, is whipped and beaten most cruelly through the open markets, and there are Officers appointed for the tame. who have authoritie to goe into any mans houle, to fearch if hee have either Aquanta, Wine, or Brag, and finding the same, doe breake the vessels, spoyle the drinke, and punish the matters of the house most cruelly ; yea, and many times if they perceive but by the breath of a man that hee hath drunke, without further exa mination he shall not escape their hands, There is a Metropolitane in this Boghar, who caufeth this law to be fo ftraightly kept : and he is more obeyed then the King, and will depose the King, and place another at his will and pleafare, as hee did by this King that raigned at our being there, and his predeceffour, by the meanes of the faid Metropolitan : for hee betrayed him, and in the night flew him in his chamber, who

40 was a Prince that loued all Christians well.

This Countrey of Boghar was somtime subject to the Perstans, and doe now speake the Per- Thesare of fian tongue, but yet now it is a Kingdome of it felfe, and hath most crueli warres continually the testion with the faid Persians about their Religion, although they bee all Mahametists. One occasion of Tarians.

their warres is, for that the Persan, will not cut the hayre of their upper lips, as the Bogbarians and all other Tartars doe, which they account great finne, and call them Caphars, that is, ynbeleeuers, as they doe the Christians. The King of Bogbar hath no great power or riches, his revenues are but small, and hee is most maintained by the Citie: for he taketh the tenth penie of all things that are there fold, as well by the Craftimen as by the Merchants, to the great impouerishment of the people, whom hee keepeth in great subjection, and when hee lacketh money, he sendeth his officers to the Shops 50 of the faid Merchants, to take their wares to pay his debts, and will have credit of force, as the like hee did to pay me certaine money that he owed me for nineteene pieces of Kerley. Their money is filter and copper, for gold their is none currant: they have but one piece of filter, and The Coyne of that is worth twelue-pence English, and the copper money are called Pooles, and one hundred Bother ... and twentie of them goeth to the value of the faid twelue-pence, and is more common payment then the filter, which the King caufeth to rife and fall to his most advantage every other moneth, and somtimes twife a moneth, not caring to oppresse his people, for that he looketh not to raigne about two of three yeeres, before he bee either Illine or driven away, to the great destruction of

The twentie fixth day of the moneth, I was commanded to goe before the faid King, to whom 60 I presented the Emperour of Russia his letters, who entertained vs most gently, and caused vs to eate in his prefence, and duers times heefent for me, and denifed with me familiarly in his fecret chamber, as well of the power of the Emperour, and the great Turke, as also of our Countries, Lawes, and Religion, and cauted vs to shoote in hand-guns betere him, and did himilie

practife the vie thereof. But after all this great entertainment, before my departure her thewed Avery Tart r. himfelfe a very Tartar: for he went to the warres owing me money, and faw me not paved before his departure. And although indeed hee gaue order for the fame, yet was I very ill fatisfied. and forced to rebate part, and to take wares as payment for the reft contrary to my expectation on : but of a begger better payment I could not haue, & glad I was fo to be payd and dispatched.

But yet I must needs praise and commend this barbarous King, who immediately after myorriuall at Boebar, hauing understood our trouble with the Theeues, fent one | undred men well armed, and gaue them great charge not to returne before they had either flaine or taken the favd theeues. Who according to their commission ranged the wildernesse in such fort, that they met The Kings inwith the faid companie of Theeues, and flew part, and part fled, and foure they tooke and to brought vinto the King, and two of them were fore wounded in our skirmilh with our Gune. And after the King had fent for me to come to fee them, hee caused them all foure to bee hanged at his Palace gate, because they were Gentlemen, to the example of others. And of fuch goods as were gotten againe, I had part reftored me; and this good Iuffice I found at his hands.

There is veerely great refort of Merchants to this Citie of Boghar, which travell in great Ca. ravans from the Countries thereabout adioyning, as India, Persia, Balgh, Russia, with diversothers, and in times past from Cathay, when there was passage: but thele Merchants are so besgerly and poore, and bring to little quantitie of wares, lying two or three yeeres to fell the fame. that there is no hope of any good trade there to be had worthy the following. The chiefe commodifies that are brought thither out of their forefaid Countries, are thefe following.

The Indians doe bring fine Whites, which the Tartars doe all roll about their heads and all other kindes of Whites, which ferue for apparell made of Cotton-wooll and Crafca, but Gold, Silver, precious Stones, and Spices they bring none. I enquired and perceived that all fuch trade passeth to the Ocean sea, and the veynes where all such things are gottenare in the fubiection of the Portugals. The Indians carrie from Bogbar againe wrought Silkes, red Hides, Slaves, and Horses, with such like, but of Kerseis and other cloath, they make littleaccount. I offered to bartar with Merchants of those Countries, which came from the furthest parts of India, even from the Countrey of Bengala, and the river Ganges, to give them Kerfeisfor their commodities, but they would not barter for such commoditie as Cloath.

Taskent and

The Persians doe bring thither Craska, Woollen-cloath, Linnen-cloath, divers kindes of 30 wrought pide Silkes, Argomacks, with fuch like, and doe carrie from thence red hydes with other Ruffe wares, and Slaues, which are of divers Countries, but cloath they will buy none, for that they bring thither themselves, and is brought vnto them as I have inquired from Alone in Spria, and the parts of Turkie. The Ruffes doe carrie vnto Bogbar, red hydes, there skinnes. woollen cloath of divers forts, woodden veffels, brydles, fadules, with fuch like, and doe carne away from thence divers kindes of wares made of cotten-wooll, divers kindes of filkes, Crafes, with other things, but there is but finall vicerance. From the Countries of Cathar are brought thither in time of peace, and when the way is open, Muske, Rubarbe, Satten, Damaske, with divers others things. At my being at Bogbar, there came Caravans out of all thele forefaid Courtries, except from Cathar; and the caule why there came none from thence, was the great # warres that had dured three yeeres before my comming thither, and yet dured betwixt two great Countries and Cities of Tartars, that are directly in the way betwixt the faid Boohar and the faid Cathar, and certaine barbarous field people, as well Gentiles as Mahometiffs bordering to the faid Cities. The Cities are called Taskers and Caskar, and the people that warre against Taskent are called Coffacks of the law of Mahomet : and they which warre with the faid Countrey of Cashar are called Kings, Gentiles and Idolaters. These two barbarous Nations are of great force, living in the fields without House or Towne, and have almost subdued the foresaid Cities, and to ftopped up the way, that it is impossible for any Carauan to passe unspoyled : fo that three yeeres before our being there, no Carauan had gone, or vied trade betwint the Countries of Cathar and Boghar, and when the way is cleare, it is nine moneths journey. To speake of the faid Country of Cathay, and of such newes as I have heard thereof, I have thought it best to referue it to our meeting. I having made my solace at Bogbar, in the winter time, and having learned by much inquitition, the trade thereof, as also of all the other Countries thereto adjoyning, and the time of the yeere being come, for all Caranans to depart, and alfo the King being gone to the warres, and newes come that hee was fled, and I advertised by the Metropolitan himielfe, that I thould depart, because the Towne was like to bee beseged: I thought it good and meete, to take my journey fome way, and determined to have gone from thence into Persia, and to have seene the trade of that Countrey, although I had informed my felfe fufficiently therof, a, well at Aftracan, as at Boghar: and perceived well the trades not to be much vnlike the trades of Tartaria : but when I should have taken my journey that way, it was 60 let by divers occasions: the one was, the great warres that did newly begin betwint the Sophie, and the Kings of Tartaria, whereby the wayes were destroyed : and there was a Carauan deitroyed with rouers and theeues, which came out of India and Perfia, by fafe conduct : and about ten dayes journey from Bogbar, they were robbed, and a great part flame. Also the Metropoli-

ton of Boobar, who is greater then the King, tooke the Emperours letters of Ruffia from me, without which I should have beene taken Slave in every place : also all such wares as I had recritied in barrer for Cloath, and as I tooke perforce of the King, and other his Nobles, in payment of money due vnto me, were not vendible in Perfia: for which causes, and divers others. I was constrained to come backe againe to Mare Calpium, the same way I went : so that the He returned the short Agrant to of the faid Citie of Boghar, being a Caravan of fixe hunthe eight of March, 1559, wee departed out of the faid Citie of Boghar, being a Caravan of fixe hunthe eight of dred Camels: and if wee had not departed when we did, I and my companie had beene in dan- March, 1550. ger to haue lost life and goods. For ten dayes after our departure, the King of Samarcand came with an armie, and belieged the faid Citie of Boghar, the King being ablent, and gone to the Samarcand.

to warres against another Prince his kinsman, as the like chanceth in those Countries once in two or three yeeres. For it is maruell, if a King raigne there about three or foure yeeres, to the great de-Araction of the Countrey and Merchants.

The fine and twentieth of March, we came to the foresaid Towne of Urgence, and escaped the Vrence. danger of foure hundred rouers, which lay in wayte for vs backe againe, being the most of them of kindred to that companie of theeues, which wee met with going foorth, as we perceived by foure fpyes, which were taken. There were in my companie, and committed to my charge, two Ambaffadors, the one from the King of Boghar, the other from the King of Balke, and were fent The King of vnto the Emperour of Ruffia. And after having tarried at Vrgence, and the Caffle of Selly fore, eight Bally, or Bulgh dayes for the affembling, and making ready our Carauan, the second of Aprill wee departed from 20 thence, having foure moe Ambassadours in our companie, fent from the King of Urgence, and other Sultans, his brethren, vnto the Emperour of Ruffia, with answer of such Letters as I brought them : and the same Ambassidours were also committed vnto my charge by the said Kings and Princes : to whom I promised most faithfully, and swore by our Law, that they should bee well vied in Rulland, and fuffered to depart from thence againe in fafetie, according as the Emperour had written also in his letters : for they somewhat doubted, because there had none gone out of Tartaria into Russia, of long time before.

The three and twentieth of Aprill, wee arrived at the Mare Caspinan againe, where we The Caspina found our Barke which wee came in, but neither Anchor, Cable, Cocke, nor Sayle : neuerthe- fea. leffe we brought Hempe with vs, and fpun a Cable our felues, with the reft of our tackling, and 30 made vs a fayle of cloath of Cotton-wooll, and rigged our Barke as well as wee could, but hoate or anchor we had none. In the meane time being denifing to make an anchor of wood of a Cartwheele, there arrived a Barke, which came from Astracan, with Tartars and Russes, which had Woodden and two Anchors, with whom I agreed for the one : and thus being in a readinesse, wee set sayle and chor. departed, I, and the two Johnsons, being Master and Mariners our selues, having in our Barke the faid fixe Ambassadours, and twentie five Russes, which had beene Slaves a long time in Tartaria. nor euer had before my comming, libertie, or meanes to get home, and these Slaues served to row when need was. Thus fayling iometimes along the coaft, and iometimes out of fight of land. The thirteenth day of May, having a contrary winde, we came to an anchor, being three leagues from the shoare, and there arose a fore storme, which continued fortie foure houres, and our ca-40 blebeing of our owne spinning, brake, and lost our anchor, and being off a lee shoare, and having Dangerous no boate to helpe vs, wee hoyled our layle, and bare roomer with the faid shoare, looking for pre- tempess, and fent death: but as God prouided for vs.we ranne into a creeke full of Oze, and fo faued our felues vie of the with our Barke and lived in great diffeomfort for a time. For although were floud by the Godd by Compaffer with our Barke, and lived in great discomfort for a time. For although wee should have escaped with our lives the danger of the fea, yet if our barke had perished, we knew we should have been either destroyed, or taken slaues by the people of that Countrey, who line wildly in the field, like beafts, without house or habitation. Thus when the storme was seafed, wee went out of the creeke againe : and having let the land with our Compasse, and taken certayn markes of the same, during the time of the tempest, whilest we rid at our anchor, wee went directly to the place where we rid, with our Barke againe, and found our anchor which we loft : whereat the Tartars 50 much maruelled, how we did it. While wee were in the creeke, we made an anchor of wood of Cart wheeles, which we had in our Barke, which we threw away, when we had found our Iron anchor againe. Within two dayes after, there arose another great storme, at the North-east, and we lay a trie, being driven farre into the fea, and had much adoe to keepe our Barke from finking, the billow was fo great : but at the last, having faire weather, wee tooke the Sunne, and knowing how the Land lay from vs, we fell with the River Taik, according to our defire, whereof the Taik. Tartars were very glad, fearing that wee should have beene driven to the coast of Persia, whose people were vnto them great enemies.

Note, that during the time of our Navigation, we fet up the red Croffe of Saint George in our The English flagges, for honour of the Christians, which I supposed was neuer seene in the Caspian sea before. flag in the Cas 60 Wee paffed in this voyage divers fortunes: notwith flanding, the eight and twentieth of May we fam. Commy there arrived in lafetie at Afracan, and there remayned till the centh of fone following, as well to which a dog prepare vs small Boates, to goe vp against the streame of Volga, with our goods, as also for the companie of the Amballadours of Tararie, committed vinto me, to be brought to the prefence of the Emperour of Ruffia.

Carauan de-

This Castian sea (to say something of it) is in length about two hundred leagues, and in breadth one hundred and fittie, without any iffue to other Seas : to the East part wheref, joyneth the great delart Countrey of the Tartars, called Turkemen: to the West, the Countries of the Chreafles, the Mountaines of Caucafus, and the Mare Euxinum, which is from the faid Cafe. Anothe de Copyriges, in Manuferd leagues. To the North is the river Volga, and the land of Nagas, and to the terprion of an oca, a minute tragger of the Countries of Media and Person. This Sea is fresh water in many places, and in other places as falt as our great Ocean: It hath many goodly Rivers falling into it, and it anovdeth not is selfe except it bee vnder ground. The notable Rivers that fall into it, are first the great River of Volga, called in the Tartar tongue Edell, which springeth out of a lake in a marrish or plaine ground, not farre from the Citie of Nouogrode in Ruffia, and it is from the spring to 10 the Sea, about two thousand English miles. It hath divers other goodly Rivers falling into it, as out of Siber in, Taic, and Tem: Allo out of the mountaines of Cancasus, the Rivers of Crue and Aralb, and divers others.

As touching the trade of Shamakie in Media and Tebris, with other Townes in Persia, I have enquired, and doe well understand, that it is even like to the trades of Tartaria, that is little vt. terance, and small profite: and I have been advertised that the chiefe trade of Persia is into Stria, and so transported into the Leuant sea. The few ships upon the Cassian Seas, the want of Mart and port Townes, the pouertie of the people, and the Ice, maketh that trade naught.

At Astracan there were Merchants of Shamake, with whom I offered to barter, and to give deg.9-minuts, them Kerfies for their wares, but they would not, faying, they had them as good cheape in their to Countrev. as I offered them, which was fixe rubbles for a Kerfie, that I asked: and while I was at Bozhar, there were brought thither out of Persia, Cloath, and divers commodities of our Countries, which was fold as good cheape, as I might fell ours.

The tenth day of Iune, wee departed from Astracan towards the Mosco, having an hundred gunners in our companie at the Emperours charges, for the fafe conduct of the Tarrar Ambasiadours and me. And the eight and twentieth day of July following, we arrived at the Citie of Cazan, having been upon the way from Afracan thither, fixe weekes and more, without any refreihing of victuals : for in all that way there is no habitation.

The feuenth of August following, wee departed from Cazan, and transported our goods by Carmis in ss. water, as farre as the Citie of Morum, and then by land : fo that the second of September, wee deg.33.min. His arriuall ar arrived at the Citie of the Molco, and the fourth day I came before the Emperours Maieslie, kiffed his hand, and prefented him a white Cowes tayle of Cather, and a Drum of Tartaria, which hee well accepted. Also I brought before him all the Ambassadours that were committed to my charge, with all the Ruffe flaues : and that day I dined in his Maiesties presence, and at dinner, his Grace fent me meate by a Duke, and asked mediuers questions touching the Lands and Countries where I had beene. And thus I remay ned at the Mosco about your affaires, vntill the seventeenth day of Februarie that your wares were sent downe : and then having licence of the Emperours Maiestie to depart, the one and twentieth day I came to your house to Vologhdr, and there remay ned vntill the breaking vp of the yeere : and then having feene all your goods laden into your Boates, I departed with the jame, and arrived withall in fafetie at Colmogro, the minth of May 1560. I have certaine notes which seeme to have beene written at Boghat by some of Master lenkinsons companie: which containe intelligences there received touching Cathay and the wayes thither, Bul I bove thereof in that which followes to give better intelligence. The fixteenth of October they arrived at Afracan. The ninteenth of November the winde being northerly, there was a great frost, and much Ice in the River: the next day being the twentieth of Nouember, the Iceftood in the Riuer, and to continued vntill Eafter day.

On the one and thirtieth of Ianuarie there happened a great Eclipse of the Moone, which began about twelue of the clocke at night, and continued before thee was cleere an houre and an 20 halfe by estimation, which ended the first of Februarie about halfe an houre past one in the morning : fhee was wholly darkned by the space of halfe an houre.

The Factors of the Companie consulting upon their affaires, determined to leave at Afracan the one halfe of their goods with Arthur Edwards, and with the other halfe, the other three Factors would proceed in the ship on their purposed Voyage to the coast of Media, to see what might bee done 10 there: where, if they could not finde fafe trafficke, they determined to proceed to the coast of Gilan, which is a Prouince neere the Caspian Sea bordering vpon Persia: and thereupon appointed the faid goods to be laden aboord the ship, and tooke into her also some merchandise of Title or Persian Merchants.

The twelfth day the Panos came to them from the Vehoog, whereby they lighted the thip of all the goods. The thirteenth day in the morning there came to them a fmall Boat, fent by the Captaine of Afra- 50 can, to learne whether the ship were at Sea cleare off the flats. At foure of the clocke in the after-noone, the winde North-west, they set their sayles: and from thence till the sixe and 30 twentieth day at noone, they fayled East South-east foure leagues. From thence they fayled vntill the feuen and twentieth day two of the clocke in the morning, West Southwest eight leagues, the winde blowing at North very much. From the faid two till foure of the clocke, they fayled South by West one league: then being day light, they saw the Land plaine, which was not past three leagues from them, being very high ragged Land. There were certaine Rockes that lay farre off into the Sea, about five leagues from the fame Land, (which are called Barmake Talb) they layled betweene those Rockes and the Land, and about five of the clocke they passed by the Port Bilbill, where they should have put in but could not : and bearing long it the shoare about two of the clocke after noone, they came to Bildib in the Countrey of Media Bilbill.

Presently after they were at anchor, there came aboord of them a Boat , wherein were feuen or eight persons , two Turkes, the rest Persians, the Turkes vassals, which bade them welcome, and seemed to be glad of their arrivall, who told the Factors that the Turke had conquered all Media, or the Countrey Sheruan, and how that the Turkes Balha remayned in Derbent with a Garrison of Turkes, and that Shamaky was wholly spoyled, and had few or no Inhabitants left in it. The Factors then being defirous to come to the speech of the Basha, sent one of the Tiskes (or Merchants that went over with them from Astracan, passingers) and one of the Companies servants Robert Golding, with those Souldiers, to the Captaine of Bachu, which place standeth hard by the Sea, to certifie him Bathu Port, of their arrivall, and what commodities they had brought, and to defire friendship to have quiet

In the morning very early, hee fent Horle for the rest of the companie which should goe to Derbent, sending by them that went, ten Sheepe for the ship. Whilest they were at breakfast, Mafter Turnbull, Mafter Tailboyes, and Thomas Hudfon the Mafter of the fhip, came thither , and when they had all broken their faits, they went to Bachu. And from Bachu they proceeded towards Derbent, as it was by the Captaine promifed, being accompanied on their way for their fafe conduct, with a Gentleman, and certaine Souldiers, which had the Captaine of Bachs his

Souldiers, formewhat neerer the Cattle, which likewife having done their falutations rode bea fore them, and then came forth Noblemen, Captaines, and Gentlemen, to receive them into the Castle and Towne. As they entred the Castle, there was a shot of twentie Peeces of great Ordnance, and the Basha sent Master Turnbull a very faire Horse with furniture to mount on, esteemed to be worth an hundred Markes, and so they were contayed to his presence: who after he had talked with them, fent for a Coat of cloth of Gold, and caufed it to be put on Ma. fter Turnbuls backe, and then willed them all to depart, and take their eafe, for that they were fter Turnbult backe, and then willed them an to depart, and take further with them. The next day 10 wearie of their journey, and on the morrow he would talke further with them. The next day 10 wearie of their journey, and on the morrow he would talke further with them. when the Factors came againe to the presence of the Basta, according to his appointment, they requested him that he would grant them his priniledge, whereby they might trafficke safely in any part and place of his Countrey, offering him, that if it pleafed his Maiestie to have any of the commodities that they had brought, and to write his minde thereof to the Captaine of Be. chu, it should be delivered him accordingly. The Bashaes answere was, that he would willingly giue them his priviledge: yet for that he regarded their fafety, having come so farre, and knowing the state of his Countrey to be troublesome, he would have them to bring their commoditie thither, and there to make fale of it, promifing he would prouide fuch commodities as they needed, and that he would be a defence vnto them, so that they should not be injured by any; wherequen the recommendation of the state of the Bildib by divers observations is 40.deg. 25.m. the variation of the Compas 10.deg. 40.min.from North to West. They arrived at anchor against Derbent East and by South from the said Castle in foure fathom & a halfe water, the two and twentieth of Iune at ten of the clock in the morning; then they tooke up their Ordnance, which before they had stowed in hold for easing the ship in her rolling. In the afternoone the Balba came down to the water fide against the ship, and having the faid Ordnance placed, and charged, it was all shot off to gratise him: and presently as ter his departure backe, he permitted the Factors to come abourd the ship. The nine and twentieth day their goods were valaden, and carried to the Balbaes Garden, where hee made choice of fuch things as he liked, taking for custome of euery fine and twentie Kersies, or whatsouer, one, or after the rate of foure for the hundred. The Factors after his choice made, determined to fend a part of the rest of the goods to Bachu, for the speedier making sale thereof. They departed from Derbent with the faid Barke the nineteenth of July, and arrived at Bildib the fue and twentieth day. Robert Golding defirous to understand what might bee done at Shamaky, which is a dayes journey from Bachn, went thither, from whence returning, he was fet on by theeues, and was shot into the knee with an Arrow, who had very hardly escaped with his life and goods, but that by good hap he killed one of the theeues Horfes with a Caliuer, and shot a Turke thorow both cheekes with a Dag. On the fixt day of August, the Factors being aduertiled at Derbene that their ship was so rotten and weake, that it was doubtfull shee would not carrie them backe to Astracan, did thereupon agree and bargaine at that place with an Armenian, whose name was lacab, for a Barke called a Buffe, being of burden about fine and thirtie do tunnes, which came that yeere from Astracan, and was at that instant riding at an Iland called Zere, about three or foure leagues beyond, or to the Eastward of Bildib, which Barke for their more fafety, they meant to have with them in their returne to Afracan, and thereupon wrote vnto Wincoll and the rest at Bachu, that they should receive the same Busse, and lade in her their goods at Bildin, to be returned to Derbent, and to discharge their first Boat, which was observed by them accordingly. When all their goods were laden aboord the faid Buffe at Bildib, and being readie to have departed thence for Derbent, there arose a great storme with the winde out of the Sea, by force whereof the Cables and Halfers were broken, and their Veffell put ashoare, and broken to pieces against the Rockes : euery of them that were in her faued their lives, and part of the goods. But there was a Carobia or Chift, wherein were Dollers, and Gold, which they 10 had receised for the commodities of the Companie, which they fold at Bachs, which at the taking out of the Busse, fell by the Barkes side into the water amongst the Rockes, and so was loft. The packes of Cloth which they could not well take out of the Buffe were alfo loft; other things that were more profitable they faued. The third day of October all things were brought from the shoare aboord the ship: and that day the Factors went to the Balha to take their leave of him, vntowhom they recommended those the Companies servants, &c. which they had sent to Bachs, making account to leave them behind in the Countrey : who caused their names to be written, and promised they should want nothing, nor be injured of any. After this leave taken, the Factors went aboord, purpoling prefently to haue fet fayle and departed towards Afracan, the winde fetuing well for that pur- 60 pose at South South-east : And as they were readie to set sayle, there came against the ship a man, who weued: whereupon the Boat was fent ashoare to him, who was an Armenian fent from William Wincoll, with his writing tables , wherein the faid Wincoll had written briefly, the mil-hap of the loffe of the Buffe, and that they were comming from Bildib towards Derbent, they, and such things as they saued with a small Boat, forced to put ashoare in a place by the they, and then timing as they are the second the factors caused the ship to stay, hoping Tue armenian Sea not called the Manager than the Manager that with the Southerly winde that then blew, they would come from the place they were at Village. to the ship, but if they could not come with that winde, they meant to sayle with the ship, with the next wind that would ferue them, against the place where they were, and take them in, if they could: which stay and losse of those Southerly winds, was a cause of great troubles. that they afterwards sustayned through Ice, &c. entring the Volga as shall be declared.

There are yet to bee perceived of the ruine of those wals, which doe now extend into the Sea about halfe a mile: also from the Castle West-ward into the Land. they did perceive the ruines of a stone wall to extend, which wal, as it is reported, did passe from thence to Pontus Euxinus, & was built by Alexand. the great, when the castle Derbent was made.

The fift of October about noone, the winde North North-east they weighed Anchor, and fet favle from Derbent, being along it the Coaft to the South-wards to feeke their men; but as they had failed about foure leagues the winde scanted Easterly, so that they were forced to Anchor in three fathome water.

The fewenth day about fouen of the clocke in the morning, they fet fayle, the wind Southwest. They considered the time of the yeare was farre ipent, the ship weake, leake, and rotten, and therefore determining not to tarry any longer for Wincoll and his fellowes, but to leave them behind, bent themselves directly towards Afracan: and fayling North North-east untill midnight about fixteene leagues, the wind then came to the North North-west, and blew much, a very storme, which caused them to take in all their Sayles, saving the fore Corse, with which they were forced to steere before the Sea, South by West, and South South-west. And on the eight day about two of the clocke in the morning, their great Boat sunkeat the ships sterne, which they were forced to cut from the ship to their great griefe and discomfort; for in her they hoped to faue their lines if the ship should have miscarried. About ten of the clocke before noones they had fight of the Land about fine leagues to the South of Derbent, and bare alongst the Coaft to the South-eaft-wards vnto Nexauso, where they came at Anchor in three fathomes, Nexauso, and blacke Ozie, good Anchor hold, whereof they were glad, as also that the winde was shifted to the North-west, and but a meane gale. Wincell and the rest of his fellowes being in the Armeman Village, which is about eighteene Verits to the West-wards of Nexano, the place where against they rode at Anchor, faw the ship as she passed by that place, and sent a man in the night 40 following alongit the Coast after her, who came against the ship where shee rode, and with a fire-brand in the top of a Tree made fignes, which was perceived by them in the ship, wherevpon they hoyfed out their Skiffe, and fent her ashoare to learne what was meant by the fire: which returned a Letter from Wincoll, wherein he wrote that they were with fuch goods as they had at the Armenian Village, and prayed that there they might with the same goods bee taken into the ships.

The tenth day they sent their Skiffe to the Armenian Village to setch those men and the Theparticugoods they had, with order that if the winde ferued, that they could not returne to fetch the larsof their flip, they of the ship promised to come for them, against the said Village, But in their want God returne are of them two Course of Partridges, that came from the shore and their want God mitted. fent them two Couies of Partridges, that came from the shoare, and lighted in and about their Aftrange ac-50 thips, whereby they were comforted, and one that lay ficke, of whose life was small hope, re-cident of pro-

The thirteenth of Nouember they departed also in those Lighters, with the goods towards the Chetera Bongori, leauing the ship at Anchor, and in her two Ruffer, which with three more that went in the Pauofes to provide victuals for themselves and the rest, and therewith promised to returne backe to the ship with all speed, had offered to undertake for twentie Rubbles in Money, to carrie the ship into some Harbour, where shee might fafely winter, or else to keepe her where the rode all Winter, which was promifed to bee given them if they did it : and the same 60 day when with those Lighters they had gotten fight of the foure Hands, being about eight Verftes South-west from them, the wind then at North-east, did freele the Sea so as they could not row, guide, stirre, erremoue the faid Lighters, but as the wind and Ice did force them. And so they continued driving with the Ice, South-east into the Sea by the space of fortie houres, and then being the fixseenth day, the Ice flood. Whiles they droue with the Ice, the dangers which they incurred were great : for oftentimes, when the Ice with force of wind and Sea did breaker pieces of it were toffed and driven one vpon another with greatforce, terrible to behold, and the same happened at sometimes so neere vnto the Lighters, that they expected it would have ouer-whelmed them to their veter destruction ; but God who had preserved them from many perils before, did also faue and deliver them then.

Within three or foure dayes after the first standing of the Ice, when it was firme and strong they tooke out all their goods, being fortie and eight Bales or Packes of Raw Silke, &c. laid it on the Ice, and couered the same with such proussions as they had. Then for want of victuals. &c. they agreed to leave all the goods there vpon the Ice, and to goe to the shoare : and there-Trauell you vpon brake vp their Chefts and Corobias, wherewith, and with fuch other things as they could to get, they made Sleds for every of them to draw vpon the Ice, whereon they layed their clothes to keepe them warme, and fuch victuals as they had, and fuch other things as they might conveniently carrie, and so they departed from the said goods and Panofes very early, about one of the clocke in the morning, and trauelling on the Ice, directed their way North, as necess

The goods and Panofes which they left on the Ice, they indeed to be from those Chetera Babbas, about twentie Versts. And the next morning departed thence East-wards, and came to the Chetera Bongories (or foure Ilands before spoken of) before none (the diffance betweene those places is about fifteene Versts) where they remained all that night, 20 departing thence towards Aftracan: the next morning very early they loft their way through the perswasion of the Russes which were with them, taking to much towards the left hand(contrary to the opinion of Master Hudson) whereby wandering vponthe Ice source or five dayes, not knowing whether they were entred into the Crimme Tartars Land or not, at length it fortuned they met with a way that had beene trauelled, which croft back-wards towards the Sea: that way they tooke, and following the same, within two dayes trauell it brought them to a place, called the Crasnopare (that is to say, in the English Tongue) Red (liffe, which divers of the

In the morning they departed early from Grafneyare towards the Ouchooge, and about nine of the clocke before noone, being within ten Verits of the Pchooge, they met Amos Riall, with the Carpenter, which he found at Ouchooge, and a Gunner newly come out of England, and also fixtie fine Horses with so many Cassacks to guide them, and fiftie Gunners for guard, which brought prouision of victuals, &c. and were sent by the Duke to fetch the goods to Astracan. The meeting of that company was much joy vnto them.

The Factors fent backe with Amos Riall, and the faid company to fetch the goods, Thomas to Hudfon the Master, Tobias Paris his Mate, and so they the said Factors and their company marched on to the Uchooge, where they refreshed themselves that day, and the night following, And from thence proceeded on towards Astracan, where they arrived the last day of November. These that went for the goods after their departure from the Factors, travelled the same day untill they came within ten Versts of the Chetera Babbas, where they rested that night. The next morning by the breake of the day they departed thence, and before noone were at the Chetera Babbas, where they stayed all night; but presently departed thence Thomas Hudson with the Carpenter and Gunner to feeeke where the goods lay : who found the fame, and the next day they returned backe to their company at the Chetera Babbas , and declared vnto them in what fort they had found the faid goods. The third day early in the morning, they departed all from the foure Babbas towards the faid

And when they came to the Chetera Bougori, where they rested the night, in the morning very early before the breake of day, they were affaulted by a great company of the Nagars Tartars Horse-men, which came shouting and hallowing with a great noyle, but our people were so inuironed with the sleds, that they durst not enter voon them, but ranne by, and shot their Arrowes amongst them, and hurt but one man in the head, who was a Ruffe, and so departed presently. Yet when it was day, they shewed themselues a good distance off from our men, being a very great troope of them, but did not asfault them any more. The same day our men with those carriages, departed from thence to- 60 wards Afracan, where they arrived in fafetie the fourth of December, about three of the clock in the after-noone, where our people greatly rejoyced of their great good hap to have elcaped so many hard events, troubles and miseries, as they did in that Voyage, and had great cause therefore to prayle the Almightie, who had to mercifully preserved and delivered them.

A Letter of Mafter HENRIE LANE to the worshipfull Master WILLIAM SANDERSON, containing a briefe discourse of that which passed in the North-east discouerie, for the space of three and shirtie veeres.

- After Sanderson, as you lately requested me, so have I sought, and shough I cannot finde Some things that heretofore I kept in writing, and lent out to others, yet perusing at London copies of mine old Letters to content one that meaneth to pleasure many, I have briefly and as truely as I may, drawne out as followeth: The rough bewing may bee planed at your leafure, or as pleaseth him that shall take the paines.

First the honourable attempt to discouer by Sea North-east and North-west named for Cathay being chiefly procured by, primiledge from King Edward the fixt, and other his Nobilitie, by and at the coff and fuse of Master Sebastian Cabota, then Gouernour for Descoueries, with Ser Andrew ludde, Ser George Barnes, Sir William Garrard, Master Anthony Hustie, and a companie of Merchants, was Anno 1552. in the last yeere of his Maiesties raigne, 1553. To the Reader.

Haue had much trouble to give thee this Authour, both for his Language, being Portugall (which for this, and some other parts of this worke, I was forced to get as I could) and for the raritie of his IC Kelations, seeming both in themselves so stupendrous, and not seconded in many things, that I far not contravied, by other Authours. Besides his booke came not out, till himselfe was gone out of the world. I answere, that Ricius the Ieluite his Relations came not to vs, till himselfe was likewise gone; and that that might rather plead not onely for the Matteritie, but the sinceritie, by that Call an rule, Cui bono: for whom should a dead man flatter, or for what should hee lye? And how somer it seemes incredible to remember such infinite farticulars as this Booke is full of, yet an easie memorie holdeth strong impressions of good or bad. Proceeding along the Coast of Champaa, from Pullo Cambim, we came to a shelfe called Saleyiacus, and the next day to the River Toobafoy, in the mouth whereof a Junke passed by, to which Similar a Piwe offered the courtefie of the Sea, and they in fcorne made flew of a Negroes Buttockes, with rate taken. many trumpets and other iollitie. Yea, faid he, and he had thought in to small a Barke, there had not beene aboue fixe or feuen, and hee would have bound your hands and feet, and impaled you as hee ferued my master. Faria proceeded along the Coaft of Champan, and came to the River Timesorn, by our men Timesorn, or called Varella: into which enter the Ships of Siam and the Malaya Coast, which goe for China, Tam'achim,or and Truck for Gold, Calamba and Juory, whereof that Kingdome hath flore. MENDEZ his many miserable adventures, his strange expedition with ANTONIO DE FARIA; divers coafts visited, Pirats tamed, miseries suffered, elorie recovered.

Ernam Mendez. Pinto, borne at old Montemor in the Kingdome of Portugall, was placed in feruice at ten or twelue yeeres of age in Liston, the thirteenth of December, An. 1521. on the day of breaking the Scatchions, or publike mourning for King Emanuel. A yeere and halfe after he fled vpon occasion of a fuddenaccident, and got aboord a Caruile which was taken by a French Pirat, which would have made fale of them at Larache to the Moores. But a fortnight after taking another Portugall ship comming from Saint Thome worth 40000, Duckets , they returned for France, carrying some with them for Sea seruice, the rest they set on shoare by night on the shoare of Melides, naked; which came to Santiago de Cacem, where they were relieved in Thence he went to Setunal, and served Francisco de Faria a Gentleman belonging to the Matter of Santiago, and after that was Page to the Mafter himfelfe. But his meanes being short hee * See of Gama left his feruice.

An. 1537. he went for India in a Fleet of fine thips; the Admirall was Don Pedro de Sylus, lonne of Vasco * da Gama (first Discouerer of the Indies, whose bones he carried with him in the ship at his returne, which were received by King Johns appointment in greater Funerall pompe, then had beene feene done to a Subiect.) They arrived at Din the fifth of September. Thence after seventeene dayes he went with two Foists for the Straight of Mecca, and came in tora before the fight of Curia Muria, and Abedalcuria, almost wracked with foule weather, and comming to Sacotora, watered neere the Fortreffe which Francisco d'Almeida first Vice-roy of India, had 60 built, 1507. Having received some refreshing of the Christians there, they departed, and in the Mahomet. finall Barkes came abourd vs, and wondred to fee white men with beards. They told him that if he would goe up the River to the Citie Pilausacem, where the King refides, hee might in five dayes fell his goods: for great Merchants reforted thither from the Lauhos, and Pagnaus, and Gue. or. That River they fand came from the Hill Moncalor, eightie leagues from that place, and he-Dird.wonder. vond that Hill it is much larger, but shallower, in some places making shallow fields, where bred infinite flore of Fowles which couer the ground, in such innumerable numbers, that two and fortie vecres before they cauled the Kingdome of Chintaleuhos, (which is eight dayes journey) to be dispeopled. Beyond that Country of Birds, is another wilde and mountainous, where abide many creatures much worse then those Birds, Elephants, Rhinocerotes, Lions, Wilde-swine Buffals, and Wilde-kine. In the midft of that Land or Kingdome (fo it had beene in old time) to is a great Lake, which the Natiues call Cunebetee, others Chiammay, from which proceeds this river, with other three ingreat quantitie washing that land. That lake, as some write, containeth in circuit fixtie Iaons (each of which is three leagues) alongft which are Mines of Silver, Copper. Tinne, and Lead, carried thence by Merchants in Cafilus, with Elephants and Badas (Rhinoce. rotes) to the Kingdomes of Sornan, or Siam, Passiloco, Sanady, Tangu, Prom, Calaminhan, and other Kingdomes. Being asked of the weapons of those Countries, they answered, That they have none but Poles burned, and short Crifes of two spannes. They might not go vp the River in less then two months, or two and a halfe, by reason of the force of the water, which way downe, they might dispatch in eight or ten daves. Faria going from thence, came to Pullo Champeiloo, an Iland not inhabited in fourteene degrees 20 and twentie minutes, at the entrie of the Bay of Cauchin-China : and thence having fitted his

Ordnance to Amam, to feeke Coia Acem : and being come to Pullo Capas, a Fleet of fortie great

Towne of some ten thousand houses. At his returne hee saw also one lunke in the Barre of the Quian Tolam, a River at anchor, which feemed of another Coaft. Faria supposed this last was of that Pyrat Cois Acem, which therefore hee affailed and tooke. One of the company was a Christian of Mount Sinai, named Tome Mostangue a Merchant, whose Barke Solyman Bassa had taken A. 1538 in the flangue his ad- Port of Indaa, with feuen others to be victuallers for his Armada of fixtie gallies, wherewith he was fent by the Great Turke, to restore Sulian Baadur to his Kingdome of Cambaya, whereof the 10 Mogor had then dispossessed him, and to drive the Portugalls out of India. And when he demanded of the Turkes his freight, which they had promifed, they tooke his wife and his daughter, and openly rauished them before his eyes; his sonne, which cried at that spectacle, they threw into the Sea bound hand and foot : and laid himfelfe in yrons, tooke away his goods, worth aboue fixe thousand Duckets. His wife and daughter died, and hee as desperate leaped one night into the Sea, at the Bar of Diu, with a sonne which there her had and got to Surat, and came thrice to Malacca in a Ship of Garcia de Saa; whence by Stephen Gama he was fent for China, with Chriflowan Sardinba, Factor of Malneo; whom riding at anchor in Cincapura Quiay Taylam, Captaine of this lunke flew with fix and twentie Portugals, and faued him alue because he was a Gunner. Faria cried out that he had heard of this Quiay Tajiam, that he had killed aboue one hundred Por- 10 tugals, and spoiled them of one hundred thouland Cruzados, and that since he killed Sardinha, he caused himselfe to bee called by his name. Hee asked this Armenian where he was, hee shewed where he with fixe or feuen others were hidden in the Iunke. Faria went and opened the skuttle, and Taiam with his company began a new fight, killed two Portugals and feuen boyes, and wounded twentie ; but in the end were flaine. Faria hafted away for feare of the Lunkes in the River, and came to the Coast of Cauchin-China where he risted this Junke, and found in her Spices and other goods, to the value of fixtie thousand Crozados, belides Artillery, which the Pirate had taken out of the Ships of Sardinha, Olineyra, and Matos. The next day hee fet faile agains for Ainam, and by the way lighted on Boates fishing for Pearles, to whom they offered contract, who told them that Guamboy, a Port somewhat before, 50 (as in Cantan, Chinch:o, Laman, Comhay, Sumbor, and Liampoo, and other Coast Cities) was a place of trade for strangers, and counselled him to goe thither : for there they had nothing but Pearles, which they fished for the treasure of the Sonne of the Sunne, by the command of the Tu-Sunne, title of tan of Combay, supreme Gouernor of all Cauchin-China. And that the law was, that if any Barke besides the appointed entred, it should bee burnt with all the people therein. And because hee was a stranger, it was best for him to faile away before Buhaquirim the Mand irin, which was but feuen leagues thence came; who had fortie great Iunkes, with two thousand Mariners, and five thousand Souldiers; and did abide there the fixe moneths of fishing, from March to August both included. They much maruelled at the Portagall fashion, having neuer feene any fuch men, and suspected them theeues (they professing themselves Merchants of Siam) with gifts and 60 courtetie they wonne good estimation of these Fishers. One of these being asked touching Ajnam, answered, That it was once an absolute Kingdome gouerned by Prechau Gamu, who dying without an heire there arole such contentions, that in foure yeares and a halfe there dved fixteen Lacafass of men, which are fo many hundred thousands, whereby the Land was so dispeopled, that the Cauchin King made himfelfe mafter thereof, with feuen thousand Mogores, which the Tartar lent him from Tuymican, then the chiefe Citie of his Empire. Hee fet over the fame Horba Paquard, who rebelled and made himfelfe tributarie to the King of China, paying fixe hundred thousand Duckets, or foure hundred thousand Taeis yearely and dying without heire, two bundred thirtie fine yeares fince, hee declared the King of China his Successour; and fo is hath continued. He countelled him not to goe to Aynam; because they were Diffemblers, nor would the Monsion suffer him to go to Liampoo; but to go to the good river Tananquir, stil sounding as he Tananquir, went for the shoalds; there he should have fure Anchorage, and in little space hee might sell all his goods; wherever it was not fafe by reason of reasonlessemen to adventure his goods on Land,

To that River we went, and in the mouth thereof nor able to stemme the Current, two lunks assayled vs, and their first Language was fixe and ewentie Peeces of Ordnance : the Issue was, Faris tooke them both, most of their men being drowned or flaine, and found therein seuenteene Christiane Prisoners, by whom hee learned that the Captayne was a Rouer which bare two names, one of a Christian, Francisco de Saa, the other of a Genile, Necoda Xicanlem. Fine yeares Xiciulem anos he had beene a Christian at Malaca; Garcia de Saa Captayne of the Fortresse, in his Baptisme ther Pyrate. imparting his owne name to him, who married him to a Gentlewoman of Portugal. But hee going, Anna 1 , 24. for (bincheo in a China lanke with twentie Portugals and his Wife, flue both her and them at Pulo Catan and the next yeare took another Portugall lunke at Chinches, which came from Sunda, and flue ten Portugals in her, and thence-forth practifed Pyracie on Chine- A Renegado 20 fes, (es hee thought vs to bee) and Portugals. The goods of the two lunkes amounted to fortie Chiza Robber, thousand Taeis, and senenteene Brasse Peeces. The Captayne of this place was in league with him, and shared a third of his Pyracies. Faria therefore went to another Port fortieleagues Eathward, called Musipinan, wherein were many Merchants which came in Cafilas from the Land of the Laubes, and Pafuans, and Gnees with great flore of filuer. The current ferting flrong against vs at the Rock of Tilauinera. Wee came to Mutipinan, and learned that the River was Multipinan deepe, the best in that Bay; the people peaceable, that Merchants had come nine dayes before from the Kingdome of Benan in two Cafilas, each of fine hundred Oxen, with store of Silver, Benen, Iuory, Waxe, Benioyn, Camfire, Gold in poulder, to buy Pepper, Drugs, and pearles of Aynam; that they had not any Armada of great ships because the Wars which the Prechau (King) of the Canchins made wereby land, that he abode at Quangepaaru, a Citie twelue dayes journy thence; that his Mynes yeelded him fitteene thousand Pites of Silver, halfe of which by Divine Law Quengepears. blonged to the people, which had remitted it to him on condition to pay no other tributes, where to the ancient Prechaus had sworne to keepe it, as long as the Sun should give light to the Earth. Therefreefold a great part of his goods till newes of the Tananquir Rouer made them afraid to come aboard : fo that he was forced to fet faile. Thus after many dayes spent in this Bay of Cauchm-china; because (oia Acem and the Py-

rates which robbed Christians were in league with the Mandarines , and fold that which they had gotten in Ainan, he purfued that purpose againe, and came to Anchorin Madela Hauen in that Iland where he encountred with Himmilau, a Chinese Rouer which had become lately a Moore, and bitter enemy of Christians, of which Religion hee had also beene. Fine Portugal Einnivas an Captine Boyes, which were aboard him, cryed out for mercy, whereby Faria mooned, fent to fine Moore know what they were, which answering with stones on their heads that came in the Boat, Pyrace. a cruell fight followed, in which Faria remayned Vilter, and feifed of the Captaine with fifteene others left aliue. He demanded for the Portugall Boyes, who told them they were in the Prow under Hatches; whereupon fending to fee, they found them lying on a heape with their heads off, a woman with her two children being also so served. Faria asked why hee dealt so with the small Innocents? He answered, it was sufficient that they were children of Portugals. Being asked why he had forfaken the Christian Religion: he faid, because the Portugals had respected him being a Gentale, with Cap in hand saluting him Quiay Nicoda, but after hee was Christian, made little account of him; whereupon he became a Moore in Bottam, and the King of lastan vied him with much honour, his Officers called him Brother, and hee fware on a Booke to become an Enemy to the Portugall and Christian Name as long as he lived, the King and Priest applauding and promising all happinesse to his soule. Seuen yeares he had beene in execution of that Oath, and had taken a lunke of Luys de Pausia in the Ruer of Liampoo, with foure hundred Bares of Pepper, flue eighteene Poringals, besides slaues: and after that had taken at times foure ships, in which he had slaine neere three hundred persons, seuentie of them Portugali, and taken lifteene or fixteen hundred Bares of Pepper and other Commodities, of which the King of Pan had halfe, to secure him and let him have tale: in the River Choaboque on the Coast of China, he had killed Ruy Lobo, his old acquaintance, with feuenteene Portugals, escaping a 60 wracke, and taken into his lunke on condition to pay him two tchouland Cruzados, to let him on shoare at Patane; which notwithstanding, hee slue him and the rest by the Moores counsell one night as they were alleepe. Faria would heare no further, but caused him to bee staine and cast into the Sea. In Silke and other goods he found in the Iunke to the value of fortie thousand Tacis: the Iunke he burned, having none to man her.

The other Necodas or Captaynes of the lunkes, feeing what Faria had done, confulted toes. ther, and feeing he might also doe as much to them, fent two chiefe men to him, defiring him as King of the Sea, to give them securitie to passe, in dispatch of their businesses before the Monton were ended, and that as his Tributaries, they would give him twentie thousand Taeisof Silver: to which he fware, and that no Thiefe should rob them; and with a Prefent received the Mo. ney brought him within anhoure after. A Boy which writ their Paffes, gayned in thirteene daves aboue fourethousand Tacis (besides gifts for dispatch) each lunke guing fine Tacis and the leffe Barkes two. The Vice-Roy also of Aimer fent him a rich Prefent, with a Letter to in-treat him to ferue the Sonne of the Sunne as Admirall from Laman to Liampeo, at ten thousand Taeis annuall wages, befides (after three yeares end) further advancement : wheretohe excufed to his voworthineffe, and departed to Quangipara, a Citie of fifteene thousand Housholds, and for coasted all alongst the Hand of Ainan feuen monethes space, till the Souldiers were wearie and required their shares as had beene agreed; which was quieted with promise to winter at Some and having there made Money of all to give each man his part.

With this agreement they came to an Hand, called Theores Hand, because standing out of the Bay, it is their place to take the first of the Monson. Here at the new Moone in October wee were encountred with a cru ll Tempest in the night, by which the foure Vessels were broken in pieces, fine hundred eightie fixe persons drowned, of which eight and twentie Portugals; three and fiftie of vs by Gods mercie faued, Faria being one, and one and twentie other Portugals. the rest Slaves and Mariners. They spent two dayes and a halfe in Buriall of their dead, and mass get some of their prouision, which yet having taken Salt-water, would not last about five days of the fifteene they flayed there. Faria comforted them faying, that God would not permit for much suil but for a greater good; nor would have taken from thems fine insudred thousand formades; but to give them fixe hundred thousand: God doth not punishwith both hands, his mercie curing the wounds which his Instice maketh. Thus we walked naked, and bare-foot on the Strand & in the Wildernes, fuffering hunger and cold, many of our companions dying, not so much for want of food, as the stinke and putrified

Cane of the Iland, and let fall from his Talons a Mullet a span long; which he taking vp with great prayle to God, and Prayer to Lefus Chrift, not to confider their merits, but bis merits for 10 them, hee canfed it to bee rotted and given to the ficke. Looking to the place whence the Fowle came, they faw more of them flying up and downe, and going thitherwards, discoursed a Valley with divers Fruit-trees, and before they came at it, they found a Deere which a Twee had newly killed, and with their generall cry was scarred from it, having begun to eate it. Wee feefled with it, and with many Mullets which those Sea-kites got, and (scarred with our cries) let fall. This fifting they continued from Munday till Saturday, and then feeing a faile they hid themselves in the Woods. It was a Lantes or Barke with Oares, which came thither with thir tie persons to wood and water; and whiles they were disporting themselves, and had left their Barke vnmanned, Farra apprehended the occasion, and having instructed them, at the name of lefus they all ranne vpon it, entred without gain-faying, and looking the Prow put to Sea. The to Chinois feeing their Langestaken, hasted to the shoare, but scarred with a little Iron-piece out of their Lantes, they fled to the Thickets. We presently fell to eate, what an old man was dreffing for the Chinose, and after fearched and found Silkes, Damaskes, Muske, and other goods worth foure thousand Cruzados, besides Rice, Sugar, Hennes, which we most esteemed for recourie of the ficke. There was a Boy of twelue or thirteene yeares old, whom Faria asked, whenceand whose the Lantes was : hee answered, it was his Fathers, from whom they had unhappily takenis lesse then an boure, all hee had gotten in aboue thirtie yeares : bee came from a place, called Quoaman, where in bartar for Silner be had gotten those goods, which he was going to sell to the Innkes of Siam in the Port of Comhay : and now bee going to supply his want of water , you have taken away his goods without feare of the Instice of Heasen. Faria promising to vie him as his Sonne; then, faid hee, 50 fet me on houre in that miserable Land where my true Father is, with whom I had rather die then line with fo bad people. Much reasoning passed, and he said, they could speake well of God, but little vied his Law : neither would he eate in three dayes space.

We determined to goe for Liampoo, two hundred and fixtie leagues Northwards from thence, and to get if we could, a better Barke, this being little, and scarsly able to brooke those New Moone-stormes on the Coast of China. At Sun-let wee set fayle, and next morning going East North-east, came to an Ile called Guiness, where we tooke a fisher-barke with store of fresh fish, whence we tooke what we thought fit, with eight men of her, twelve to ferue for the Lantes, our men being weake. They told vs that eighteene leagues thence was a good River, called Xinguan, within which was a poore fisher-village, called Xamoy, and three leagues higher vp, a Citie 60 of good Trade. The next day in the evening we came to Xamoy, where a Junke rode fitter for Farsas purpose, which in the night he tooke, the men being afleepe; whom he bound, threatning to kill them all if they made any cry; and fayled prefently with her to the lle Pullo Quirim, nine leagues off, and in three dayes after to an Hand called Luxitar, where for the recourty of the ficke hee flayed fifteene dayes. In the lunke hee found no Merchandize but Rice, the most of which he cast into the Sea to lighten her, and fit her for our Voyage. Thence wee put forth for Liampoo, where we heard were many Portugals from Malaca, Zunda, Siam, and Patane, which vied there to winter.

In the way we encountred, after two dayes fayling, with a Junke of Patane, which belonged an a China Pyrate, called Quiay Panian, a great friend of the Portugals, of whom he had thirtie in Quiay Panian s his company entertayned in his pay. They not knowing vs, began with a terrible falutation of china Pyrate. fifteene Peeces of Artillery, but by Croffes in their Banner, we knew them and made fignes, by which both congratulated each other with heartieft greetings, and Quiay Panian and he joyned to in league to pursue their Fortunes together. They now purposed to goe to Chincheo, and there Chincheo. found fine fayle of Porugals, which told them of a great Pleet of foure hundred lunkes, with one hundred thousand men gone to the Iles of Goto, in succour of Sucar of Pontir, who had volun- Goto, tarily subjected himselfe to the King of China, in one hundred thousand Taeis Tribute yearely. We tooke out of those fine ships thirtie fine Souldiers more, and proceeded on our way for Liamooo. In the way we encountred a fmall Paraoo with eight Portugals forely wounded, whereof Antonio Anriquez, and Mem Taborda were, rich men of great efteeme.

These recounted to him that a Guzerate Rouer, Coia Acem, with three lunks and soure Lanteas Newes of Coia (in which were fine hundred men, one hundred and fiftie of them Moores) fet vpon them (ha- deem, uing parted seuenteene dayes agoe from Liampoo, for Malaca, purposing to goe for India, if the 20 Monson had permitted) before the Ile Gumbor, and after some houres fight tooke them; eightie two persons (eighteene of them Portugals) were slaine, and as many others captitled, with one hundred thouland Taeis value in their Junke : one of the Pyrats Junks was fired and burnt to the water. Thefe few in the furie of the entry escaped in the little Boat which hung at flerne; they being busied in the spoyle, and the Sunne tnen set, could not follow, but went into the River with much triumph.

Faria and Quiay Panian who had kindted at La loo, provided themselves there of Powder, Lailoe, Lead, Victuals, and other necessaries for Money, by Jeaue of the Mandarine, (no Countrey in the World being like China for all kind of provisions) and there get two greater lunkes in truck of the other, and two Lantess, and one hundred and fixtie Marinets, so that they were in all five 20 hundred persons, of which ninetie fine were Portugals. They had one hundred & fixty Harquebuffes, forty Braffe Peeces, & fixty Quintals of Powder, nine hundred pots of Powder, foure thousand Darts headed with Iron, Arrowes, and many Fire-workes, with other Weapons. Thus prouided, they fet forth in pursuit of Coia Acem, and by a Fisher-boat learned that he was in the Riner Tinlan, there to turnish and fit the lunke lately taken from the Portugals, to goe with it and two others for Siam (where he was borne) about ten dayes thence. Faria lent Vicente Morofa in the Fisher-boat, with some of his company to informe himselfe more fully, which making a thew of fifting with the reft, he early did, and brought word aboard of the eafineffe of the attempt. In the night they anchored, and went vp the River in the morning, the enemy knowing nothing till they came in fight, and Faria crying out, Ho, my Masters, in the Name of Chrift, 40 to them, to them, Santiago, off went the Ordnance, the small shot succeeded, that none now in the Iunkes durft appeare. His small Veslels (Lorche) comming from the shoare with succour were fo entertayned with great shot that they could not helpe themselues, and by our small Vesfels were fired with the fire-pois; in three of them two hundred persons were flaine, Out of the fourth they leaped into the water, and were most slaine by Panians men.

Coia Acem which before was not knowne, feeing his Moores ready to try the waters courtese to escape those fiery enemies, armed in Buffe, with Places fringed with Gold, cryed out aloud that he might be heard, La !lah ill .llah Muhamed rocolalah : what shall you Muslemans and inst men of the Law of Mahemet, suffer your selucs to be conquered of so feeble a Nation as are these Dogges, which have no more heart then white Hens, and hearded woment to them, to them, the Booke of Flowres bath given promise from our Prophet to you and me, to batheour selves in the bloud of these Cafres with-

One of the Lanteas came and told of their difaduenture, the other Lantea loft, only thirteene men escaping, which the Countrey people carryed Captines to Nonday: fo that two Iunkes and a Lantea with aboue one hundred perfons were loft, and in Munition and other goods, aboue two hundred thoufand Cruzados, the Captayne and Souldiers having nothing left but that on their backes. The China perillous Coaft of China is subiect to these strokes more then other Countries, so that none can sayle 2 thereon one yeare without disafters, except at the fall and change, they betake them to their Ports, which are many and good, without barred entries, except Laman and Sambor, Faria went and anchored before Nouday and fent fome to found, and to take some of the people to enquire of his men, who brought a Barke with eight men and two women, one of whom (having first sworne by the Sea, that it below, and the winds above sould pursue bim if her brake bis Faith, and the beautie of the starres whose eyes beheld all wrong, as the Chinese requested) told him that he taking them to be Sea Rouers and Robbers, had taken them and cast them in Irons. Faria writ to the Mandarin by two of those Chinois, with a Present worth two hundred Duckets to returne his men, which returned the next day with an Answere written that himfelfe should come and demand Justice at his feet, and he would doe as hee faw cause. Hee wrote so againe, offering two thouland Taeis for their Redemption, fignifying that hee was a Perineal Merchant, which came to trade at Liampoo, and payd Customes without any Robbery; and that the King of Portugall his Lord was in true amitie with his Brother the King of China, and in Malaca his subjects vied the Chinois juilly. This calling the King of Portugall the King of Chinas Brother, he tooke fo hainoully, that he caused the China Messengers to be whipped, and their eares cut, and fent them backe with a railing Answere written to Faria, which had so proudly blasphemed, calling his King the Brother of the Sonne of the Sunne, the Lion crowned untbincrea dible power in the Throne of the Vniuerse, under whose feet all Crownes of all that governe the Earth, are placed with all their Seniories, as all Writers affirme in their Histories. For this Herefie he burned his Writing with his Picture, as he would doe to himselfe, charging him presently to set sayle so and be gone. Faria enraged, refolued to affault the Towne, having three hundred men (feuentie of them Porsugals) with the company of Quiay Pansan, for that feat.

Hauing therefore taken foure Barkes, the next morning betimes with them, three Iunkes and a Lorcha or Lantea, he went up the River, and had fixe fathomes water and an halfe anchoring by the wals. And striking layle without falutation of Artillery, we put off our Flagge of contract, after the China custome, to fulfill all complements of peace, fending new offers of love and further fatisfaction for the Prisoners. But the Mandarine full of indignation, hardly vied the Messengers on the wall in fight of the Armada; whereupon, Faria desperate of doing any good that way leaving order with the lunkes continually to shoot at the Enemie where they were thickest, he with his company landed without contradiction, and marched to the Towne. When we were comne within little more then a Calieuer shot of the Ditch without the wall, 69 there islued by two gates one thousand, or twelve hundred; about one hundred of them Horsemen, or Hackneymen rather (for they rode on leane Iades) which began to skirmish in such disordered fort, encountring one with another, and many of them falling to the ground, that they framed to be of fome neighbour Villages, which came more of force then with force or heart to the balineffe. Faria expected them, encouraging his men, and making a figne to the lunkes. The Horsemen distinct themselves, and wheeled about, as if that would have scarred vs.

which feeing, without effect they joyned in one bodie or heape rather; whereat the Cantagone commanded all the Caleguers to shoot off at once, with furth successe, that the former halfers the Horsemen fell to ground. And then wee which till that time had stood still gaue the affanle. crying on the name of Jefus, infomuch that they fled fo confusedly, that they fell one wooh another, and when they came to the Bridge over the Ditch, they thronged themselves fo that none could goe forward. They calling downe their weapons range out at another gate toward the Countrey, none remayning. Antonio Faria gathering his companie together, marched orderly to the Chifanga, the Priton where our men were, brake up the sates and grates, and freed his men. Then did he appoint halfe an houre to his people for spoile, himselfe Prisoners los-

It was now late, yet had Faria care of the wounded, which were fiftie of them, eight Portion 30 gals, and to burie the dead, which were nine only one Portugall; and keeping good watch that night, as foone as it was day, he went to a Village on the other fide of the water, and found not one person in it, the houses still farnished with goods and prouisions, with which he laded the lunkes: and departed for a defart Hand fitteene leagues from Liampoo, called Pullo Hinbor, where was good water and anchorage. The hrit fine dayes, we fayled with good winde, in fight of land to the entrie of the Bay of Nanquins islings, and passed a gulfe of fortie leagues, and had fight of a high Hill called Nangafu, along it which we ranne to the North fine dayes; at the end whereof, Similar put into a small River, the people whereof were white, of good stature, with small eyes like the Chinois but differing in speech and behausour. After three dayes the tempest ceasing, we set sayle East North east seven ayes together in fight of land, and cros- 50 fing another gulfe, there was a straight open to the East, called Silenpaquim, ten leagues in the mouth, within which we sayled fine dayes in fight of many Townes and Cities very faire; and this River or ftraight was frequented with innumerable shipping; insomuch that Faria was afraid to bee discourred, and would needs against Smilaus minde turne some other way. Thus out of the Bay of Nanquin (Smilan : elling them of a moneths workeoffayling by the Riuer Sumbepaden, one hundred and feuentie leagues distant thence to the North) wee sayled five dayes, at the end whereof wee faw a very high Hill called Faniss, and comming neere it, entred a goodly rode, where one thouland ships might ride at anchor. Wee sayled thence thirteene dayes along the coast, and came to the Bay of Buxipalem in 49. degrees, where wee found it somwhat cold and Isw Fishes of strange shapes, some like Thornbacks, aboue source braces or fa-60 thoms compaffe, flat nofed like an Oxe; some like great Lizards, speckled blacke and greene, with three rewes of prickles on the lacke, like briffles, three spannes long, very sharpe, the rell of the body full, but of shorter ; these Fishes will contract themselves like Hedge-hogs, and looke fearefully; they have a sharpe blacke snout with tuskes, after the manner of a Bore, two spanies long. Other deformities and diversities of Fishes we law. Fifteene leagues further, we came to an another fairer Bay called Calnidar, fixe leagues in compale fet round with Hills, diperfified Calnidar, with Woods and Rivers, foure very great.

The fecond day leffufe. we came to a high Maussaine called Basmafan, flored with divers kindes of wilde beafts, which continued neere fiftie leagues and fixe-dayes fayling; and after came to another Hill as wilde as the former called Ganginanon, and all the way forward was mountainous, and fo thicke of trees Gantitanas. that the Sunne could not pierce. Of these Giganbos, wee law a beardlesse youth with fixe or feuen Kine before him, to whom Similar made a figue, and hee flayed till we came to the Bankes fide. and shewing him a piece of greene Taffata (which hee fayd they much esteemed) with a hardle voyce he layd, Quites paran fanfan, words which none vnderstood, Farin commanded to give Giants.

He was cloathed with a Tygers skin, the havre outward, his armes, head and logges bare, with a rude pole in his hand; well shaped, seeming ten palmes or spans long, his hayre hanging on his shoulders. Within a quarter of an houre hee reto turned with a line Deere on his backe, and thitteene persons with him, eight men and fine women, with three Kine tyed in coards dancing at the found of a Drum, giving now and then five dance. ftrokes on it, and other fine with their hands, crying aloude, Cur our himan falens. Antonio de Faris. capfed to flew them five or fixe pieces and many Porcelanes. All of them were cloathed in like manner, only the women had on their wrifts groffe bracelets of Tin, their hayre longer then the men, and full of Flowers, and on their necker a great neck-lace with coloured Shels, as big as Ovster-shels. The men had great poles in their hands, furred halfe way with such Pelts as they wore ; they were strong fet, with thicke lippes, flat moses, great open nostrils, bigge faces. Faris caused to meature them, and none of them were higher then ten spannes and a halfe, one old man nigh eleven, the women not ten : but I suppose the most sauage

Fariagene them three corges of Porcelane, a piece of greene Thatata, and a basket of Pepper; and they fell on the ground, and lifting up their hands with A Corgeis so, their fifts shut, sayd, Unanguabilen oponguapan lapan, lapan, lapan, Inpan, and the Deere, and after many words, in three houres conference returned with like dance as they came.

Wee followed our way fine dayes more up the Riner, about fortie leagues, in which we had fight of that people, and fixteene dayes more without fight of any, at the end of which we came to the Bay of Nanquim, hoping in fine or fixe dayes to effect our delires. Similar Willed Faria not to let his Portugal; be feene. And having fayled fixe dayes East and East North-east, we had fight of a great Citie called Sileupamor, and entred into the Port two hours within night, being Sileuparte.

50 a faire Bay almost two leagues in circuit, where abundance of shipping rode at anchor, seeming about three thouland : which made vs fo afraid, that our againe we went, and croffing the Riuer (which may bee about fixe or feuen leagues ouer) wee ranne alongst a great Champaine the rest of the day with purpose to get some refreshing, having passed thirteene hungry dayes. We Tanamadel. came to an old building called Tanamadel, and got prouision to our mindes. This place, the Chiwork which wee found there, told vs. belonged to an Holpitall two leagnes thence for entertainment of the Pilgrims, which vilited the Kings Sepulcher. Wee continued our voyage feuen dayes more, having spent two moneths and a halfe tince wee came from Liampos, and now Faria could no longer conceale his discontent, that hee had thus followed Similars projectly and recei-

uing of him answer little to the purpose, had stabbed him with his Dagger if others had not in-60 terpoled Similar, the night following as wee rode at anchor neere the land, I warn a shoare, the watch not perceining, which Faria hearing was fo impatient, that going on shoare to feeke him, hee returned frustrate, and found of his fixe and fortie Chinais, two and thirtie fled. Full now of con uffon, it was by counfell resolved to seeke Calempluy, which could not be farre off: and the next night entired a Barke riding at anchor, and tooke fine men steeping therein; of whom hee learned that Calemplay was ten leagues off, and with their helpe found it, eightie three flaves at. ter he had fet out on that enterprise.

This lland was feated in the midst of the River, and feemed to bee a league in Compate. His ther came Fatia with trouble and feare, three houres within night, anchoring about a chamber the from it. In the morning it was agreed, first to goe about it to see what entrances it had and what impediments might befall their defigner. The Iland was all environed with analogue of what impediments in the control was a few and the control was a supplied the west Marbles fire and twentier frameshigh, fo well cut and fer together, that all she will feemed but one piece, the like whereof wee had neuer feene in fada, or elfewhere; from the but tome of the water to the brim, it contayned other fixe and ewentic spannes. In the top ware border of the same worke round ingirting it, like a Friers girdle, of the bignesse of a made to of twelue gallons, on which were fer grates of Latten turned, every fixe fathoms faftened into holes of the same Latten; in each of which was the Idollos a woman, with a roundball inher hands, none knowing what it fignified. Within thefe grates, was a rew of many Monfere of cast Iron, which in manner of a dance hand in hand, compassed the He round. Further inwards from those monstrous Idols, in the same ranke, was another of Arches of rich works pleasant to behold. And all from hence inward, was a groue of dwarfe Orange-trees thicke fet; in the midft whereof were builded three hundred and fixtie Hermitages, dedicated to the Gods of the yeere, whereof those Paynims have many fabulous praises. A quarter of a league higher, on a hill to the East, were seene buildings with seven fronts of houses like Churches, all from the top to the bottome wrought with gold, with high Towers feeming Bell-steeples; 10 and without, two streets with Arches which eacompassed these buildings, of the same works with the fronts; and all from the highest top of the steeple pinacles to the bottom wrought with gold; whereby we judged it fome fumptuous and rich Temple.

After this view taken, Faria resolved (though it were late) to goe on shoare, to see if he could speake with any in those Hermitages; and so (leaving sufficient guard in the Barkes) with fortie Souldiers, twentie Slaues, and foure Chinois; (which knew the place, and had beene fometimes there, and might serue vs for Interpreters) he committed the two Barkes to Father Diego Lobeto, and entred at one of the eight Entrances; walking thorow the Orangetto-groue to an Hermitage, two Caliuer shors from our landing place, with the greatest silence that might bee, and Iefusmade a with the name of left in our heart and seputh. Having yet feene no person, he felt at the doore of the Hermitage with his Halberd, and perceined it locked on the infide : hee bade one of the Chinois knocke, which having done twice he heard an answer within answering, Praised bee the Creator which gilded the beautious Heastons, see about and I will know thy bufineffe. The Chinois Went about and entring the backe coore, opened that where Faria flood, who with his companie going in, found one man feeming aboue one hundred yeeresold, in a long Ruffet Damaske

A good while it was before hee could speake, and then afked what wee were, and what we fought. The Interpreter answered by Farias command, that hee was the Captaine of these strangers of Siam, who bound for the Port of Liampoo in trade of and an Hermit Merchandile was wracked at Sea; hee and these escaping miraculously, and therefore vowing 40 to come to that Holy land on Pilgrimage, to praise God for deliuerance from so great a dan-Absam vowes ger, and was now come to fulfill it; and withall to demand somewhat in almesto relieue him for his returne, protesting after three yeeres to restore it double whatsoeuer hee now tooke. Hiticon (that was his name) answered, I have well beard what thou hast faid, and that damnable designe whereto thy blindnesse (as the Pilot of Hell) hath drawne thee and thine associates to the bostome of the lake of night. For in stead of thankes for so great a henefit, then commess torb: and what I pray thee will the Dinine inflice repay thee at thy last breath ! change thousby suil purpose, and (beleeue me.) God will change thy punishment. Faria prayed him, hee would not bee angry, faying, hee had no other remedie of life : whereat the Hermite lifting his hands and eyes to Heauen, sayd, weeping. Bliffed bee thou Lord, which sufferest on earth men, 10 which take for remedic of life thine offences, and for certaintie of glorie will not serve thee one day. And then turning his eyes to the companie which were rifling the Hangings and Chefts, taking the filuer from amongst the bones of the deceased therein, hee fell twice from his seate with griefe; and pensuely put Faria in minde of his last breath, of restitution, of penance perpetuall to his flesh, and liberall and discreet communicating to the poore, that the leruant of night should have nothing to accuse him in the day of account : praying him also to command his companie, to gather up the bones of the Saints, that they should not lye contemp-Compleathy. tible on the ground. Faria gave him many good words and complements, professing himselfe (which hee whispered neerer) forrie of what had passed, but it hee should not doe it, his companie had threatened to kill him. Hee then demanded of Hitt-

Hee asked if the Kings vied to come thither : no fayd he, The King being some of & autondance the Sunne, can absolue all and none may condemne him. Asked of their Armes, hee fayd, To goe as Lag breto Heasen, there needed not armes to offend, but patience to fuffer. For an houre after midnight, wee law fires in a rew, which our Chinois told vs, were fignes They are difof our discouerie, and therefore aduised vs to haste away. Faria was awakened, and would needs concred a shoare with fixe men, and ranne like a mad-man from one place to another : his companie requested him to haste away, and he answered, for his honour hee would first see the danger, and intreated them to stay one halfe houre, and swearing hereto, away hee goeth, and followes the found of a Bell to an Hermitage, in which were two men in religious habits; the place was richer then the former wee had beene in. They tooke thence an Idoll of Silver from the Altar with a myter of Gold on his head, and a wheele in his hand, and three Candlefticks of filter 30 with long chaynes; and taking the two Hermits with them, returned aboard the Barkes with great halfe. Of one of thele, they learned that Pilan Angiroo had come to the house of the Sepulchers of the Kings, and cryed out to them to awaken out of their fleepe, telling them of their oath to the Goddesse Amida, of Strangers with long beards and Iron bodies, which had robbed the Saints, and would kill them all, whence followed the fires, and fending to give notice to the Cities Corpilem, and Fumbana for ayde, their Religion prohibiting them to handle any thing which might draw bloud. Euen dayes wee fayled thorow the Bay of Nanquim, the force of the current carrying ys more speedily, and came all discontent to a Village called Sujoquerim, and there prouided our selues of victuall and instruction, and entred into a straight called Xalim-Xalingou. gas, in which wee ranne in nine dayes one hundred and fortie leagues, and turning to enter the same Bay of Nanquim, which was there ten or twelve leagues wide, wee sayled with Westerly windes thirteene dayes: and being in the fight of the Mines of Conxinacan in 41. degrees and two thirds, there a Tufan or tempelt from the South, tooke vs with windes and raines feeming more then naturall, and the winde chopped into the North North-weil, the Sea going so high that (except our prouisions and Chests of plate) we threw all into the Sea, cut both our masts ouer-board, and about midnight heard a great cry in the Panura of Anionia de Faria, Faria decre-Mercy Lord God, whereby wee imagined flee was caff away; we feconded the fame cry, but ned, and ook heard no answer. Our Barke also the next day, split on a Rocke, and of fine and twentie Porta- the Barkes 60 galt, cleuen were drowned, besides eighteene Christian boyes, and seuen China Mariners. This weeked

In this, having nothing but our hands to doe it, and they thirtie fixe now stinking, wee spent the most part of the day. Thence were went Northward thorow the Woods three dayes, till weecame at a straight, without fight of any person. In swimming ouer three men and a boy were drowned, being faint, the current strong, and the water somewhat spacious: the men were two brethren Belebior and Gaspar Barbola. and Francisco Barges Cayciro, all of Ponte de Lima, and of good account. Wee which remayned celeuen men and three boyes) passing that obscure nights winds, raines, and cold, imitated by our disconsolate sighs, teares, and feares, saw before day a fire Eastward, and went right towards it, commending our felues to God our only hope. And trauelling along the River, wee came in 10 the euening where fiue men were making Coles, and casting our selues at their feet, desired them to take pitie on vs, and helpe vs to some place where wee might finde reliefe. They gaue vs a little Rice and warme water, and shewed vs the way to a Village where was an Hospitall, to which wee came an houre within night, and found there foure men appointed to that charge, which vsed vs charitably.

The next day they asked what wee were, and whence: and wee told them, strangers of Stam , which came from the Port of Liampos to the fifthing at Nanyum, where by tempetic we loft all but our battered fielh. They asked what wee intended to doe, and wee aniwered, to goe to Nanquim, to get passage to Cantan, or Comhay, where our Countrey-men have tradely licence of the Airao of Paquim, under the shadow of The Sonne of the Sunne, the Lion crowned in 19 the Throne of the World; for whose fake we defired them to let vs flay there till we had recovered strength to travell, and to give vs some clothing to cover vs. They carried vs about the Village, and begged some old clothes and viotuals, and two Tacis in money for our reliefe, and game vs two Tacis of the House; and with words of much comfort to trust in God, they gaue vsa Letter of commendation to the Hospitall of Siley iacau, which was in a great Towne three leagues thence, and had better maintenance. Thither we went, and shewed our Letter from the Ouerfeers of Bustendoo, in the faid Village of Catiboran to the Officers of this house, which fate then at Table in confultation, and the Scribe reading the Letter, they accommodated ys in a neat roome with fourteene Beds, a Table, and many Stooles, and Meate; and next morning examined vs, wee answering as before. They gaue charge to a Physician to cure vs, and wrote p our names in a Booke, to which we subscribed. In eighteene dayes wee all recoured, and went thence to a place called Sufoangance, fine leagues off, and fate downe wearie at a Well, where one came to vs with a handful of Wheat eares, which he wetted in the water, and adjured vs holding the same in our hands, by these substances of bread and water, which the high Creator had made for the sustenance of man to tell the truth what we were, &c. which we did, answering as before; and he gaue leaue to his neighbours to relieue vs. They layde vs in a Church Porch, and gaue vs victuals, and the next day we begged from doore to doore foure Taeis, which well helped our wants.

Thence we went two leagues to Xiangules, with intent to goe to Nanguim, one hundred and fortie leagues distant. Comming thither late, three boyes which were feeding Cattell, ranne 40 into the Towne with an out-crie of Theenes; the people running out, and so welcomming vs. that one of the boyes died with the blowes. They kept vs two dayes in a Cifferne of water up to the waste, full of Horf-leaches, without victuals, and our hands bound; whence by a man of Suzanganee, wee were freed, reporting better things of vs. Thence wee went to Finemilan (in the way finding good reliefe at a Gentlemans house) still anoyding Cities and Townes of note, for feare of stricter inflice, two moneths holding on our way, sometime in, sometimes out, from Village to Village, one of which was Chautir, where a woman was then buried which had made the Idoll her Heire, and we were inuited as poore men to eate at her Graue, and had fixe Taeis given vs to pray for her foule. At Tayper an Officer charged vs to be Rogues, begging against the Law, and therefore layed vs in Prison, where we continued fixe and twentie dayes, 50 in which Rodrigues Brano, one of our companie died. Thence wee were fent to Nanquin, and there continued fixe weekes in a miserable Prison (in which was said to be soure thousand Prifoners) where two of our companie and a boy died of the whipping, and the rest hardly escaped; being besides sentenced also to have our thumbs cut off as theeyes.

After this bloudy whipping, they brought vs to a house within the Prison where wee were cured, being as it were an Hospitali for the ficke, where in eleuen dayes wee were pretily well recourred, but lamenting the cutting off our thumbes according to the rigour of the Sentence which had beene given, one morning came in two honourable persons which were Procurers of the poore. These questioned vs of our case, and hearing the same, made a Petition to the Chaem on our behalfe, and the eight Conchacis, which areas it were Criminall Judges; and being there delayed, they made another Petition to another Table, called Xinfan nicor pitan, where are foure 62 and twentie Talagrepos affiftants, austere Religious men , as Capuchines amongst vs, which retiew the cases of the poore, which prohibited the Chaem to proceed, and granted an appeale to the Aitan of Aitans in Pegnins to moderate the Sentence, which the two Procurers brought vs.

Wee and thirtie others were embarked , chained with long chaines, the two Procurers procuring vs some clothing, and Rice, and commending vs to Chifu, the Officer or Captaine appointed to carrie vs, with a Certificate in our behalfe to procure vs almes. The second day we went from Pocasser, and came to another Citie called Xinligan, very great. well built, walled with Tyles, ditched about; with two Castles at the end, having their Towres, Bul-warkes, and Draw-bridges : in the midft of each Castle was a Towre of fine 40 Lofts with many workes painted, in which the Chinois faid, were fifteene thousand Picos of filuer, of the Rents gathered in that Archipelago, which this Kings Grand-father there lavd vp in memory of his Sonne Lenguinan, which fignifieth the toy of all, holden for a Saint, because he dyed a Religious man, and lyes there buried in the Temple of Quiay Varatel, the God of all the Fishes in the Sea, of whom they have large Legends. Wee proceeded on our way the River growing leffe, but the Countrey more peopled, fearfly a stones cast free of some House, eyther of a Pagede, or Labourer. And two leagues higher on a Hill compassed with Iron grates were two Brasse Statues standing on their feete, one of a

The Male was named from statura Quiay Xingatalor, the woman Apancapatur. The Chinois told vs that the man was Fire-blower and their dein Hell to torment fuch as in this life gaue them no Almes : the woman was the Hell-Porter, usions. which suffered the Almes-givers to five by a River of cold water, called Ochilenday, and hid them their from the Deuils hurting them. One of our company laughed at this Tale, whereat a Bonzo was fo offended, that hee fet Chifu in rage with vs, who bound vs hand and foot, and gaue vs one hundred stripes a-piece. Twelue Priests were incensing these Monfters when wee were there with Silver-cenfours full of fweet Odours, Saying, as wee ferne 10 thee, helpe thou vs: another company of Priests answering: So I promise thee as a good Lord. And thus went they on Procession about the Hill an houres space founding certayne Bels cau-

Hence wee passed up the River eleven dayes, all peopled with Cities, Townes, Villages, Frequencie of Castles, in many places, scarsty a Calieuer shot distant one from another: and all the Land in China people, compasse of our fight had store of great Houses, and Temples with gilded Steeples, which amazed vs with the fight. Thus wee came to the Citie Sampitay, where wee flayed fine dayes Sampitag. by reason of the sicknesse of Chifus Wite. There by his leave ween thorow the streets, a begging, the people wondering at vs, and giving vs largely. One woman amongst others which bufily questioned with vs, shewed vs a Crosse branded on her left arme, asking if we knew 20 that figne, and wee denoutly answering, yes. shee lifted up her hands to Heauen, and fayd, Our Father which art in Heauen, hallowed be thy Name, in Portugues, and could speake no more, See Mass. but proceeded in China speech, and procured leave to lodge vs at her House those five dayes: tel- these Perincal ling vs she was named Inez de Leiria, and was the Daughter of Thomas Perez, which came Rebels had Embassadour to China, and by reason of a Rebellious Portugall Captayne, hee was taken as a possessed Ta-

These two Cities occasion mee to recite what I cau. haue heard often heard read in the thirteenth Chapter of the first Chronicle of the four-score which they have of the Kings of China; that fixe hundred thirtie nine yeares after the Floud, there was a Land, called Guanticocau, in which lived a pettie Prince, called Turban, which had by his Concubine Nascaa, three Sonnes, refufing to marry, and entring into Religion of the idoll China Chroni-Gizom (fill much efteemed in Iapon, China, Canchin-china, Camboia, Siam, of which I have eles and Le feene many Temples) appointing his cldest Sonne by the faid Nancaa his heire. His Mother then lining was against this, and marryed herfelie with Silan a Priest, and flue Traban, where-vpon Nancas and her children fled downe the Riuer fenentie leagues, and fortified a place which 60 the called Pilannera, that is, the refuge of the poore. Five y ares after Silan prepared a Fleet of thirtie Barkes to destroy her and all iter faction, thinking that her Sons comming of age might dispossesses having Intelligence, having of men, women, and children, not about one disposed him. IN the fift Booke of the chiefe places of that Empire, is written, that King Crifnogol (which reigned as we may accord our computation with theirs) about the yeare of our Lord 28. builded the wall, the people contributing ten thousand Pikes of filter (which are fifteene Millions of Cruzados) and two hundred and fiftie thousand men (thirtie thousand Officers and the rest Labourers) which was continued feuen and twentie yeares, and then finished, being, faith that Booke the length of feuentie Iaons (every Iaon is foure leagues and an halfe) which make three hundred and fifteene leagnes. The Priests and Iles are faid to contribue as many, and the King and Officers another third, fo that feuen hundred and fittie thousand men laboured therein. This 10 wall I have feeneand measured, being generally fixe fathomes high , and fortie spannes thicke; and foure fathomes runneth a kind of Rampire, twice as thicke as the wall strengthened with a Bituminous substance on the out-side like Potters worke; and in stead of Bulwarkes it hath houfes of two lofts with beames of blacke wood, called Cambefy, that is, Iron-wood, feeming stronger then if they were of stone-worke. This wall or Chanfacan (so they call it, that is, firong refifrance) runneth with an equal course till it encounters with Hils, which are all Chanfred and made to that it is stronger then the wall it selfe, the wall being only in the spaces twixt Hill and Hill, the Hils themselves making vo the rest.

In all that way are but fine entrances, caused by the Tartarian Rivers, which with imperious force cut the Countrey about fine hundred leagues entring the Sea of China, and Canchin-china; An And one of them more forcible then the others enters the Kingdome of Sornan (commonly called Siam) by the Barre of Cuy. At every of those five entrances the King of China hath one Fort and the Tartar another : in every of the China Forts there are feven thousand men fix thous fand foot, and one thousand Horse, in continual pay; most of them Strangers. Mogors, Champaas, Pancrus, Coracones, and Gizares of Persia, the Chinois being but meane Souldiers. In all the frace of this wall are three hundred and twentie Regiments, each of fine hundred men (in all one hundred & fixty thousand) besides Ministers, Commanders, and their retinue which the Chinois faid, made in all two hundred thousand men, allowed by the King only sustenance, all or most of them being condemned to that service, and therefore receiving no pay. And in Peauim is a great and admirable Priton-house, in which are Prisoners continually for the Fabricke so of this wall of three hundred thousand men and vpwards, most of them from eighteene to fine and fortie yeares old: whereof some are men of good qualitie, which for their ill behausours and enormities are hither fentenced, expecting to be removed hence to the fervice of the wall: whence they may have returne according to the Statutes thereof made, and appropried by the Chaens, which therin dispense the Regall power with meere and mixt Empire. There are twelse of them which may pay to the King a Million of Gold for Rent.

About thefe Houses one league neere the River, wee faw on a Hill encompassed with three rewes of Iron Grates, thirtie Houles in fine rankes , very long , with great Towres of Bels of Metall. and Cast-Iron, with gilded Pillars and carned workes, and artificiall Frontifpieces of stone. Here we went on Land by Chifin leave, because hee had so vowed to that Page. de, which is called Bigaspotim, that is, the God of one hundred and ten thou fand Gods, Corchoo, Fun. In those thirtie Houses stood a great quantitie of Idols of gilded wood, and as many more of Tinne, Copper, Latten, Iron, Porcelane, so many that I dare not mention the number. Wee had not gone thence fixe or seuen

Hence we came to a great Citie, called Innquilinan, very rich, with many Junkes and Barkes. where we flaved fine dayes, Chifu there celebrating his Wines Exequies, and gining vs food and rayment for her foule, freeing vs from the Oare, and giving vs leave to goe on Lan' when we would, without our . Many Chinas affirmed, that there were as many lived in that Empire on the water, as in Cities and Townes:

fo many in both, that were it not for the good government of their Trades, they would eate one an other. As in Duckes, one trades in buying and hatching the Egges, and felling the young: another in breeding them for fale when they are great, others in the Feathers, others in the heads, and in wares, others in the Egges, &c. none interloping the others Trade vnder paine of thirtie stripes. In Hogs, one trades in selling them together aliue, others kill them, and sell them by weight, others in Bacon, others in Pigges, others in Soufe. So in fish, hee which fels fresh at may not fell falt, some fell them alive, &c. and so in Fruits and other things. And none may change his Trade without license. They have also along this River of Batampina, in which wee from and flore went from Nanquin to Pequin, (the diffrance of one hundred and eightie leagues) fuch a number of Ingenios for Sugar, and Preffes for Wines, and Oylesimade of divers forts of Pulfe and Fruits. that there are streets of them on both sides of the River, of two or three leagues in length. In other parts are many huge store-houses of infinite prouisions of all forts of slesh, in which are salted and smoked Beese, tame and wilde Hogs, Ducks, Geese, Cranes, Bustards, Emes, Deere, Bustals, Ants, Horse, Tygres, Dogs, and all flesh which the Earth brings forth, which amuzed and amezed vs exceedingly, it feeming impossible that there should bee people in the World to eate the same. Wee saw also great store of Barkes senced at Poupe and Prow, with Reedes of Canes full to of Ducks to fell, in divers lofts over one another, which goe out at foure strokes of a Drumme, fixe or feuen thousand together to feed, where they fet them, at the found of the Drumme returning againe, with like exceeding crie. In the like fort they let them out to lay on the graffe. They that hatch them have long houses with twentie Furnaces full of dung, with some hundreds of Egges concred therein, and hatched by that heate, the mouth stopped till they thinke fit time, then putting in a Capon halfe plucked and wounded on the breft, they that it agains, and after two dayes, the Capon hath drawne them all forth, and they put them into holes prouided for them. Wee faw Pennes full of little Dogsfor meat, Dogges to fell, Barkes full of Pigges, others of Lizards, Frogs, Snakes, Snailes, all being meate with them. In these (being of small price) they may fell many kinds. Yea, the dung of men is there fold, and not the worse Merchandize, that stinke yeelding sweet wealth to some, who goe tabouring up and downe the streets to signific what they would buy. Wee came to a Faire of China where on the water 2000. Barkes, befides small Boats which Moueable Ci. goe vp and downe and small Barkes were assembled in one place, and made a Citie with streets in the water aboue a league long, and a third part of a league broad. Thele Faires are principally 10 on the Holy day of some Pagode, whose Temple is by the waters side. In this Water-citie, by the order of the Aitao of Bitampina (who is chiefe Prefident of the thirtie two Admirals of the thirtie two Kingdomes of this Monarchie) are fixtie Captaynes appointed; thirtie for the gouernment and ordering of the same in matters of Justice, and other thirtie to guard the Merchants in comming fafely secured from Theenes. Ouer all these is a Chaem, which hath Mere and mixt Rule in Causes Civill and Criminall without Appeale. These Faires last from the new Moon to the ful, in which it is a goodly thing to fee two thousand streets or ranks strait, enclosed with Barkes, most of them flourishing with Streamers and Banners, and railes painted, whereon are fold all things that can be defired, in others Mechanike Trades, & in the midit Boats going vp and downe with people to trade without any confusion or tumult. As soone as it is night, the 60 ftreets are enclosed with Cables. In every ffreet is ten Lanthornes lighted on the Masts (which yeelds a fairer luftre then the former fight by day) to fee who goeth by and what is his businesse. In each of these streets is a Watch-bell, and when that of the Chaems sounds, all the rest answer with as strange an Object to the Eare as the former to the Eve. In every of these Vowes are

Oratories built on Barkes with gilded Tents, where the Idoll and Priests receive the Devotions and Offerings of the people. Amongst other remarkable things we saw one rew, or street of aboue one hundred Barkes laden with Idols of gilded wood of divers fort, which are fold to be offered in the Pagedes; and besides, feet, legs, armes, and heads, which sicke folkes offered for Denotion, Other Barkes there are with Tents of Silke, in which Comedies and pattimes are represented. In others are fold Letters of Exchange, the Prietts giving them Bils to receive in Heaven what their folly lay downe there, with great increase (Our Scringwers would fearly grow rich bere with that Trade) others are laden with skelt of dead men, they dreaming that alithe Almes of those men, whose skuls these 10 have beene shall belong to their foules, and that the Porter of Heaven feeing them come with thus many attending, will open to him as an honourable perion Others have Cages of Birds, and call to men to fet free those Captines, which are the creatures of God, with their Almes which they which doe, let loofe the Bird and bid him tell God what he hath done in his Service : others do the like with living fibes, offering their freedome to the charitable Redeemers (which themselves will not give them; wuch like the fale of Indulgences) (aying, they are Innocents which never finned, which freed by Almes are let goe in the River with commendations of this their Redecmers Service to the Creator. Other Barkes carry Fiders and Muficians to offer their Service : Others (the Priefts) fell Harnes of factificad Beafts, with promite of I know not what Featis in Heaven: others had Tents of forrow, Tombes and all Funerall appurtenances with Women-mount

20 ners, to be let out for Burials: others laden with Books of all forts of Historie, and their also have Scriveners and Proctors; others have such as offer their fartice to fight in defence of their honours others have Mid-wines, others Nurses; others carry grave men and women to comfort those that haue loft Husbands, Wives, Children, and the like disconsolate persons others Boyes and Girles for fernice; others offer Counfellors in Cales of Law or Learning; others Phylicians : and to conclude, nothing is to bee fought on the Land which is not here to be found in this Water-citie.

Once, the cause of the greatnesse of this Kingdome of China, is this easie concourse of all parts by water and Rivers: fome of which in narrow places have bridges of stone like ours, and fome made of one only stone laid over, sometimes of eightie, ninetie, or one hundred spannes, long, and fifteene or twentie broad. All the High-wayes have large Cauties made of good frone, Bridges, and

Iong, and prefere or twengte troops and mental property of the Founders names and prayies in gold high-wayes as with Pullers and Arches fairely wrought inferibed with the Founders names and prayies in gold simirable. den Letters. In many places they have Wels to refresh the Trauellers. And in more barren and leffe inhabited places are fingle women which give free entertainment to fuch as have no monie, Filiby charity. which abuse and abomination, they call a worke of Mercie, and is prouided by the deceased for good of their foules, with Rents and mayntenance. Others have also bequeathed in the like places, houses with Lights to see the way, and fires for Trauellers, water and Lodging. I have in one and twentie yeares unfortunate travels feene a great part of Afis , and the riches of Esrope, but if my testimonie be worthy credit, all together is not comparable to China alone: such are the endowments of nature in a wholfome Ayre, Soyle, Rimers, and Seas , with their Policie, Iustice , Riches and State, that they obicure all the luftres of other paris. Yet such is their 40 bestiall and Deutlish Idolatry, and filthy Sadomitry publikly permitted, committed, taught by their Priefts as a vertue, that I cannot but griege as their vngratitude.

Departing from this admirable Citie, we failed up the River, till on the ninth of October, on opinion Tuefday we came to the great Citie of Pequim, whither wee were fent by Appeale. Wee went Pequim. three and three as Prisoners, and were put in a Prison called Gefania serca, where for an entrance they gaue each of vs thirtie stripes. Chifu which brought vs presented to the Aitao our Proceffe figned with twelve feales from Manquis. The twelve Conchalis which are Criminall Indges, sent one of their company with two Notaries, and fixe or seuen Officers to the Prison

And the next day wee were collared and manicled, being much afraid that our Calemples; bu-vige, finesse would come to light. After seven dayes the Fangeres of the Hospitall of that Prison came in, to whom we with pitifuli lamentation gaue the Certificate which wee brought from Nanquin. By their meanes the Conchalis petitioned the Chaem to renoke the Sentence of cutting off our humbs, feeing there was no testimonic of theft by vs committed, but only our pouer- Their Cause contayneth in circuit, as the Chinois (and as I after heard read in a little Booke written of the greatnesse thereof, called Aquesendoo, which I brought with mee into this Kingdome) thirtie Booke written leagues, ten in length, and five in bredth, all which space is environed with two Walls, and innumerable Towers and Bulwarkes. Without is a larger space, which they say, was anciently peopled, which now hath but Hamlets, and scattered Houses, and Garden-houses (of which fixteene hundred are of principall note, in which are the fixteene hundred Proctors for the fixteene hundred Cities and Townes of note, of the two and thirtie Kingdomes of this Monarchie, which refide there three yeeres for the faid Townes. Without this circuit or wall, there 20 are in the space of three leagues broad, and seuen long, soure and twentie thousand Sepulchres of Mandarmes, with their little gilded Chappels, encompassed with grates of Iron and Latten, with rich Arches at their entries. Neere to them are Gardens, Groues, Tankes, Fountaines: the walls lined within with fine Porcelane, adorned also with Lions and Pinacles of divers pain-Hospitals 500, tings. There are in that space fine hundred Lodgings, called Houses of the Sonne of the Sunne, for entertainment of Souldiers maimed in the Kings warres (besides many others for the old and ficke) every of which receive their monethly allowance, and have in them as they faid two hundred men, in all one hundred thousand. Wee saw another street very long, where lived foure and twentie thousand Rowers for the Kings shipping: and another about a league long, where lived fourteene thousand Tauernets for provision for the Court; and another where were 40 infinite Curtesans freed from tribute (which those of the Citie pay) for seruice of the Court, many running from their husbands, and here protected by the Tutan of the Court, which is fupreme in cases of the Kings house. In that compasse also line the Landerers of the Citie, which were as they told vs. aboue one hundred thousand, there being many Tankes or Ponds compassed with stone and Rivers. There are therein, as that Booke fayth, thirteene hundred Noble houses of Religious men and women, which professe the foure chiefe Sects of the two and thirtie which are in that Kingdome: some of which, they fay, have aboue one thousand persons within them besides seruitors. There are other houses store with great walls in which are Gardens, and Groues with game for hunting; and are as it were the Halls of Companies where many refort to fee Playes, and the great men 50 make their feasts there with incredible costs. Some of these houses cost aboue a million, maintayned by Companies of rich Merchants, which are faid to gaine a much thereby. And when any will make a feelt, he goeth to the Xipatom of the house, who sheweth him a Booke wherein is contayned the order of feafts and feruices (which Booke I have feene and heard read) of all forts, and of what prices they are, whether Sacred to their Idols, or Secular, (of which our Authour hath a large Chapter, here omitted.)

Now for Pegum, it hath three hundred and fixtie Gates, each having a Casslet with two Towers, and a Draw-bridge, a Notarie, and foure Warders, to take notice of those which goe in and out, and an Idoll proper according to the dayes of the yeere, every of which is felficuall in one of them. The Chinois reported that there are therein three thouland eight hundred Temples or Pagodes, in which are continually facrificed birds and wilde heafts, which they fay, are more 69 acceptable then tame: those especially very faire which are of the Menigrepos, and Conquisis, and Talagrepos, the Priefts of the foure chiefe Sects, of Xaca, Amida, Gizon, and Canon. The streets are long and large, the houses faire, of one or two lofes, encompassed with Iron and Lat-

ten grates, and at the fireets end are triumphall arches, closed at night; in the chiefe are Watchbells. Eury street hath a Captaine and foure Quarter-masters or Corporals, which every ten dayes acquaint the Lonchacys or Chaems with occurrents. That Booke reports of one hundred and twentie water-paffages, fixe fathome deepe of water, and twelue wide, with many stone 120, Ruserets. bridges, which are faid to be eighteene hundred rich and faire, with arches, pillars, and chaines: 1800. Foure Buildings incredibly admirable in Pequin, and diners of their superstitions: their Hospitals and provisions for the Poore. The Kings revenues and Court ; their Sects.

Vt nothing feemed to me more admirable, then the Prison, called Xmanguibalen, that is, Prisonof the the Prison of the exiled, whose compasse contayneth about two leagues square, as well exiled, to the in length as breadth, walled high and ditched deepe, with draw-bridges hanged on Tertarian wall, Iron cast pillars very great. These prisoners are sent from other prisons, being loose, saue that they weare at their necke, a board of a spanne long and foure fingers broad, inscribed with their name, and sentence of exile, fuch a time. The Prison hath three Townes. as it were, with fireets and Officers, belides the Chaems lodgings, fit to entertaine a King. There are also all necessaries fold. Their are groues, and tankes of water for washing, Hospitals alfo and twelve Monasteries, with rich houses, wanting nothing that a rich and noble Citie should have : the Prisoners having their Wives and Children with them, the King allowing a competent house for them.

Another building about as great as that, was the Muxiparan, or treasure of the Dead, compass Another adfed with a strong wall and ditch, with many stone Towers and painted pinacles : the wall on mirable Fathe top in itead of battlements, was compassed with Iron grates, close to which were set great brike. flore of Idols of different figures, of Men, Serpents, Hories, Oxen, Elephants, Fishes, Snakes, 50 monstrous formes of Wormes, and creatures neuer seene; all of Brasse and cast Iron, and some of Tinne, and Copper; a fight more admirable to the view, then can be imagined. Paffing by a bridge ouer the ditch, wee came to a great Hill, " at the first entrie all enuironed with thicke grates of fo after, Latten, floored with stones white and blacke, so shining that a man might see himselfe therein, as in a glasse. In the midst of that Hillstood a marble pillar of fixe and thirtie spannes high, all feeming to bee but one from; on the top whereof frood an Idoll of filter with a womans face. with both hands griping a Serpent sported with blacke and white. And further, before the gate (which flood betwix: two high towers, borne vpon foure and twentie bigge flone pillars) flood two figures of men with Iron maces or battle Axes, in their hands, as guarding the paffage, one hundred and fortie ipannes high, with dreadfull countenances, called Xixipitan Xalican, that is,

After wee were entred, we came into a of Helllarge ftreet fet on both fides with rich Arches, with infinite bells of Latten hanging thereon, by latten chaynes, by the mooning of the ayre yeelding a great found. a league long, and within those arches were two rankes of houses, like as it were great Churches groot Huses with gilked pinacles, and painted inventions, in number as the Chinosis affirmed three thousand having therof the fourth part, and the Talagreps the reft for expences of the Fabrike; the Kings fourth port was ipent on the exiled Priloners of Xmamquibalen,

Wee walked thorow the fireet, and in the midit for a great hill round encompafied, with two rewes of Latten grates; in the midft whereof was a brazen Serpent, aboue thirtie fathoms in her circles, well proportioned, notwithstanding that incredible massinesse. This monstrous Snoke which the Chinois call the Serpent denourer of the House of smoote, had set in his head, a Ball or Bullet of cast Iron of two and firite spannes circumference. About twentie paces surther, was recurred the figure of a Man in braffe, of Giantly limbes and proportion, who fuffained with both is been more a hands another bullet, which (eying the Serpent with an angry vilage) made as though he threw bared to figure.

Bared another touries, which teying the output and gilded Idols on their knees, with hands lifted from a color. If at him. Round about that figure, were many final gilded Idols on their knees, with hands lifted vp to him as in admiration: and in foure wyres of Iron enuironing, were one hundred and fixtie Fying octuar his conquest, two filter Candlestickes, each having fixe, feuen, and ten nolles. This their Bonzos preach, and that those soules shall be hapespens, and briketieser, pie, whose bones are thither brought, so that no day passeth in which two thousand bones are not brought thither. And they which are too farre distant to have their bones brought, fend a Tooth or two, which with their almes will doe as much good as the whole : fo that I suppose there are teeth enough in those houses to lade many ships. A third building wee faw without the walls, sumptuous and rich, named Nacaprass, which 30 figuifieth, The Queene of Heauen; which they meane not of the Virgin Marie, but thinke that as temporall Kings are married, to alto is the Heauenly, and that the Children which hee get, teth of Nacapiran, are the Starres; and when the starres seeme to shoute or fall in the ayre, that then one of those Children dye, all his brethern weeping so many teares, that the Clouds are then one of those Children dye, all his brethern weeping so many teares, that the Clouds are therewith filled, and water the earth, and make it fruitfull, as being the almes which God gives for the foule of the deceafed. Wee faw heere one hundred and fortie Monasteries, of their wickedly Religious men and women; in every of which, were fayd to bee foure hundred perfors. which come to fixe and fiftie thousand; besides servitours, which have not yet vowed the profellion, as those within, who goe in facred habite of red with greene stoles, their beards and heads do shauen, with beades about their neckes, for their prayers, but aske no almes, having suftenance of their owne proper. In this Edifice of Nacapiran, the Tartarian King lodged, Anno 1544 when hee layd siege to this Citie, as shall after bee delinered; wherein for a discellish and bloudie Sacri-Numes ficred five, he commanded 30000, persons to be slaine: fifteen thousand of which were Women, or girles to diners Gods rather, the Daughters of the chiefe men of the Kingdome, and Religious, professed of the Sects of Quiay Figrau, Gol of the Motes of the Sunne, and of Quiay Ninandel, God of the Battelli, and of Sailay Figras, Go to the review of the Sailay Figras on Sailay Figras, Go to the Datest, and of Compounts, and of four others, Daisay Martin, Quay Colompon, Quiay Multick, and Multic Lacasas, whose flue Seets, are the chiefe of the Sailay with thirty. Within this building wee fix divers memorable things. One was a Wall against the other, almost a league compasse, borne vp with stone arches, and in stead of battlements, arounded with Latten grates, and at every fixe 10 fathoms, Iron workes on pillers of Braile fastened one to another, whereon by chaynes hung innumerable bells, making a continuall itrange noyfe, with the motion of the ayre,

At the great Gate of this second wall, in terrible shapes, stood the two Porters of Hell (as they call them) Bacharom and Quaifan, with Iron Maces in their hands, terrible to looke on Paffing under an Iron chayne, fattened to the brefts of these Diuels, wee came into a faire street long and wide, compassed with painted arches, on the top whereof were two rankes of Ilolsall that length, in which were aboue fine thousand Images, week new not of what matter, being all gilded, with Myters on their heads of divers inventions. At the end of this fireet, was a great square Hill set with blacke and white shining stones, the whole square compassed with source rewes of Giants of mettall, each of fifteene spannes, with Halberds in their hands, and gilded 60 beards. At the end of all stood Quiay Huiaon, God of the Raine, set vp against a batton or border, seuentie spannes long, and his head so high, that it reached to the buttlements of the tower, (which were about twelve fathoms) by his mouth, eyes, notirils, and brefts, casting our water, which the people below gathered as a great relique. This water came from the top of the tower by secret pipes. Wee passed under his legges, which stood as a great portall, and came to a large house like a Church, with three Iles on marble pillars, and on the walls on both fides, many Idols great and small of divers figures, all gilded, fet on their bases in good order. At the end of this house on a round of fifteene steps, stood an Altar made in fashion of a Throne, and thereon Golden status the Image of Nacapiran, like a goodly woman, with her hayre loofe, and her hands lifted to hea- of Nacapiran nen, all of gold to burnished, that it dazeled the eyes. About that tribunali in the foure first steps, food twelve Kings of China crowned in filuer. And beneath, were three rewes of gilded Idols on their knees, with their hands lifted up, many filuer Candle-flicks hanging about them. Going thence, wee came to another street of arches like the former; and from thence by two oto there of rich buildings, to a great hill, in which were eightie two Bells of metiall very great, hanging by chaynes from Iron beames fustained with Iron Columnes. Thence wee went to a frong Gate 'twixt foure towers, in which flood a Chifie with thirtie Halberdiers, and two Notaries, which tooke the names of all paffengers, to whom wee gaue thirtie Reis

These bones say they, every New Moone, feast one with another, whereupon the vulgar at those times, offer to them infinite store of Fowles of all fores, Rice, Kine. In this great c reuit wee told three hundred and fortie Bells of mettall and cast Iron, in seuenteene places, by twentie in a place, which all found on those New-moone fealts abouelayd, Neere to that tower, in a rich Chappell built on feuen and thirtie columnes of stone, stood the Image of Amida made of filuer, with the hayres Lady Amidailof gold, on a Throne of foureteene steps, all wrought with gold, the hands elevated to Heaven: mage, 40 beneath her shoulders, hung (like lines of beades) many little Idols, as big as the middle finger: and the fecret parts were coursed with two great Oyffer-pearles, garnished with gold : They being demanded the meaning of this mysterie, sayd, that after the generall Floud in which all mankinde was drowned, God lent Amida from the Heauen of the Moone, (being great Chambert, incio Nuberlaine to Nacapiran his wife) to restore the destroyed world; who setting heere fecte in Ca- capiran, as ith lemplur before mentioned, being lately freed of the waters, thee turned it into gold, and there to tune: a tile flanding on her feet with her face in heaven, a great quantitie of Creatures issued from downe perhaps d uiher arme; downe her right hand Males, and Females downe the left; having no other place in Raine box coher bodie whence to bring them foorth, as other women of the world, whom for finne God uenant, Grage. hath subjected to filthinesse of corruption, to shew how filthy sinne is. Whereat the Moone in condoling her 3.16. death couered her felfe with forrow, which are those shadowes wee fee from the earth; which fay they, shall remaine so many yeers as the produced Creatures (33333) & then the Moone shall put off her maske of forrow, and the night shall bee after as cleere as the day. Such and other like mad stuffe did they tell, which might make one wonder, and more to weepe, that the Deuill should gull them with such manifest lyes, being otherwise so understanding a people.

From this Hill we went to another Temple of Nuns, sumptuous and rich, in which they told A Nunnerie. vs was the Mother of this King, Nhay Camifama, but would not let vs enter being frangers. 60 Thence by a street of Arches, wee went to a hauen called Hicharioo Topilen, where was itore of strange shipping of divers Kingdomes, which come continually to that Temple for a plenarie Iubilee, which the King with many priviledges hath granted them, and dyet on free cost. Their remove to Quanty, quarrels, miseries; Tartarian huge Armie, and losse at the siege of Pequim, reported. Quanty taken, and Nixianco: MENDEZ his exploit. Their entertaynment by the Tartar King, and going to Cauchinchina with his Embassadours, with many Tartarian obseruations.

Fter we had two moneths and a halfe gone up and downe in the Citie of Pequim, on Saturday the thirteenth of Ianuary, 1544, they carried vs to Quanfy to faitill our Quanfy Sentence, where we were brought before the Chaem, who made vs of his Guard of eightie Halbarders allowed him by the King, which made vs thankfull to God, being a place of little labour and more maintenance and liberty. But after a moneth, the Devill fowed ilrife betwixt two of our companie, which in reasoning about the Families of the Madureyras, relland the Fonfecas, whether were more eminent, grew to heate, thence to brauing words, and after to blowes and wounds, not onely of those two, but by part takings of fine of the reft. The Chaem and Anchaeys fentenced vs to thirtie blowes a man, which made vs more bloudy then our wounds. Then they carried vs to a prison, where we lay in Irons fixe and forty dayes. After which we were brought to the Barre, and received other thirty ftripes, and removed to ano- Paritie a ther priton, where we stayed two moneths, then removed to certaine Iron-works five moneths, peace-breaker. much pinched in backe and belly, and being difeafed with a contagious ficknesse, they fent vs forth to begge, which wee did foure moneths. In this miferie wee fware to each other to line Christianly and louingly, and that each moneth one should bee chiefe, whom all the rest should obey, whereby wer after lived in peace.

weekely to begge, two to fetch water, and make ready what we got, two to get wood. I and Gaft ar de Meyrelez went one morning to the Wood, and Meyrelez being Musicall played on his Viall, and fung; a thing pleasing to that people, which spend much time in pastime and banquets, and profitable to vs in procuring almes. As wee went, wee met with a Funerall pompe Mulickfor the with Muficke in the midft: one of which Muficians knowing Meyrelez, prayed him to play and comfort of the fing as loud as he could, that this dead man wee now carrie to buriall may heare thee, to comfort him in leaving his wife and children, whereto he was much affected. Hee modeftly refufing, the other angerly answered, and others intreated, and almost forced him to goe with them to the burning Buriall after their cultome. I thus left alone, went and got my bundle of wood on my backe. In the way homeward I met in the way an old man, clothed in blacke Damaske furred with white Lambe, who having thewed mee a filter Croffe, told me, that he was a poore 3c Portugall, Vafco Calus, which fenen and twentie yeeres fince was captized with Tome Pirez, Valle Ca'ao. whom Lope Source had fent Emballadour to China, which had a milerable fuccesse by reason of a Section of a Portugall Captaine. Hee brought me to his house, and told me the storie of his and his fellowes note $.3. aduentures, and I ours to him: and at his request I fetched the rest of our companie to his poore house. Hee brought vs to another roome, where his wife was, with her two little formes, and two small daughters. Shee entertayned vs louingly, and shewed vs her Closet with an Altar, and a Crosse thereon, secretly kept; shee also and her children said a Portugall Prayer, with the Pater nofter, Creed, and Aue Maria, to our great ioy.

Eight moneths being spent in this our miserie and beggerie, on Wednelday the thirteenth Rewes of the of July, a great tumult and crie arose amongst the people, by reason or newes of the Tartarian Tarter as Ar-60 King his comming to Pequin, with a greater power then euer any King had in the World; that the strength his Army 180000 and which was Hortz men which had a transfer of Pequin. there were in his Armie 1800000. men, 600000, of which were Horle-men, which had comme by Land from Lar game, and Famfer, and Mecuy, with 8000. This newes much terrified vs, and the next morning the Enemie appeared with Colours quartered greene and white in feuen battels, neere to a Pagode called Petitan Na. meioo, a little from the walls. From that Pagode they came with found of Instruments of warre in one große Squadron like a halfe Moone, and encircled the Citie: and being within Ca. liver shot, they made a shout as if Heauen and Earth would have gone together, and scaling it with two thousand Ladders which they brought with them, affaulted it in all places they could very refolutily, and at last brake into the gates by certaine deuices of great Iron Presses, and very recourtery, and as an arrangement, putting the Citie to the fword, facke, and fire; killing, 10 as was thought, 60000. persons, and after stay of seven dayes there, went for Редили, where

A Countill of Warre was hereupon called, one of them being the man which had vs in custodie; who returning with two Captains of his acquaintance to to supper, in their discourse of that misfortune they calt eyes upon vs there prisoners, and questioned of what Nation we were, and whether our Kings vsed to warre, and whether any or vs knew any Stratagem to get that Castle, promiting our freedome if we could effect it. To what we answered accordingly, and George Mendez undertooke the deligne against our likings fearing his difabilitie, and our turther danger. One of these Captaines told the Mitagner (Namicor) hereof, who lent to Tileymay the Captaine which had charge of vs, to bring vs to him. He gate vs a grave welcome (being now in counfell with the fenenty Coronels, two houres after midnight, and first made vs to eate, having taken off part of our Irons; and then made large promifes to George Mendez if he could doe as he had faid; to which he answered, that hee could anfwere nothing till he saw it, and then he would tell him the way to take it. Wee were remo- 30 ued to a Tent adioyning, and there guarded, full of feare left this undertaking would coft our lines with a People to cruell. The next day George Mendez and two others of our companie were carried with a band of Horte-men about the Caffle to view it, and then brought to the Mitaguer, to whom he professeth great facilitie of effecting his purpose: which so contented him, that he sware by the Rice he eate to present vs to the King, and to fulfill his promises, prefently taking off the remainder of our Irons. Hee made vs to eate neere him, and did vs other honour. After which, George Mendez as Camp-matter appointed flore of Chifts , Boxes, and matterials to fill up the ditch, and three hundred large scaling Ladders able to hold each three Souldiers, against the next morning to be made ready two hours before day. All this was happily effected, the ditch filled, and Mendez wi h two others of vs fir & scaled the wall, and fet up the 49 Tartar: Colours; fine thouland Tartars gallantly seconding, to that with a hote skirmish the befieged were all flaine, and the Cattle taken; the gates opened to the Muaquer, who with great ceremonies tooke thereof possession. He caused George Menden and the rest of vs to eate neere him, razed the Caltle, and taking Mendez with him on horse-backe returned to his Tent, giuing him 1000. Taeis, and each of vs 100. the cause of much emulation in some of our companie, who by his meanes had obtayned libertie. Thence the Mitaguer marched by places deiolate, to a good Towne by the Rivers fide, called Lautimes, the people whereof were fled; the Towne these barbarians fired, as they did other places where they came. The next day they burned Bunxay, a fowne field of aboue fixe leagues circuit, most Wheat; and came to the Hill Pommitay, and the next day to the River Palemzitau, within two leagues of the Kings Campe. 50 Guian Paran sonne of the King of Persia, at the Castle of Lamir, by the Kings appointment flayed for him; to whom Mitaquer on his knees deliuered his Scimitar, having first kissed the ground fine times. Hee welcomed him with honourable termes, and after that, slepping backe two or three paces with a new ceremonie, and with a voyce high and feuere (as he which reprefented the Kings person) laid, He, whose rich border of his garment my mouth continually kiffeth, whose great power ruleth oner others by Land, and on the Iles of the Sea, sends to tell thee by mee his Slaue, that thy honour able comming is as welcome to his presence as the sweet Summer morning, wherein the bathing of cold water most delights the flesh; and that without delay thou hastenest to heare bis voice, mounted on this Horserichly surnished out of his Treasurie with mee, that thou mayest be equal in bonour with the principall of his Court, and they which fee thee thus bonoured may know that thou are 60

Thus with great state and pompe they went to the King: and fifteene dayes after he brought vs to the Tents of the King well horied, then in the sumptuous House of Nacapiran, When be came to the Trenches, hee descended from his Litter (wee from our Horses) and asked leave of

An houre after he returned with foure faire Boyes gallantly arayed in greene and white, with their golden Xorcas on Campe and their feet, to whom all the people rose vp, and drawing their Scimitars laid them on the ground. Their foure Boyes with Mitaguer suided vs on thorow a Gallerie flanding on fixe and twentie Pillars of Braffe, from which wee entred a great Hall of timber, in which stood Mogores, Persians, Berdios, Calaminhans, and Bramas : thence wee came to another Hall, called Tigibipan, where were great ftore of armed men in fine files quite thorow the Hall, their Swords garnished with Gold. There Mitaguer performed fome ceremonies, I wearing on the Maces which the foure Boyes carried, kneeling and killing the ground three times. Then we passed another gate, and came to a fquare great Hall like the Clotter of a Monasterie, in which stood foure files of brazen Images like Sauages with Maces and Crownes, feu. n and twentie spannes high, and fixe 30 broad, which the Tartars faid were the three hundred and fixty Gods which made the dayes of the yeere; which the Tartar King had taken out of a Temple, called Angicamor, in the Citie Xipatom, in a Chappell of the Sepulchres of the Kings of China, to carrie home in triumph. In Xipatom. this Hill was a Garden of firange herbs and flowers, and therein a Tent vpon twelve turned posts of Camphire wood, in which was a Throne all garnished with much curiofitie of Gold Curious and Silver workes, representing very lively the Sunne, Moone, Starres, Cloudes. In the midft of the Throne stood a filuer great Statue, called Abicannilancor, that is, God of the bealth of Kings. (raken alfo from Angicamoy) about which flood foure and thirt. e Idolsas big as children about fixe yeeres old, in two rankes let on their knees and hands lifted up as in veneration. At the entrie of the Tent were foure Boyes gorgeoutly arayed which went about it with Cenfers, and

That Tent was guarded by fixtie Halbarders. standing a pretie distance from it round about. Beyond that Hill wee entred another place. where were foure rich roomes, in which were many great persons.

Thence we followed Mitaquer and the Boyes vnto a great Hall like a Church , where flood fixe Porters with Maces, which with new ceremonie let vs in. Here was the King of Tartars, The Tartar accompanied with his Grandes, among which were the Kings of Pafua, Mecuy, Capimper, Rasa His State. Benam, and the Anchefacotay, and other Kings to the number of fourteene, all in rich attire, placed at the foot of the Throne, two or three paces diffant; and a little further off flood two and thirtie faire women, playing on divers Inffruments. The King face on the Throne, encom-

This was the fifter of Mitaquer, who by her meanes enjoyed that grace and respect in the Armie. The King was His person. about forcie yeeres old, tall, not flefty, well fet; his beard flort with Mostachos like the Turks, his eyes somewhat small, his countenance seuere; clothed in a shining reddish vesture set with Pearles; on his feet certaine Shippers greene wrought with Gold and Pearles; and on his head a kind of Sallet with a border of Diamonds and Rubies. Before we came at him by ten or twelue paces, we made our courtelle, three times kiffing the ground, with other ceremonies which wee were taught. The King commanded the Musike to cease, and bid Mitaquer aske this Nation of the end of the world, it they have a King, and how their Land is called, and how farre it is from

50 China. One of vs answered for the rest, that our Land was called Portugall, our King was great and mightie, and from thence to Pequin was about three yeeres Voyage; whereat he much maruelled, as not thinking the World to great; and tirrking on his thigh faid aloud with eyes to Heauen, O (reator of all things, which of vs poore Ps/mires on the Earth may be able to comprehend the maruels of the greatnesse? And tigning with his hand he made vs come never to the tieps of the Throne where the fourteene Kings were placed, and demanded vs againe, how faire? and when we faid, three yeeres; he asked, why we camerather by Seathen by Land? wee answered, that the discritic of States and Kings in the way hindred. He asked, What doe you feeke with 10 farre trauels and great troubles? wee gane as good reason as we could; whereat he sha-

Fortie and three d. yes after we came to the Campe Royall (in which space were many fights betwirt the befiegers and befieged, two affaults by icaling with the Tartars loffe) the Tartarian called a Councell, where were affembled feuen and twentie Kings, and many great men and Captaines, which agreed that feeing Winter was now comming, and the waters of both Rivers had rifen and filled the Trenches, and many were ficke (foure or fine thousand dying daily) that it washelf to ray fe the fiege. The King therefore embarked the Foot-men with the munitions fired the Tents, and went away with 300000. Horse by land, and 20000. Hee lodged the first night of his departure at a River called Quaytragum; the next day he came to Guijampee, which hee found wholly for laken; thence to Liamper, and after feuenteene dayes (eight leagues a day) he came to Guanxitms, and forced it, committing therein cruell flaughters, to prouide his Armie of necessaries by the spoyle thereof. The next day hee creating magnets, to produce me anime or necessaries by the propresence. The next cay nee came to Carrido, which he medded not with being great and frong, having therein 70000 men, of which 10000 were Mogeres, Cauchums, and Champaus, better Souldiers then the China, Thence hee passed to the walls of Singrachiron, and the next day to Xipator, and then sent away 20 most of his Souldiers, spending seuen dayes in the pay, and execution of Iustice on Prisoners. Thence discontent, hee went to Langame by water, (with onely one hundred and twentie Laulees, in which were some ten or twelue thousand men) where sixe dayes after hee arrived in the night without any pompe. There he flayed fixe and twentie dayes, till all his companie were come both of horse and foot.

The Ambassadours told vs. that of his Confraternities, there arose to him of annuall rents about 200000. These Priests once a yeare may defile Monkes and themselves in fornication within that Circuit; without, as oft as they will, without sinne, the Nuos, ch. ste Chifangues permitting egreffe. There are many women also enclosed, who by their Libangus or name Prioreffes leaue, permit themselues to those Priests.

The second day after, wee came to a great Citie on the River side called Quanginan, where the Onantinan. Ambaffadours flayed three dayes for prouision, and by reason of a Feast at the entrance of Ta'apicor of Lechune, who is there as a Pope : who had priviledged these inhabitants to be all Privit., A Genille Pope authorifed to Sacrifice and give Bills of exchange for money to bee repayed in Heaven. He gave the Ambassadour grace to legitimate in his Countrey for money, and to give tycles of Honour: which hee recompenced, giving to the Priests all that he could make, and two thousand Taeis the King had given vs. for which he gave vs fifteene in the hundred. Foure dayes wee paffed Lechune. downe the River to Lechune, the mother Citie of that falle Religion of Gentilitie, as Rome is with vs. wherein is a fumptuous Temple, in which are feuen and twentie Tartar Emperours buried in rich Chappels lyned with Silver, having abundance of filver Idols. On the North-fide a little Idols from the Temple, was a notable strong great wall, within which were built two hundred and eightie Monafteries, of men and women; in which were fayd to bee two and fortie thoufand re- Monafteries ligious professed, besides feruitours, In those Houses are many Brazen pillars with Idols of their

The Ambassadour visited her, and kissed her foot as a Saint. Departing thence downe the River five dayes, wee came to a great Citie called Rendacalem. Rendacalem. in the confines of Tartaria. And thence forwards began the Segniorie of Xinaley grau, thorow Xinaley eraus. which wee trauelled foure dayes, and then came to a Towne called Voulem, where the Ambai-

Of the fourth River the Ambaffadours could give vs no instructions, but some thought it to bee Ganges. In housen dayes more, wee came to a place called Caleppute, where they threw itones at vs, and would not fuffer

Villa Lobos.

So when all things were in a readinesse, for to depart on their Voyage (the which was done with great breuitie) they ordayned for Generall of all that fleete, one Villa Lobor, commanding him to goe by the Nuona Espania, The Villa Lobes, arrived at the Hands of Malacas, and at those of Terrenate, and at other Hands joyning vnto them, the which Hands were layd to gage by the aforefayd Emperour vnto the Crowne of Poringall. In these Ilands they had great warres by meanes of the Portugals, and feeing themselves with little helpe and small resistance, forto 30 goe forwards with their conquest, they left it off, and went to the most part of them with the aforelayd Portugals, vnto the India of Portugal, from whence afterwards, they fent themas prisoners vnto the fayd King of Portugall, as offenders, that had entred his Ilands withouthis licence : who did not onely leaue to doe them any harme, but did intreate them very well, and tent them vnto their owne Countrey of Spaine, and gaue them all things necessarie for their journey, and that in abundance.

Then certaine yeeres after, Don Philip King of Spaine, being very willing that the discourring should goe forwards, which the Emperour his father had so earnestly procured, sene and commanded Don Luys de Velasco, who was his Vice-soy of the Nuona Espania, that hee would ordayne an armie, and people for to returne and discouer the sayd Ilands, and to send in the sayd 40 fleete for Gouernour, of all that should bee discourred. Miguel Lopez de Legassi, who did accompilsh all that his Maiestie had commanded, and made the discourse thereof as followeth;

When the Spaniards came vnto them, they were without Lord or head, or any other to whom they should shew dutie, but hee which had most powerand people, did most command : so that this (and that there were so many of equall power) was the occasion that civil watres continued, without any respect of nature, kindred, or any other dutie, but like vnto brute Beasts, killing, spoyling, and captiumg one another, the which was a great helpe vnto the Spaniard, for to fubicetx hat Country with 10 great ease voto the King, and called them the llands Philippinas, in respect of his name. They did vie amongst them, to make Captines and Slaves, such as they did 50 take in value full warres, and for trifling matters, the which God did remedie, by the going thither of the Spaniards: for you should have a man with fortie or fiftie friends in his companie, or feruants, that vpon a fodaine, would goe and fet vpon a small Village of poore people and vnprouided, and take and binde them all, and carrie them away for Slaves, without any occasion or reason, and make them to serue them all the dayes of their life, or else sell them to other llands. And if it so chanced, that one did lend vnto another, a basket or two of Rice (the which might bee worth a Ryall of plate) with condition, to returne it agains within ten dayes: if the debtor did not pay it the same day, the next day following hee should pay it double, and afterward to double it cury day, so long as he did keepe it, which in conclusion, would grow to bee so great, that to pay the fame, hee is forced to yeeld himselfe for Captius and Slaue.

But vnto all such as were captized in this order, or in such like, the King of Spaine hath commanded to give libertie, yet this just commandement is not in every point fulfilled and accomplished, because such as should execute the same, have interest therein. All these llands were Geniles and Idolaters, but now there is among it them many thousands Baptiled, anto whom the King hath shewed great mercie, in sending vnto them the remedie for their soules in so good time: for if the Spaniards had stayed any more yeares, they had beene all Moores at this day. for that there were come vnto the Iland of Burnes, lome of that Sect that did teach them, and lacked little, for to worship that false Prophet Mahomet, whose false, percerse and corrupt memory, was with the Golpel of Christ early rooted out.

In all thefe Ilands they did worship the Sunne and Moone, and other second causes, figures of men and women, which are called in their Language Maganitos, at whole Feasts (which they doe make very sumptuous, with great Ceremonies and Superstition) they doe call Magaduras. But amone it them all, they have in most veneration an Idoll, whom they called Batala, the to which reuerence they had for a Tradition, yet can they not fay what should be the occasion that he should deserve more then any of the rest, to be had in so great estimation. In certaine llands not farre off, called the Illocos, they did worship the Deuill, and made vnto him many Sacrifices, The Deuil was in recompence of a great quantitie of Gold he had given vnto them, but now by the goodnesse of God, and the great diligence put and done by the Fathers of the Order of Saint Auftin (who were the first that passed into those parts, and lived worthily) and also by the Friers of Saint Francis, which went thither ten yeares after, all these Ilands or the most part of them are baptized. and vnder the Enfigne of Ielus Christ: and the rest which doe remayne and are not, is more for lacke of Ministers and Preachers, then for any obstinacie of their parts. There is now some thither certayne Fathers of the Order called Iesuits, who will be a helpe vnto them with their 20 accustomed zeale and labour. And now goeth thither many other Religious men, very well learned and Apottolike, of the Order of Saint Dominicke, who will doe their endeuour to convert them vnto Christ, as it behooveth Christians to doe.

They of these Ilands were accustomed to celerate their Feasts aforesaid, and to make Sacrifices vnto their Idols, by the order of certayne women which were Witches, whom they doe Witches. cal in their Language Holgoi, that were had in as great estimation among it them, as be the Priests among it Christians. These did talke ordinarily with the Deuill, and many times in publike, and doe Deuillish Witch-crafts both in wordes and deedes : into whom it is to bee beleeved that that the Deuill did enter, for that straight-wayes they did answere vnto all things that were demanded of them, although for the most part they would tell a Lye, or else fuch words that 30 might be given divers interpretations of, and of divers vnderstandings. They did also vie to cast Lots . they were great Agorifmers, or observers of times : in so much that if they beginne any Journey, and at the beginning they meete with a Cayman or Lizard, or any other fauage Worme, they know it to be a figne of euill fortune, whereupon they would straight-wayes leave off their Journey, although it did import them very much, and returne vnto their Houses, saying, that the Heauen will not that they should goe forwarde on that Journey : but all these lyes and fallenesse haue beene taught them, and they perswaded to by the Deuili, are ouerthrowne and taken away by the Law of the Gospel (as aforesaid) and haue now amongst them many Monafteries full of Religious men, of the Order of Saint Austine, Saint Francis, and of Iefuits. According vnto the common opinion, at this day there is converted and baptized more then foure

40 hundred thousand soules, which is a great number : yet in respect of the quantitie that are not as vet conuerted, there are but a few. It is left vndone (as aforelaid) for want of Ministers, for that, although his Majestie doth ordinarily fend thither, without any respect of the great charge in doing the same, yet by reason that there are so many Iland, and every day they doe discover more and more, and being so farre off, they cannot come vnto them all, as necessitie requireth. Such as are baptized doe receive the faith with great firmenesse, and are good Christians, and would be better, if that they were holpen with good ensamples : as those which have beene Spaniards haved there folong time are bound to doe: that the lacke thereof doth cause some of the Inhabitants nat so much to abhorre them, that they would not see them once painted upon a wall. For proofe whereof (and for to mooue fuch as have power and authoritie to put remedie in the fame, I will declare vnto you here a strange case, the which royally did passe of a truth in one of these Ilands, 50 and is very well known e among it them: that is, there chanced to dye an Hander, a principall man among ft them : a few dayes after that he was baptized, beeing very contrite for his finnes, the which he had done against God before he was baptized, and after hee dyed. So after by the Spanish report

Dinine permission of God he appeared vnto many of that lland whom hee did perswade forth- of a Vision. with to receive the Baptisme, with reasons of great efficacie, and declared vnto them (as one that had experienced the fame) the reward of that good deed which without all doubt should be given vnto them, if they would receive the same, and live after conformable, and according unto the Commandements of Christ, for the which he told them, and faid, that forth-with is foone as he was dead, he was carried by the Angels into glory, there whereas all things were of delight, pleature, and content, and did communicate onely in the fight of God, and that there 60 was none that entred therein, neither could enter, except he were baptized, according vnto the preaching of the Spaniards, of whom and of others that were like vnto them, there was an infinite number. Therefore, if 10 be that they would goe and enjoy of thole benefits and delights, it is necessary that first they should be baptized, and afterwards to observe and keepe the Com-mandements that be preached vnto them by the Fathers, that are amongst the Castillas, and therewith he vanished away, and they remayned treating amongst themselves, concerning that which they had heard, and was the occasion that some of them forth-with received the Baninto Heauer tilme, and that others did delay it, faying, that because there were Spaniard Souldiers in glorie, they would not goe thither, because they would not be in their company. All this hurt is done by one peruerfe or impious man, and with one euill ensample, the which amongst many good, as you have in those parts: but especiall amongst them in particular, it ought to be reprehended and punished feuerely with rigour.

These Ilands at the first discouery of them, had the same to be Mal Sanos, or vnwholesome. but fince experience hath shewed and proued it to the contrary : It is a Countrey maruellous fertill. and veeldeth very much Rice, Wheate, Goates, Hennes, Deere, Buffes, Kine, and great flore of Hogges, whose flesh is so saucurie as the Mutton they have in Spaine: there be also many Cate that yeeld Ciuet, great flore of fruits which be very good and fauourie: great abundance of Ho ney, and Fish, and all fold at so small a price, that almost it is fold for nothing. Also there is great flore of Cinamom, but no Oyle of Oliues, but that which is carried thither out of the Numer Espania: they have much Oyle of Assensals, and of Flaxe-seed, the which they doe spendordinarily in that Countrey, so that the Oyle of Olives is not missed with them.

There is great store of Cloues, Sassron, Pepper, Nutmegs, and many other Drugges: great fore of Cotton and Silke of all colours, the which is brought vnto them by Merchants of China. every years a great quantitie, from whence commeth more then twentie ships laden with pieces to of Silkes of all colours, and with Earthen Veffell, Powder, Salt-peter, Iron, Steele, and much Quick-filuer, Braffe, Copper, Wheate, Flowre, Walnuts, Bisket, Dates, Linnen Cloth, Counting Chefts very gallantly wrought, Calls of Net-worke, Buratos, Espumillas, Basons and Ewres, made of Tinne, Parchment Lace, Silke Fringe, and allo of Gold, the which is fpunne and twifled after a fashion neuer seene in all Christendome, and many other things of great curiositie. and all this aforesaid is fold very good cheape. Likewise such things as the Ilands doe yeeld, are fold very good cheape, for you shall have foure Roues of Wine, which commeth of the Palmetree for foure Rials of Plate (the which for lacke of that made of Grapes is very good) twelve Haneges of Rice for eight Rials of Plate, three Hens for one Riall, a whole Hogge for eighteene Rials, a whole Buffe for foure Rials, a Deere for two Rials, and yet it must bee both great and in good, foure Roues of Sugar for fixe Rials, and the like.

A Gentleman of one of them was flaine by an Indian, rashly leaping on shoare. These Indians have Iron Launces, with a head or tongue a handfull and halfe long. They have also shields, Bowes and Arrowes. In making peace each man takes two or three drops of bloud of his arme or breft and mixe both in some Vessell together, which is drunke with Wine and Water. Many Paraos came to the Spaniards with a white flag in the Prow, in token of peace, and the Admiral erected the like in her Poope to fignifie their leave to enter. Thele Indians are clothed but baretoot. The Spaniards demanded prouision, which the other promised, but gaue only to the Captayne a fucking Pigge and an Egge. These people are very timorous, perfidious, and therefore sulpicious. The Ilands beare Hogges, Goats, Hennes, Rice, Millet, Potatoes, Pome-citrons. to Frifoles, Cocos, Plantans, and many forts of Fruits. They weare Bracelets, and Earings, and Gold Chaines, and whitherfoeuer the Fleet went, was shew of Gold in the Land, whereof Gold they diese but for necessary vies : the Land is their Money bagge. The Fleer departed hence, and two dayes after came to the Port of the Ile Tandoia, where a Tandoia fmall River enters; vp which they went in Boats, and came to a Towne called Camungo, There Canarase they were well entertayned, and had victualls fet them : which whiles they were eating an Indian Trake fome Spanish words, and asked for Anionie Baptista Villalobos, and Captaine Cabeca de Vaca: for which the Lord of the place was angrie with him, and hee appeared no more. The next day the Spaniards returning found them armed, threatning them if they came on shoare. They minding not to deale cruelly. Martin de Govie was lent to discouer some convenient har-

Thirlier went the Fleet, and the Inhabitants fled. Onely Camainan the fonne of Malatague a blind man, chiefe of that place, came to them, whom they detayned thinking thereby to get fome prouision; but in vaine. He fent forth Souldiers which brought him five and fortie Hoes, leaving in lieu form what for exchange, and dismissing Camatuan, who had taught the Captaine the names of the neighbouring Iles and of their Gouernours. Hee brought them to Mefagua two and thirtie miles off, Mafagua, and then was fent away apparelled and joyfull. The Iland Masagua hath beene frequent, but then had but twentie Inhabitants, which would not fee the Spaniards. They went to another Iland where the people were fled with their goods. Then went they to Butwan which is fibiect 30 to the He Vindena or the Hands Corrientes. The winde draue them to Bobol, where they ancho- Bobol

The Spaniards ient out another Boat better fitted, which tooke eight, the rest were flaine or fled, having fought valiantly. In the lunke they found white sheets painted, Silke. Almayzarez, Callicos, Iron, Tin, Braffe, and some Gold. The Iunke was of Borneo, and so were these Moores. All was restored (their intent being to get friends , and the Burneois fatisfied.

The Captaine fent the Saint Iohn to discouer the Coast of Butuan, and learne where the Cinamon was gathered, and to find some good Port in he place to build. The Burneois told the Wicked poli-40 Captaine the cause of the Indians flight, that about two yeeres before some Portugals bearing themselves for Spanuards, had comme thicher from the Molucas, and having made peace with pellence them, set on them and slue aboue a thousand Indians, the cause of that depopulation. This the which since Portugals did to make the Spaniards odious, that if they came thither, they might not be admit - hath infected ted. The Captaine fent a well furnished ship to fearch the Coast, which came to a place where others the Borneo Gouernour faid he had friends, and leaping on shoare hee was slaine of the Indians. The Saint John returned from Buibuan, which faid, they had feene the King, and two Iunkes of Moores in the River at anker, and that the lland was great and rich, and exchanged with them fine Gold for Testons, one for fix in equall weight. They bought Wax of the Moores but had Moores to be Earth inclosed in the Cakes; they also incensed the Indians against the Castilians, which would nage, 50 haue made purchase of them, but were forbidden by the King. They faid, they had there seene Wax, Cinamon, Gold, and other precious things.

On Easter Euen the other ship returned to their great ioy, which had thought her lost, having flaid twentie dayes longer then her limited time. They had failed about the Hand Igla the space Igla. of fix hundred miles : and in their returne came to Subo a well peopled Hand, and plentifull of Subo. all things. The Captaine determined to goe thither to buy prouision, or else to force them. For Magelane had beene there; and the King, and most of the Inhabitants were baptiled, and acknowledged the Catholike King; Magelane alfodying in their detence, and thirtie other Soul- Section 1.1.2 diers in Matan. They also had broken league and flaine some of Magelane Souldiers. On Fri- c. 2. day April twentie feuen, the Fleet arrived at the Port of Subo, and one came from King Tupas

60 to them, faying, that Hee with ten chiefe men would come to them. The Captaine expected them a whole day and the next, in which space the Handers hid their goods in the Woods. The third day the Captaine fent his brother Andrew and the Camp-mafter; to admonish the King in the Malayan tongue, to receive them, as Vaffals of the Spanib King. Which not succeeding, hee refolued to vie force. The Indians out of other Hands had allembled together to the number of two thousand, which prouoked our men, but at the report of the Ordnance ran away, and the Spaniards wan the Towne. Many fignes of Gold and Gemmes appeared in the Iland. And being fituate to neere to the richell Regions, the Governour hopeth accesse thereby to the increase and

The which being knowne vnto Limaton the Rouer, who faw, that with the people hee had. he was not able to make renflance against so great a number as they were, and the eminene danger that was therein, hee called together his Companies, and went from thence vnto a Port of the Sea, that was a few leagues from that place : and did it fo quickly and in fuch fecret, that before the people that dwell therein, could make any defence (for that they were not accustomed to any fuch affaults, but lived in great quietnelle) they were Lords of the Port, and of all fuch thips as were there; into the which they imbarked themselnes straight-wayes, weighed Anchor to and departed to the Sea, whereas they thought to be in more fecuritie then on the Land (as it was true.) Then he feeing himfelfe Lord of all those Seas, beganne to rob and spoyle all thips that hee could take, as well strangers as of the naturall people: by which meanes in a small time he was prouided of Mariners, and other things which before hee lacked, requifite for that new Occupation. He facked, robbed and spoyled all the Townes that were your the Coast, and did very much harme. So hee finding himselfe very strong with fortie ships well armed, of those he had out of the Port, and other that hee had taken at the Sea, with much people fuch as were without flame, their hands imbrued with Robberies and killing of men, he imagined with himfelfe to attempt greater matters, and did put it in execution : he affaulted great Townes, and did a thousand cruelties. So he following this trade and exercise, he chanced to meete with another Vintequian a Rouer as himselfe, called Vintoguian, like wife naturally borne in China, who was in a Port void by this Rouerof any care or mistrust, whereas Limaton finding opportunitie, with greater courage did highe

Souldiers therein, he did ouercome them, and tooke fine and fiftie of their ships, fo that Vintoquian elcaped with fine ships. Then Limaton feeing himselfe with a fleet of minetie fine ships well armed, and with many fout people in them, knowing that if they were taken, they should be all executed to death, feeting all feare apart, gaue themselves to attempt new inventions of euill, not onely in robbing of great Cities, but also in destroying of them. For the which, commandement was given straight-wayes vnto the Vice-roy of that Prouince (whereas he vied to execute his euill) that with great expedition he might be taken, who 20 in few dayes did fet forth to Sea, one hundred and thirtie great ships well appointed, with forty thouland men in them, and one made Generall ouer them all, a Gentleman called Omoneon, for One hundred

with the ships of the other : that alchough they were threefcore ships great and small, and good to goe feeke and follow this Rouer with expresse commandement to apprehend or kill him. Of and thirtie

all this prouision, Limabon had aduertifement by some secret friends, who seeing that his Enemies were many, and he not able to countervaile them, neither in shippes nor men, determined forty thousand not to abide their comming, but to retyre and depart from that Coattio in flying he came vnto

an Iland in fecret, called Tonznacaotican, which was fortie leagues from the firme Land, and is in Omnion the right way of Nauigation to the Hands Philippinas. From this Iland they did goe forth with fome of their ships robbing and spoyling all such as they met with Merchandize, and other things that they carried from one Iland to another, and 40 from the Iland vnto the firme, and comming from thence among st them all, they caused to take two ships of China which came from Manilla, and were bound to their owne Countrey. And hauing them in their power, they fearched them under hatches, and found that they had rich things of Gold, and Spanish Rials, which they had in trucke of their Merchandize, the which they carried to the Hands. They informed themselues in all points of the State, and fertilitie of that Countrey, but in particular of the Spaniards, and how many there were of them in the Citie of Manilla, who were not at that prefent aboue feuentie persons, for that the rest were separated in the discourring and populing of other Hands newly found, and understanding that these few did line without any suspition of Enemies, and had neuer a Fort nor Bulwarke, and the Ordnance which they had (although it was very good) yet was it not in order to defend themnor offend their Enemies , hee determined to goe thither with all his fleete and people,

50 for to destroy and kill them , and to make himselfe Lord of the said Iland of Manilla, and other adjacent there nigh the same. So with this determination hee departed from those Hands whereas hee was retyred, and went to Sea, and fayling towards the Hands Philippinas, they pissed in fight of the Ilands of the Illocos , which had a Towne called Fernandina, 1llocos. which was new founded by the Captayne lobn de Salzedo, who at that instant was in the same for Lieutenant to the Governour : Foure leagues from the same they met with a small Galley, which the faid Iohn de Salzedo had fent for victor Is. He cast about towards her, and with great eale did take her, and did burne and kill all that was in her, and pardoned one of them. This being done, hee did profecute his Voyage according vnto his determination, and paffed along ft, but not in fuch fecret but that he was discouered by the Dwellers of the Towne of Fernandina, Fernandina, 60 who gave notice thereof vnto the Lieutenant of the Governour aforesaid, as a wonder to see so many thips together, and a thing neuer feene before at those Hands. Likewise it caused admiration vnto him, and made him to thinke and to imagine with great care what it might be, he faw of Subo lent the Admirall ship with his brother Andrew de Vrdanera, to certifie the L. At this present there be three Monasteries of Religi. ous men in that lland, the one of the Order of Saint Austine, and were the first that by the Commandement of his Majestie did enter into this Ilands, preaching the Law of the Gofpell. which was great profit viito their foules, yet great travell viito them, & coft many of them their lives in doing it the other Monalterie is of barefoot Friersof the Order of S. Francis of the Prouince of S. loseph, who have bin great Examples, with great profit visto them of those Paris, The third are of the Order of S. Dominicke, or Preachers, who have done their dutie in all things fo well as the other. These three Orders were alone in those Hands for certayne yeares, till now of 20 late time have gone thither lefuits, which have bin a great ayde and helpe vnto their Religion.

When thele Spaniards were come unto their Hands, they had ftraight-wayes notice of the mightie Kingdome of China, as well by the relation of them of the llands (who told vnto them the maruels thereof) as allo within a few dayes after, they did fee and understand, by ships that came into those Ports with Merchants, that brought Merchandize and other things of great curiosit ie from that Kingdome, and did particularly declare the mightinesse and riches thereos, This being knowne vnto the Religious people of Saint Anitim, who at that time were alone in those llands : but in especiall vnto the Provinciall, Frier Martin de Herrada, seeing the great capacitie or towardnesse which the Chinois had more then those of the Ilands in all things, but in especial: in their gallantnesse, discretion and wit: hee straight-wayes had a great desire to goe thither with his fellow to preach the Gospell vnto those people, of so good a capacitie to receiue the lame: who with a pretended purpose to put it in vre and effect, he began with great care and studie to learne that Language, the which he learned in few dayes: and did make thereof a D. Ctionarie. Then alterwards they did give great entertaynment and Prefents vnto the Merchants that came from China for to procure them to carrie them thither, and many other things, the which did shew their holy zeale : yea, they did offer themselues to bee slaves vnto the Merchants, thinking by that meanes to enter in to preach: but yet none of these diligences did take effect, till fuch time as the Divine Majestie did discover a better way, as shall bee declared vnto you in this Chapter following.

This Limabon came vpon them bus was borne. With intent to doe them harme as you shall understand. This Rouer was borne in the Citie of Trucheo, in the Prouince of Cuytan, which the Portugals doe call Catim. He was of meane Parentage, and brought up in his youth in libertie and vice, he was by nature Warlike and euill inclined. He would learne no Occupation, but was ginen to rob in the high-wayes, and became so expert that many came unto him and followed that Trade. Hee made himselfe Captaineouer them which were more then two thouland, and were foltrong that they were feared in all 63 that Province where as they were. This being knowne vnto the King and to his Councell, they did straight way command the Vice-roy of the Province whereas the Rouer was, that with all the hafte possible he should gather together all the Garrisons of his Frontiers, to apprehend and take him, and if it were possible to carry him aline vnto the Citie of Taybin, if not his as that was, could not goe to the place which they have in with, for any goodnesse towards the dwelters therein, who were voice of all care, and a small number of people, as aforesaid. Whereworth the determined with himslife with to great speed as it was possible, to so your cost-ther such Spannards as were there, which were to the number of fittie foure, and to depart a product to get the fore-hand of them, to advertise them of Man, Ma, and to aide and helpe them to put their Artillerie in order, and all other things necessaries for their defence.

This Lumbon was well prounded of prouision, and all other things necisiarie, and having the wind faire, hee was alwayes in the fore-front, and came in the sight of Manilla vpon Saint Andrewes Eue, in the yeere 1574, whereas hee came to an anchor that night with all his

For all the contradiction of the winde this fame night the foure hundred Chinosi did put the michigan strain a lague of the Citie, vpon Saint Andrews day at eight of the clocke in the morning, whereas they let their Boats and went on land, and in great halfe began to march torwards in battel aray duinded in two parts, with two hundred Harquebuffes afore, and immedially after them other two hundred Placement and by reason that they were many, and the Countrey very planns, they were flraight waites discovered by some of the Citie, who entred in with a great noile, crying, Arme, Arme, arme, the Enemisteens. The which advice did little profit, for that there was none that would belieue them: but releved that it was some falle alarme done by the people of the Countrey for to mocke them. But in conclusion, the Enemies were come to the Citie that two and the contradictions of the Citie that way which the Enemies came. And before that the Spaniard to and Soulders that were within the Towne could be fully periwaded the rumour to be true, the Enemies bad fer fire vopon his hoofe, and luch him and all that were within.

There he determined to remayne, and to make himfelfe Lord our all that Countrey, the which he did with Intel trauell, and built himfelfe a Fort one league within the River, whereas he remayned certaine dayes, receiving tribute of the Inhabitants thereabouts, as though he were their true and naturall Lord; and at times went forth with his flips robbing

With this confideration they entred into countell, and did determine to ioyne together all the people they could, and being in good order, to follow and feeke the Roser. Then the Gouernous commanded to be called together all the people bordering thereaboust, and to come wro the Citie whereas hee was. place whereas he was fortified, and charged them very much to doe it in fuch fecret fort, that they were notefpied: for therein confifted all their whole worke. Hee commanded the Captrine Gabriel de Ribera, that straightwaies he should depart by Land, and that vpon a sudden he should strike alarme vpon the Enemie, with the greatest tumult that was possible. Likewife he commanded the Captaines Pedro de Canes and Lorenfo Chacon, that either of them with forty Souldiers should goe up the River in small ships and light, and to measure the time in such forc. that as well thole that went by land, as those that went by water, should at one instant come upon the Fort, and to give alarme both together, the better to goe thorow with their pretence: and he himselfe did remayne with all the rest of the people, to watch occasion and time for to 10 aide and succour them if need be required. This their purpose came so well to passe, that both the one and the other came to good effect : for those that went by water, did fet fire on all the fleet of the Enemie : and those that went by land at that instant had taken and set fire on a Trench made of timber, that Limaton had caused to bee made for the defence of his people and the Fort : and with that furie they the more then one hundred Chines, and tooke priloners lenenty women which they found in the same Trench, but when that Limaton understood the rumour, hee tooke himselfe straightwaies to his Fort which hee had made for to defend himfelte from the Kings Nauie, if they should happen to finde him out.

The next day following, the Generall of the field did bring his Souldiers into a square battell, and begains to march towards the Fort, with courage to assault it is if occasion did ferue thereuntor. Intel did pitch his Campe within two hundred paces of the Fort, and found that the Entenire did all that night fortise himselfe very well, and in such fort, that it was perillous to assault him, for that he had placed youn his Fort there Peces of Artillerie, and many Basics, betides other Engines of fire-worke. Seeing this, and that his Peces of Artillerie that hee brought were very finall for to batter, and little store of munition, for that they had spen all at the assault which the Rouer did give them at Manilla, the Generall of the field, and the Captaines concluded amongh themselves, that seeing the Enemie had no ships to escape by water, neither had he any great store of victuals for that all was burne in the ships, it was the best and most surfers way to besige the Fort, and to remayne there in q six until that hunger did constraine them either to yeeld or come to some conclusion: which rather they will then to

This determination was liked well of them all, although it fell out cleane contrarie vnto Limaher after their expectation; for that in the space of three moneths that slege endured, this Limahors three moneths did so much that within the Forthe made certaine shall barkes, and trimmed them in the best size of the manner he could, wherewith in one night he and all his people escaped.

It happened vpon a day, that there came to the Campe a ship of Miguell de Loarcha, wherein was Friar Martin de Herrada Provinciall of the Angustine Friars. Scuen leagues after they were out of the mouth of Pagafinan, they met with a linp of Sangleyes, who made for the Port, and thinking them to bee Enemies, they bare with them (having another ship that followed them for their defence) and had no more in them but the faid Prouinciall and five Spaniards, be-40 fides the Mariners. This ship of Sangley seeing that hee did beare with them, would have fled, but the winde would not permit him, for that it was to him contrary, which was the occasion that the two ships wherein the Spaniards were, for that they did both sayle and rowe, in a finall time came within Cannon shot. In one of the ships there was a Chino, called Sinfay. This Sm(ay went straightwaies into the fore-ships, and demanded what they were, and from whence they came: and being well enformed, hee understood that hee was one of the ships of warre that was fent out by the King of China, to feeke the Rouer Limabon, who leaving the reft of the fleet behind, came forth to feeke in those Ilands to fee it hee could discouer him to bee in any of them: and the better to bee enformed thereof, they were bound into the Port of Buliano, from whence they came with their two thips: from whom they would have fled, thin-50 king they had beene some of the Rouers ships. Being fully perswalled the one of the other,

50 king they had beene some of the Rouers ships. Being fally persualed the one of the other, they joyned together with great peace and firmedship: the Spanarad straightwaies entred into their Boat, and went vinto the ship of the Chines; and carried with them the adroscial Sm-fas, for to be their Interpreter; and to speake vinto the Chines. In the said ship came a man of great authoritie, who was called Omneone, who bosophe a Commission from their King, and shewed it vinto the Spaniards, and vinto the Eather Provincial?: in the which the King and his Counselful dipardon all those Soudiers that were with Limabon, if that forthwich they would leave him and returne vinto the Kings part; and likewise did promise gerate girst and raucur vinto to him that did either take or kill the aforefaid Rouer. Then did Smsfar declire with him of the comming of the Rouer with the short shall all that largened in the siege of the Citic, as a confidence of the short with the short shall be shall all that largened in the siege of the Citic, as a confidence of this motorities.

The Captaine Omonous reioyeed very much of the fenewes, and made many figness of great content, and did embrace the Spaniards many times, and gaue other tokens whereby hee did manifed the great pheafure her received, and would therewith straightwaies depart which the rest of the sleet. And for that they looked enery day for the death or imprisonment of the Rouer, the better to enforme himselfe : hee determined (for that it was fough hand) to goe and ice the Generall of the field in Pagansinan, and carrie with him Sinsay, one that was known both of the one and the other: by whole meanes they might treate of such things that hell accomplished the confirmation of the peace and friendship betwixt the Chinois and the Soa. niurds, as also of the death or imprisonment of Limahon. With this resolution, the one departed vnto Pagansinan, whereas they arrived the same day, and the others vnto Manilla, whither they went for victuals.

Omoncon remayned there certaine dayes, after the which he feeing that the fiege did long endure, and that his staying might cause suspicion of his death; and againe, that the whole steet in did tarrie his comming to his intelligence of the Rouer, being fully perswaded and certaine, the he could not escape the Spaniards hand : they had him in such a straight, and that they would without all doubt, fend him vnto the King aliue or dead (as they promifed him) hee was determined to returne vnto China, with the good newes that hee had understood, with a determinate intent, to return again and carrie the Rouer, after that they had him prifoner. With this resolution in the end of certaine dayes hee went vnto the Gouernour, certifying him of his pretence, whereby hee might giue him licence to put it in execution. The Gouernour did like well of his pretence, and did promise him the same, the which the Generall of the field did offer vnto him: and which was, fo foone as the Rouer should be taken prisoner, or slayne, to fend him vnto the King without any delay, or elfe, to put him whereas he should be forth-comming, 20 and to give them advertisement to send for him, or come himselfe : and did offer him more. that for his voyage he should bee prouided forthwith of all things necessarie, without lacking of any thing. Omoncon did give him great thankes for the same, and in recompence thereof did promife vnto the Gouernour, for that he vnderstood, and had intelligence of the Fathers. of Saint Augustine, that his Hopour, and his Antecessor, and the Adelantado, Miguel Lopez de Legafri, had delired many times to fend vnto the Kingdome of China fome Religious men, to treate of the preaching of the Gospell, and to see the wonders of that Kingdome, and how that they neuer could put this their defire in execution, for that those Chinose which came this ther, although they ald offer them what soener they would demand, fearing the punishment that should be executed on them according vnto the Lawes of the Kingdome : hee did promise 30 him, that he would carrie them with him vnto China, fuch Religious men as his Honour would mit throcar- command, and fome Souldiers, fuch as would goe with them: hoping with the good newes that hee carried, to runne in no danger of the Law, neither the Vice-roy of Aucheo to thinke euill thereof, and for a more securitie that they should not bee euill entreated, hee would leave with him pledges to their content.

The Gouernour being very joyfull of these newes, did therewith send for the Provincialist

the Augustine Friers, who was elected but few dayes past: his name was Frier Alonso de Al-

The 40 Religious men should be , Frier Martin de Herrada of Pamplona, who left off the dignitie of Provinciall: and in companie with him should goe, Frier Hieronimo Martin, who also was vewent to Ch.na. ry well learned, and of the Citie of Mexico: the Souldiers that were appointed to beare them companie were called , Pedro Sarmiento, chiefe Sergeant of the Citie of Manilla of Vilorado, and Miguel de Loarcha, both principall men, and good Christians, as was convenient for that which they tooke in hand. Their Fathers did carrie them for this purpose, that if they did remaine there with the King, preaching of the Gospell, then they should returne with the news thereof, to give the Governour to vinderstand of all that they had seene, and happened vinto them: and likewife vnto the King of Spayne, if need did fo require. And the Gouernour in token of gratitude, did give vnto the Captaine Omoneon in the presence of themall, a gallant 19 Chaine of Gold, and a rich Robe of crimfon in graine: a thing that hee esteemed very much, and much more efteemed in China, for that it is a thing that they have not there. Besides this, Spaushbounty, they did ordayne a reasonable Present for to send vnto the Gouernour of Chincheo, hee that disparched Omoneon by the commandement of the King, to goe and feeke the Rouer: also another Present for the Vice-roy of the Prouince of Ochian, who was at that present in the Citie of Aucheo. And for that Sufar should not finde himselfe agreeued (who was a Merchant well knowne amongst them, and perhaps might bee the occasion of some euill and disturbance of their pretence) they gaue vnto him also another Chaine of Gold, as well for this, as also for that hee was euer a fure and perfect friend vnto the Spaniards. Then ftraightwaies by the commandement of the Gouernour there were brought together all fuch Chineis as were 60 captine and taken from Limahon out of the Fort aforefaid, at Pagansinan, and gave them vnto Omencon, to carrie them free with him: and gaue likewife commandement that the Gnerall of the field, and all such Captaines and Souldiers that were at the siege of the Fort, should give vnto him all such as did there remaine: binding himsete to pay vnto the

In all the time of their Voyage the Captaine Omoncon with his Companie shewed such great courteste and friendship to our men, as though they had beene the owners of the faid ship; and at such time as they did embarke themselves. hee gaue his owne Cabine that was in the sterne to the Friers, and vnto Pedro Sarmiente, and 20 to Misuel de Loarcha, hee gaue another Cabine that was very good, and commanded his com-

panie in the ship that they should respect them more then himselfe : the which was in such fort, that on a day at the beginning of their Voyage, the Fathers found them making of Sacrifice vnto their Idols, and told them, that all which they did was a kinde of mockage, and that they should worship out onely one God: and willed them to doe so no more. As they drew neerer the Land, they might disconerfrom the Sea, a very gallant and well towred Citie, that was called Timbul, whereas the Timbul in the King hath continually in Garrison ten thousand Souldiers, and is under the government of Province of the Pronince of Chinches. The next day wee came vnto a Watch-towre, which was fitua- Chinches. ted voon a Rocke at the entrie into a Bay, who had discouered our ship, and knew the Standard or Flagge to bee the Kings: and made a figne vnto feuen ships which were on the other

Straightwayes the Captaine of the feuen ships came forth to know what wee were. Hee iffued forth from behind the Point, with three flips that did rowe with Oares very fwift: and when he came nigh vnto them, he shot at them to make 40 them to amaine: the which Omoncon would not doe, for that he supposed (as afterwards hee did confesse) that he should be some man of little estimation, and not the Generall of the coast. But as he drew nigher vnto him, he did know him by the Flagge hee bare on the sterne, in the Foift wherein he was himselfe with his Souldiers, and straightwaies caused to amaine his tayles. and tarried for him. The Generall did the like, and stayed behind, sending a Boat for to bring the Captaine vnto him, and to declare what hee was, and from whence hee came. Omoneon did forthwith embarke himfelfe into his Boat without any refistance, but rather with teare that he should be punished for that hee did slee from him. The Generall gaue him good entertainment.

This Generall was a goodly man of person, and was very well apparelled, and did sit in a Chaire in the sterne of his ship, the which was all couered to keepe away the Sunne: he comse manded the Captaine Omoneon to fit downe by him upon the hatches, without Chaire or any other thing, who did obey him, although first he did refuse it with great modestie, as not worthie to haue that honour, which was not efteemed a little. After that he was fet, hee gaue him to viderstand in effect of all his voyage and succeile, and in what extremitie liee left Limaton, and also how that he carried with him the Friars and other Spaniards, which went to carrie the newes, and to treat of peace with the Vice-roy of Aucheo: vnto whom, and vnto the Gouernour of Chincheo, he carried presents, sent from the Gouernour and Generall of the field of the llands Philippinas. When the Generall had heard this relation, he commanded the Boat to teturne and to bring them before him, that he might fee what manner of men they were of perfon, and the vie of the apparell : and likewife to latisfie himlelfe of other delires that came in-60 to his mind by that which Omoncon had faid of them. The Fathers and their companions did obey the commandement, and did embarke themselves in the Boat, and came vinto the ship

whereas the Generall received them with great courteile after his fashion.

Tanfuju, ot

Ithin a little while after , Omoncon and his companie arrived at the Port of Tanfus hard by, vpon Wednelday in the evening, being the fift day of Iuly. This Tanfulo is a gallant and fresh Towne of foure thousand Housholders, and hath continually a thoutand Souldiers in Garrison, and compassed about with a great and strong wall, to and the gates fortified with plates of Iron, the foundations of all the houses are of Lime and Stone, and the walls of Lime and Earth, and some of Bricke: their houses within very fairly wrought, with great Courts, their streets faire and broad all paued. Before that Omneon die come vnto an anchor, they faw all the Souldiers and the people of the Towne were gathered together upon the Rockes that were ioyning unto the Port, all armed ready unto the battell. amongft whom there was a principall Captaine, and three more of his companions, that were fent him by the Gouernour of Chinches, whom they doe call in their language, Infuente, who had understanding of the comming of Omoncon, when the ship entred into the Port, Omoncon did falute the Towne with certaine Peeces of Artillerie, and discharged all his Harquebussessixe times about, and therewithall tooke in her fayle, and let anchor fall. Then flraightwaies the 20 Captaine whom the Infuanto had fent, came aboord the ship, who had expresse commission not to leave the companie of our people after that they were difembarked, till fuch time as they came whereas he was, but to beare them companie, and to prouide them of all things necessaries the which he did accomplish.

Then after, fo foone as they were come to an anchor in the Port, the Iustice did fend them 30 a Licence in writing for to come forth of the ship, as a thing necessarie, for that without it the Waiters or Guards of the water fide, will not fuffer them to put foot on land. This Licence was written vpon a boord whited, and firmed by the Iuffice, whose charge it is to give the Licence. Then when they came ashoare, there were the Souldiers that were appointed by the Influence ding of the in a readinesse to beare them companie, and diddirect and leade them vnto the Kings houses of the faid Citie: the like hath every Citie almost throughout all the Kingdome, and there they bid lodge them. These houses are very great and very well wrought, and gallant, with faire Courts below, and Galleries aboue: they had in them Stanges or Ponds of water full of fifth The people of the Citie did preffe very much to see these strangers, so that with the preffe. 45 40 also with the great heate, they were maruellously afflicted: which being perceived by the Iuflice, he gaue order that they might bee eased of that trouble, and caused Sergeants to keepe the doore, and their Yeomen to make reliftance against the people. When night was come, the Iuflice of the Citie did make a Banquet according to the fashion of the Countrey : and it was in their banquets the fashion following. They were carried into a Hall that was very curiously wrought, wherein were many Torches and waxe Candles light, and in the midft thereof was fet for every one of the Guefts a Table by himselfe, as is the vie and fashion of that Countrey; enery Table had his couering of Damaske or Sattin very well made, the Tables were gallantly painted, without any Table-clothes, neither doe they vie any, for they have no need of them, for that they doe eate all their victuals with two little flickes made of Gold and Siluer, and of a maruellous 50 odoriferous wood, and of the length of little Forkes, as they doe vie in Italie, with the which they do feed themselues so cleanly, that although their victuals be neuer so small, yet doe they let nothing fall, neither foule their hands nor faces. They were fet downe at these Tables in very good order, and in gallant Chaires, in such fort, that although they were every one at his Table by himselfe, yet they might see and talke one with another, they were served with diuers forts of cates, and very well dreffed, both of flesh and fish, as gamons of Bacon, Capons, Geese, whole Hens, and pieces of Beese, and at the last, many little baskets full of sweet meats made of Sugar, and Marchpanes all wrought very curioufly. They gaue them Wine of an indifferent colour and tafte, made of the Palm-tree. All the time that the fupper lafted, there was in the Hall great store of Musicke of divers Instruments, whereon they played with great con- 60 fort, some one time and some another. The Instruments which they commonly doe vie, are Hoybuckes, Cornets. Trumpets, Lutes, fuch as be vied in Spaine, although in the fashion there is some difference. There was at this Banquet (which endured a great while) the Captains that was ordayned for their Guard, and the Captaine Omoncon, and Smfay. When Supper was done, they were carryed into very faire Chambers, whereas were faire Beds, where they flest and eated themselues.

The next day in the morning, was brought vnto them their ordinarie victuals, and that in a hundance, as well of Flesh as of Fish, Fruits and Wine, to be dressed vnto their owne content, and according vato their manner : they would take nothing for the fame, for fo they were commanded by the Infuantes. This was brought vnto them every day, folongas they were there, & in the way when as they went vnto Chincheo. The same day arrived a Captayne of fortie Ships in the same Captains of Port, and so some as hee was ashoare, he went straight-wayes vnto the Palace for to see the form Shipsi ftrangers : who being aduertifed of his comming, came foorth and received him at the Palace

10 gate, whereas, was vied betwixt them great courtefie. The Captayne came with great Maiestie. with his guard of Souldiers and Mace-bearers before him, with great mulicke of Hoy-buckes. Trumpets and Drums, and two Whiffelers, or Typ-staues, that made roome, putting the reople afide : also there came with him two executors of Justice, having each of them in their hands a Streets. Set made of canes, which is an instrument wherewith they doth whip and punish offenders. When this Captayne came vinto the Palace gate, whereas the father Friars and their companions did receive him, he was brought on the shoulders of eight men very richly apparelled, in a chayte wrought of Iuorie and Gold, who stayed not till they came into the inner Chamber, whereas he did alight from the chayre, and went straight under a Cloath of estate, that was there ordinarily for the same purpose, and a Table before him : there hee sate downe, and straight-wayes arose vp.

and standing he did receive the strange ghests, who did courtese vnto him according vnto their fashion, which is to joyne their hands together, and to stoope with them and their heads downe to the ground : hee gratified them againe, with bowing his head a little, and that with great granitie. These speeches being finished, there was brought foorth certaine pieces of blacke Silke of twelue vares long a piece. And his Officers did put on the Friars shoulders each of them two. which was for either shoulder one, and was brought about their bodies and girt therewith : the like was done in order vnto the Spanish Souldiers, and vnto Omoncon, and Sinfay, and to their Interpreter. But vnto Omoncon, and Sinfay, was given vnto either of them a branch or Nofegay made of Siluer, which was fet vpon their heads, which is accustomable honour, that is done vnto fuch as have done some great enterprise, or such like. After that this ceremonie was done, they

20 played vpon the Instruments aforesayd, which came with the Captayne. In the meane time of their mulicke, there was brought foorth great store of Conserues, March-panes, and things made of Sugar, and excellent good Wine : and to being on foote standing, hee caused them to eate, and hee himselfe from the Chayre whereas he sate, did give them to drinke every one in order, with out rifing vp., which is a ceremonie and token of great fauour, and of loue.

This being done, hee arose from the chayre vnder the Cloath of state, and went and sate downe in that which was brought on mens backes, and with declyning of his head a little, hee departed out of the Hall and out of the house, and went vato his owne house, whereas by the counsell of Omoncess, and Sinfay, within an houre after they should goe and visite him, the which they did: hee received them maruelloully well and with great courtefie: who maruelled at his 40 great Maiestie and authoritie, for that Omoncon and Sinsay, when they did talke with him were vpon their kness, and so did all the rest. Hee gaue them againe in his owne house a gallant banquet, of divers forts of Conserves and Fruits, and excellent Wine of the Palme-tree, and did talke and reason with them in good fort, and was more familiar than at his first visitation.

After that the Fathers with their companions had remained two dayes in the Port of Tanfulo. the thridday they departed in the morning towards Chinches. At their going forth of the Town, they were accompanied with a great number of Soldiers, both Harquebusses & Pikes, and before them a great noyle of Trumpets, Drums, and Hoy-bucks, till fuch time as they came vinto the Riuers fide, whereas was a Brygandine prouided and made readie in all points, to carrie them up the River : all the streets alongst whereas they went, there followed them so much people that it so was innumerable, and all to fee them. All alongit the Rivers whereas they went, was feated with Villages very gallant and fresh, both on the one side and on the other.

At the end of the two leagues, they came vnto a great Bay, where was at an Anchor a fleete of more then one hundred and fiftie Ships men of warre, whose Generall was this Captaine, whom wee haue spoken of. At such time as the fleete did discouer them, they began to salute them, as well with great pieces of Artillerie, as with Harquebulles, and other kinde of pastimes, which commonly they doe vie at fuch times.

Our Spaniards did travell up the Riner more than three leagues, having continually both on the one fide and on the other, very many and faire Townes, and full of people. In the end of the the one fide and on the other, very many and take a lowner, and take of Parges, whereas firight-three leagues, they went aland halfe a league from the Towne of Targes, whereas firight-6c wayes all fuch things as they carryed with them, were taken upon mens backes, and carryed unto the Towne before them, whereas they were tarrying their comming, for to give them great entertaynment. At their going ashoare, they found prepared for the two Religious men, little Chayres to carrie them vpon mens backes, and for the Souldiers and the rest of their companions horse. The Fathers did refuse to bee carryed, and would have gone a foot, but Omoncon, and the

China courtefie, Women, Banquetting houses, Bridges, Husbandrie. LIB. II other Captayne would not confent thereunto. The Fathers obeyed their reasons, and entred into the Chayres, and were carryed with eight men a piece, and the other their companions with foure men a piece, according vnto the order given by the Governour. Those that carried the Chayres, c., it with fo good a will, that there was striuing who should first lay hands to them. This Fowne of Tangon, hath three thousand Souldiers, and is called in their language Coan: at the entring in, it hath many Gardens and Orchards and a freet where through they carryed the Spaniards vnto their lodging, they affrmed to bee halfe a league long, and all the fireet whereas they went, was full of boards and stalles whereon was layd all kinde of Merchandise very curious, and things to bee eaten, as fresh Fish and falt Fish of divers forts, and great abone dance of Fowle, and Flesh of all forts, Fruits and greene Herbes in such quantitie, that it was to fufficient to ferue fuch a Citie as Similis. They were brought vato the Kings house, which was very great, marueiloufly well wrought with ftone and bricke, and many Halls, Parlours, and Chambers, but none aboue, but all below. So foone as they were a foote, there was brought from the Captayneor Iustice of the Towne, whom they doe call Ticoan, a message, bidding them welcome, and therewith a present, which was great store of Capons, Hennes, Teales, Duckes. Geele, Flesh of foure or fiue forts, fresh Fish, Wine, and fruits of divers forts, and of so great quantitie, that it was sufficient for two hundreth men. All the which they would have given for a little coole ayre, by reason that it was then very hot weather; and againe, the great number of people that came thither to fee them did augment it the more. In the Euening the two Spa-Souldiers went foorth into the streets to walke abroad, and left the two Friars within their 20 lodging, vnto whom afterwards they did give intelligence of all things that they had feene.

which did cause great admiration: the wall of the Towne was very broad, and wrought with china Women. lyme and stone, full of loope-holes and watch-towers. And as they passed through the streets there came foorth of a houle avery honest man, as it seemed, who was very well apparelled and stayed them, for that in the same house, there were certayne Dames principall personages, that did see them a farre off, and not content therewith, they did request them with great curtesse for to enter into the house, that they might the better fee them : the which they did straightwayes accomplish, and entring in, they were brought into a court, whereas was set Chavres for them to fit downe, and the Ladies were there a little from them, beholding them with great honeftie and granitie. Then a little after, they fet them a banquet with March-panes and fweet 10 meats made of Sugar, which they did eate without any curiofitie, and drunke after the same. The banquet being done, they made fignes and tokens vnto them, that they received great content with their fight, and that they might depart when that their pleafure was, the which they did. after that they had made great curtefies with thankes, for their friendship received of both parts. And a little from that Pace they faw a S:one-bridge. Bridge all of Masons worke, and the stones very well wrought and of a mightie bignesse, they measured some of them, that were twentie and two and twentie soote long, and five foot broad, and seemed vnto them, that it was a thing impossible to bee layd there by mans hands. Of this bigneffe, yea and bigger they did fee layd vpon many other Bridges, in the discourse of their vovage, going to Chincheo and Aucheo. The next day in the morning when they were vp and readie, they found in the house all things in a readinesse and in very good order, for their departure, as well their little Chayres, and Horse, as for men to carrie their stuffe and apparell, which did not a litle make them to maruell, how that every one of them with a wafter vpon their shoulders, did divide their burthen in two parts, fixe roues before and fixe roues behinde, and did trauell 50 with the same with so great ease and swiftnesse, that the Horse could not indure with them. They went vnto the Tiedan his house. They found him with great Maiestie, but yet gaue them great and good entertaynment. Hee did likewise put vpon each of them, two pieces of Silke, in

From this Towne of Tangoa vnto Chincheo, is thirteene leagues, and so playne way that it Thriftie tillage giveth great content to travell it : in all the way they could not fee one spanne of ground but was tilled and occupied. The like they doe fay, is of all the ground that is in the whole Kingdome : it is full of people, and the Townes one to neere to another, that almost you can not judge them to bee many Townes but one, for that there was but a quarter of a league diffant, one Towne from another, and it was told vnto them that in all the Provinces of the Kingdome, it is 60 peopled in the same order. All their ground they till is watred, which is the cecasion of the fruitfulneffe therof, fo that they doe gather fruit all the yeere long, and our Spaniards did fee in all pla-Plowing with ces whereas they came, that they were gathering of Rice, some new spring vp, some with eares, and some ripe. They doe feed them commonly in the fields of Rice, for that Pullering they have no other graings, and all the time that they are feeding, a Boy doth ride on every one of them to disturbe them, that they doe no harme therein. Their waters by the high-wayes, are very good and light. The fame day when they had trauelled halfe way. they faw a tarre off comming marching towards them in very good order, a foundron of Souldiers, which at the first caused them to maruell, and to bee afrayd, till fuch time as they drew nigher, it was told vito them, that it was the Captayne of the guard vito the Infuanto, or Gouernour of Chinches, who came by his order to receive them with four hundred Souldiers, very well armed with Pikes and Harquebusses, and well apparelled. So soone as the Captayne came vnto them, hee was mounted on a bay Horie, but of small flature, as they for the most part bee in all that Prounce, hee alighted and came vnto the Fathers, and his companions (who likewite

The Captayne came very well apparelled with a Chayne of gold about his necke, a man of a good audacitie and understanding. Hard unto his stirrop hee had a Page that went with him, and carryed a great Tira fol, made of Silke, that did shadow him all ouer. Hee had before him Athing to great mulicke of Trumpets and Hoybuckes, whereon they played in great concord. Pon a Saturday being the eleventh of July, came our Spaniards unto the Citie of Chincheo, Chincheo hash foure houres before it was night. This Citie is of the common fort in that Kingdome, and feuentie thoumay have feuencie thousand housholds. It is of great trafficke and well provided of all things, for sand houshold: that the Sea is but two leagues from it : it hath a mightie River running along it by it downe man to the Sea, by which is brought by water and carryed downe all kinde of merchandile. There is Faire Bridge a Bridge ouer the fayd River, which is supposed to bee the fairest that is in all the world : it hath a draw bridge to ferue in time of warres, or for any other necessitie : the Bridge is eight hundred paces long, and all wrought with flones of two and twentie foote long, and flue foote broad, a thing greatly to bee maruelled at : at the entrie thereof, there were many armed Souldiers rea-40 die to hight, who when they came within Harquebuffe fhot did falute them in very good order,

There was nigh vato the fayd bridge in the Ruer riding at anchor, more then a thousand Ships A thousand of all forts, and to great a number of Boates and Barkes, that all the River was coursed, and eue-thips in one ry one full of people that had entred into them for to fee the Castillas, for fo they did call the Spa- River. miards in that Countrey, for the ftreets in the Suburbes, nor in the Citie could not hold them, the number was fo great, yet their streets are as broad as our ordinary streets in any Crtie in all Spaine, This Citie is compassed with a strong Wall made of stone, and is seven fathom high, and source fa-

and company wherewith he came was to great, that they verily did beleeue him to be the Infinante: but being certified, they understood that it was one of his Counsellors that came from the Gouernours home to his owne house, which was in the same street whereas hee met with them. This Counsellor was carried in a Chaire of Juorie, garnished with Gold and with Curtaines of Cloth of Gold, and on them the Kings Armes, which are certayne Serpents knotted togother (as hath beene told you.) But when he came right against the Spaniard, without any staying he made a figne with his head, and commanded that they should returne backe againe vino his house, which was hard by : the Captaines did straight-wayes obey his commandement, and returned with them. The Counsellor entred into his house, which was very faire, hee had in i returned with them. a me and a Garden. After him entred the Spaniards all 10 alone, the reft remayned without in the fireet at the Lopius commandement, hee entertayned them with very good words of semblance, and commanded a Banquet to be brought forth, and Wine to drinke, he began first both to cate and drinke. Then he commanded to call in the Captaine, vnto whom was given the charge to beare them companie, and didchide with him very fharpely and seuerely, because he did carrie them on foot (they could not understand whether it were done for a policie, or of a truth, although the effects wherewith hee did chide feemed of a truth) hee straight-wayes commanded two rich Chaires to bee brought forth to carry the Fathers, and to give vnto their companions Horses: the which beeing done, hee willed them to goe and visit the Gouernour, who did tarrietheir comming: and that another time at more lei-

They followed their way all along it the street, which seemed vnto them to bee more fairer then the other wherein they entred, and of more fairer houses and triumphant Arches: and allo the shops that were on the one side and on the other, to bee better furnished with richer things then the others, in so ample fort, that what therewith, as also the great number of people which they saw, they were so amazed, that they were as people from themselves, thinking it to bee a Dreame. To conclude, after they had gone a good while in that street, delighting their eyes with new things neuer feene of them before : they came into a great place, whereas were many Souldiers in good order with their Harquebusses, Pikes and other Armour in a readinesse, apparelled all in a Livery of Silke, with their Ancients dilplayed. At the end of this place, was there a very faire and sumptuous Palace, the gate was wrought of Masons worke of stone, very 30 great and full of figures or Personages, and abone it a great window with an Iron grate all gile: they were carried within the gates, the Soulders and the people which were without number, remayned without and could not be auoyded but with great difficultie. When they were within the first Court, there came forth a man very well apparelled and of authoritie, and made signes with his hand vnto them that brought the Spaniards, that they should carrie them into a Hall that was upon the right hand, the which was straight-wayes done. The Hall was very great and faire, and at the end thereof there was an Altar, whereon were many Idols, and all did differ the one from the other in their fashion : the Altar was rich and very curiously trimmed with burning Lampes: the Altar-cloth was of cloth of Gold: and the fruntlet of the same. After awhile that they had beene there whereas the Idols were, there came a Seruant 40 State-ceremo- from the Gouernour and faid vnto them in his behalfe, that they should fend vnto him the Interpreter; they straight-wayes commanded him to goe. And the Governour faid vnto him that he should aduise the Fathers and the rest of his companions, that if they would talke and treate of fuch businesse as they came for, that it must be done with the same ceremonie and respect, as the Nobles of that Province doe, vie to talke with him, which is vpon their knees (as afterwards they did fee many times vsed) if not that they should depart vnto the House whereas they were lodged , and there to tarrie the order that should be sent from the Vice-roy of Auchee.

The Spaniards were of divers judgements, striving amongst themselves a good while, but yet in conclusion, the Religious Fathers, whom the Gouernour of the Ilands had ordayned and fent as principals in this matter, and whose judgement they thould follow, said, that they ought to 50 accept the condition, feeing that by no other meanes they could not come vnto that they pretended; and not to leave it off for matters of small importance, for that therein they make no offence vnto God, and it may be a meane vnto the converting of that mightie Kingdome.

When that the Infuanto vn.lerstood that the Spaniards would enter with the reuerence accustomed, and in such order as was declared vnto them, hee straight-wayes commanded that they should come into the Hall whereas hee was, they entred into another Hall as bigge as the first : whereas were many Souldiers with their weapons in their hands in very good order, and richly apparelled, and next vnto them were many Tipstaues and Sergeants, with different Ensignes or bages, all spartled with long Robes of like garded and embroydered with Gold, and eury one of them had a Helme on his head, some of silver and other some of Tinnegile ourr, which 60 was a gallant thing to fee: all had long haire and died yellow, which hung downe behind their eares vpon their backes : they were placed in very good order, and made a lane that the Spaniards might puffe thorough: then they came into a Gallerie, which was joyning vnto the Chamber where the Gouernour was, and there they heard fuch a noyfe of Instruments of divers forts, which endured a good while, and was of so great melodie, that it seemed wnto them that they neuer before heard the like : which caused vnto them great admiration to see so great Maiestre among it Gentiles. When the Musicke was ended, they entred into the Hall aforefaid, and had Great Mais fig. not gone many fleps, when as they met with the Counfailer that met with them in the fireet afore-faid, and with him other two of his companions all on foot and bare-headed before the Gouernour, and their Entignes of Majestie left off: which is generally vied in all the Kingdome, the inferiour to make any thew when that he is before his Superiour. Then they made fignes vnto The Influentes them for to kneele downe, for that the Insuanto was nigh at hand in a rich Towre, under a Ca- person and en. nopie of great Riches, and did represent so great Majestie as the King himselfe : hee did enter- terraynment. to tayne them with tokens of great loue, and humanitie, and told them by their Interpreter, that they were very well welcome, and that hee did greatly rejoyce to fee them, with many other words of great fauour. This Gouernour was a man of goodly person, well fauoured, and of a merry countenance, more then any that they had seene in all that Countrey. Hee caused to bee put youn the shoulders of the Fathers and of the Souldiers that were with him, every one of them two pieces of filke, which was croffed about them like Skarfes, and likewise to either of them a branch of filuer: the like courtesie he did vnto the Captaine Omoncon, and vnto Sinsay. and commanded to give voto all their Servants every one of them a Mantle of Cotton painted. This being done, the Fathers did give vnto him the Letters which they carried from the Governour and Generall of the field, and a note of the Prefent that was fent him : crauing pardon for on that it was fo small, but time and oportunitie would not serue as then to fend vnto him a thing of greater price and valour : certifying him, that if the friendship which they pretended did goe forwards, and come to be established, that then all things should be amended and amplified. Hee answered vnto their proffers with words of great fauour, and made signes vnto them to arile. and to goe and take their rests there, whereas they were lodged: the which they did, and found all things in very good order and well furnished, as well of Beds as of all other necessaries, which was done by the commandement of the Gouernour. Before they departed out of the Palace the Captaine of the guard did carrie them vnto his Lodging, which was within the Court, and there he made them a Banquet with Conferues, and Fruits in abundance: the which being done, hee and other Gentlemen of the Palace did beare them company vntil they came to their Lodgings, 20 which they greatly defired, for that they were wearie of their Iourney, and also with the trouble of the great presse of people that pressed on them in the streets, & otherwise for to see them: the which Captaine of the guard did appoint a Company of Souldiers for to guard them both night and day, the which was done more for Maiestie then for necessitie or securitie of their perfons. They had a Steward appointed to prouide them and all their company of all things neceffary, and that in abundance, and not to take of them any thing, which was given by particular commandement by the Gouernour.

The next day, many of the Gentlemen of the Citie did goe unto the Spaniards to wifit them. and fuch as could not goe themselues did send their Seruants, bidding them welcome. The Spaniards did make answere, and gratified them all, in the which visitation they spent all the whole 40 day, having great admiration to see the good behaviour, nurture, and gallant demeanour of those Gentlemen, and the great discretion they had in the demanding of any thing they would know as also in their Answeres made to our requests. The next day the Insuanto sent a commandement wherein he willed the two Fathers to remayne in their Lodgings and take their eafe : but the two Souldiers Pedro Sarmiento, and Miguel de Loarcha, should come and speake with him, and that they should bring with them their Interpreter, for that hee had one there with him (who was a Chino, and understood the Language of the Philippines, but so badly, that they could not by his Interpretation talke of any matter of importance. So when they came thit her, they were brought whereas he was, but with leffe ceremonie, he requested them to declare vnto him the whole circumstance of the comming of Limaton the Rouer, vnto the Ilands, and how the Spaniards dealt with him: that although he had beene informed particularly in all things, by the 50 Captaine Omoncon and Sinfay, yet he was in a lealousie that they told him not the truth. Hee was nothing deceived in that he suspected,) for after that our Souldiers had made a true Relation of the comming of the Rouer vnto Manilla, and of all the rest, hee found that they differed very Vainc glory. much, the one from the other, for that they did attribute it wholly vnto themselves to get honourand benefit: but the Infaanto like a wife man straight-wayes vnderstood their pretence, But when that he perceived that Limaton was neither dead nor Prisoner, but onely beinged, he offered vnto them that if they would return e againe vnto Pagansinan vpon him whereas he was, he would give vnto them five hundred ships of warre, with people sufficient to serve both by Sea and Land, and more if they would request. They answered him, that all such cost and labour were but in vaine, for that the Generall of the field who hath him in siege, with the people and 60 ships that he hath are sufficient to end that Enterprize, and to fend him hither aline or dead, and that long before that their fleet should come thither. And besides this, their Hands were poore Booting. of victuals, and could not suffaine so great an Armie many dayes. Beeing satisfied with there reasons, he gaue place that the Interpreter which they brought should come in where as they were, for he remayned at the doore without, for that hee would bee fully certified to avoid the furbitious doubt he had before he come in prefence, yet he did helpe them very much. So when their Interpreter was come in, the Spaniards feeing good occasion and oportunitie for todeclare that which passed the day before, betwixt them and the Fathers, touching the speaking voto him on their knees; and feeing, as it feemed vinto them, that he was at that time in a good mind for to heare them, they did vtter vnto him all the whole contention (after that they had declared miny reasons of great consideration, to give them to understand that it was not convenient to doe it, but especially to religious men, who were there as principals ouer the rest, vnto whom the King of Spaine (their Lord) himselfe doth stand on foot, when as they doe intreate of any matter, although it be but of small importance : for that they are Priests and Ministers of God, 10 whom he doth worthip and reuerence.

The Instanto with a merry countenance did answere them, that who that time hee vnderflood no more of them, then in that he was informed by the Captaine Omoncon, and did not acknowledge them to bee any other but Caffillas : without knowing wherefore they came, nor from whom, for lacke of the Letters fent from their Gouernour, and Generall of the field, the first time that hee spake with them : neither had hee any knowledge of the custome of their Countrey : yet notwithstanding, that which hath passed heere, without any exception of perfon, if they would take it in good part, in that which is to come shall be amended; and from that day forwards, at all times when seuer it were their pleasure to come of themselues, or at such day forwards at a trings of the talke with him as they doe vie in Castilla or Spaine, vinto fuch 10 of their dignitie and vocation, the which hee granted with a very good will: although hee not grant vitto any that pre-eminence, no not vitto a Vice-roy, except he were an Ambaliador fene from fome King.

The next day, the Gouernour called a Gentleman of his House voto him, and commanded him to go and visit the Spaniards, and to informe himselse of them if that they lacked any thing. And also that he should in his name inuite them for the next day following to dine with him in his House. This Gentleman went vnto them and accomplished his message : and the Spaniards answered, kissing his hand for the great care he had of them : they were carryed into a Hall that was below in the second Court, whereas were many Chaires of Veluet and Tables that were painted with their frontals before. In the first Chaires they caused the Friers to fit downe, euery one at a Table by himselfe, and each of them other fixe Tables, placed in order, compassing round like a Circle : then were the Spanish Souldiers fet in the same manner, and each of them had fine Tables, and next vnto them the Captaine of the guard belonging vnto the Gouernour, and two other Captaines : and every one of them had three Tables. For that it is the cuffome A Comedy & of that Countrey to make a difference in the qualitie of the gueffs, by the number of the Tables. other ports. All these were placed in circle or compasse (as aforesaid) that they might see one another. In the midst betwixt them there was a round compasse, whereas was represented a Comedie with much pastime, and indured all the Dinner time, and a good while after. There was also great ftore of very good and excellent Musicke, accompanied with gallant voyces, also lesters with The Viands. Puppets, and other things of great passime, to drive the time away. On the first Table was set to every one of the guests, little Baskets wrought with Gold and Silver wyre, full of sweet meates made of Sugar, as March-panes, Caftles, Pitchers, Pots, Dilhes, Dogges, Buls, Elephants, and other things very curious, and all gilt : befides this there were many Difhes full of fleffi, as Capons, Hennes, Geefe, Tcales, Gamons of Bacon, pieces of Beefe, and other forts of fiesh where with all the Tables were replenished, faining that whereat they did fit to dine, which was replenished with victuals that was dreffed (for all the other was raw) and was of so great abundance, that there was at times more then fiftie diffies, and they were ferued with great curiofitie. They had Wine of divers forts, and of that which they doe make in that Countrey of the Palme-tree, but of so great excellencie, that they found no lacke of that which was made of Grapes. The Dinner endured foure houres, in fo good order that it might have beene given vnto any Prince in the World. Their Servants and Slaves that they brought with them at the fame time, did dine in another Hall nigh vnto the fame, with fo great abundance as their Mafters. When Dinner was done, the Gouernour commanded the people to come vnto him, with whom hee did talke and common with great friendship, and good conversation, and would not confent that they should kneele downe, neither to be bare headed. So after that he had made vnto them tokens of friendship, and detayned them a while, in demanding of many things, laftly, he told them that there was an order come from the Vice-roy of Aucher, that they should goe thither with great speed. So hee tooke his leaue of vs with great friendship and courtefie. At their going forth out of the Hall, they found the Captaine that did dine with them, and with him many other Gentlemen that 60 tarried their comming for to be are them company vnto their Lodging; going before them many Seruants, that did carrie the raw meate, that was upon the other Tables over and above that which they did eate on, the which was done for great Maiestie, and a Ceremonie very much vied in that Kingdome, so many times as they doe make any Banquet.

When they came vnto their Lodging they found that the Influence had fent them a very good Present, in the which was for every one of them foure pieces of filke, and counting chills with other things, and certayne painted Mantles for the Servants and Slaves. After they had taken their leave of the Captaines and Gentlemen that did beare them company home, they beganne with great joy to put all things in order for their Journey the next day following.

He next day in the morning, before that the Spaniards were flirring, there was within the House all things necessary for their Journey, as well of Litter chaires, as of Horses and Men for to carrie them, and their stuffe, the which they did with fo good a will (as aforefaid) that they did fall out and frine amongst themselves, who should be the first that should receive their

10 burthen. So all things beeing in good order, they departed, having in their company the same Captaine and Souldiers, that vnto that time had beene their guard, vntill they came vnto the Citie of Aucheo, whereas the Vice-roy was. This day by realon they understood that they should depart, the prease and multitude of the people was so great, that although they had ducker. Tip-staues before them, to beate the people away and to make roome, yet was it almost night before they could get out of the Citie: fo that they were conftrained to remaine in a Towne there hard by all that night, whereas by the commandement of the Gouernour they were very well lodged, and their Supper made readie in very good order, as it was in feuen dayes together, till fuch time as they came vnto Aucheo, without taking for the fame, or for any other thing neceffarie for their fultentaion, any price or value. There went continually before them a Post

20 with a prouision from the Gouernour, written in a great board wherein was declared who they were, and from whence they came, and commanding that there should be prouided for them all things necessarie in abundance, vpon the Kings coft, which was the occasion that so much people came for to fee them, that in the high-waies they were many times disturbed with great trouble, the third day they came vnto a Citie which was called Megon, which was formetimes Megon a great the head gouernment, the which was of forty thousand housholds, but a great part thereof was Gite spoyled dispeopled : the occasion thereof they told vs (and was) that about thirtie yeares past, the lape- by lapanders. nes, who brought for their Guides three Chinois, came vpon that Citie (to revenge themselves of Surar gem an injurie that was done vnto them) che which they put in execution with fo great fecrecie and policie, that they made themselues Lords of the Citie without any danger or hurt voto them-30 selues : for that fiftie Iapones, men fit for that purpose, did apparell themselues in Chinois apparell without being knowne, and came vnto a Gate of the Citie, whereas the Souldiers that had the charge thereof were void of all suspition. And within a little while after that, followed two thousand that did dis-imbarke themselves in a secret and vnknowne place, and came in very fecret order, because they would not be discourred, and did befet that gate of the Citie, whereas their companions were, which they fent before : who fo foone as they faw them nigh at hand, drew out their weapons, the which they carried hid under their apparell, & fet upon the Soldiers (that were void of feare and vnarmed) with so great furie and force, that they being amazed wert easily slain, so that they were Lords of the Gate, whereas they left very good guard, and followed 40 their victorie, and made themselues Lords of the Citie, without any danger vnto their persons, and did possesse the same certaine daies, and did sacke the same in spite of them all, with great harmeand lose vnto the Inhabitants thereof, vntill fuch time as the Vice-roy of Ancheo did leuie an Armie together of threefcore and ten thusand men, but they seeing that they could not defend themselues against so many, in one night they left the Citie and went vnto their ships. whereas they had left them in very good order, and carried with them the spoile of the Cibe. leauing it beaten downe.

So some as they came thither, the Friers remayned in their Lodgings, but Pedro Sarmients and Miguel de Loarcha went to visit the Gouernour, vsing the Spanish courtesie with him ; and he received them with great joy and courtefie. After they had taken their leave and returned vitto their Lodgings, the Gouernour fent to visit them El Tju, who is the ancientest of his Coun-

50 cell. At their departure from this Citie, trauelling towards Ancheo, they passed ouera mightie Admirable great River, by a Bridge all made of itone : the goodlieft and greatest that ever they had feene, whose greatnessed did cause wonderfull admiration, so that they stayed and did measure it from one end to another, that it migt be put among ft the wonders of that Countrey, which they tooke a note of. They found that it was one thousand and three hundred foot long, and that the least stone wherewith it was built, was of seventeene foot, and many of two and twentie foot long, and eight foote broad, and feemed vnto them a thing impossible to bee brought thither by mans art, for that all round about fo farre as they could fee, was plaine ground without any Mountaines : by which they judged them to be brought from farre. When they were passed that Bridge, they travelled all the rest of the day till night vpon a Cawsie that was very broad and 60 plaine, and on both fides many Victualling Houses, and the fields sowed with Rice, wheate, and other Seeds : and fo full of people as in the streets of a good Towne or Citie After they had trauelled more then halfe a league in the Suburbs of the Citie of Auchee, they met with a Post that came from the Vice-roy: who brought order that they should re-

mayne in a house that was appointed for them in the fayd Suburbes. So soone as they were alighted, there came a Gentleman to visite them, sent from the Vice-roy to bid them welcome. and to know how they did with their journey, and also to see that they were well provided for that night, of all things necessarie, and that in abundance. After this Gentleman, came other Captaynes to visite them, and brought with them great store of Conserues, Wine and Fruit: which is a common custome among st them, when that they goe in the like visitation, and it is carryed by their feruants in little Baskets very curioufly wrought, or elie in Barrels made of earth all gilt. Within two houres after their comming thither, there came another meffenger from the Vice-toy, with many men laden with Capons, Hennes, Geele, Teales, gamons of Bacon, and Conserues of divers forts, and of great abundance, sufficient for one hundred men to to suppe that night, and for their dinner the next day. The next day in the morning very early. there came much people vnto their lodging, fent by the Vice-roy, and brought with them two rich Chayres, for to carrie the Fathers in, and the Curtaines tyed vp, that they might the better bee feene, and for their companions very good Horfes, fadled after the fallion which they doe vie. They foorthwith made haste for to depart, and alchough they made great speed, yet were they a good houre and a halfe, before they could come vnto the gates of the Citie, and feemed wnto them that they had trauelled two leagues in the Suburbes: well peopled, faire houses, and many shops full of Merchandise. Before they came vnto the Gates, they passed a mightic River three times over Bridges, that were great and very faire, and the River fo deepe, that great Ships came up the fame, but their 20

uinge, verie rich and fertile, and many Townes belonging vnto it, and but eight leagues from the Sea. They had no leasure to tell the Souldiers, but they faw that from the Gate untill they came vnto the Vice-royes Palace on both tides, which was a good way, to bee full of them, and all richly apparelled and of one colour. The people that were at the windowes and in the ffreet, betwixt the houses and the Souldiers were so great a number, that it seemed to be doomes day, and that all the people in the world were there loyned together in that fireet. When they came unto the Palace which was two houres after day, the Gentlemen that were their guides. did cause the Spaniards to enter into a roome which was hard by, till such time as the Gate was open, for that it is open but once a day, and so continue no longer time then the audience endu- 30 reth, which is done by the Vice-roy once every day, and that is but a small time. But fiftheforc he doth enter into audience, there is shot off foure peeces of Artillerie, with a great novie of Trumpets, Drums and Waytes. And there is no day that paffeth without audience, as our people did see by experience so long as they were there, and were likewise informed of others. The houre being come, and the ceremonie done as aforelayd, the Gates were opened, and there was in the Court many Souldiers, apparelled in the fame liverie that those were of in the fireet, From the midst amongst them came foorth a Gentleman, who was as it was told them, the Captayne of the guard of the Vice-roy, who came with great grauitie and authoritie, towards the place whereas our people were, and after they had faluted the one the other, hee made fignes vnto them, that they should goe towards the gates of the Palace. When they were with- 40 in the first Court, which was great and wrought with mightie pillars, there was a great number of Souldiers, and many Sergeants, that entred into another great court, and mounted up a payre of stayres that was on the one side, whereas all the people were with great silence, saving the Captayne of the guard, who went with our people till they came to the gates of the Hall, where was the Vice-roy, at which gate hee flayed with his head difference, and made fignes vinto ours that they should doe the like.

Then straight-wayes came foorth of the Hall a man apparelled in a long Robe, of good perfonage, and asked of the Spaniards, if they would speake with the Vice-roy, and they answered, yea : then asked hee againe from whom they came, and by whom they were fent, they aniwered, that they were fent by the Gouernour of Philippinas, who was teruant vnto the mightieft 30 King in all Christendome. When he had this answer, he returned agains into the Hall, and within a little while after he came foorth, and bad them come in, but gaue them to understand, that in entring into the hall whereas the Vice-roy was, that they should kneele downe, and talke with him in that order, till hee commanded to the contrarie, if they would vie this Ceremonie, that then they should come in, if not, that they should returne backe againe. They sayd, that they would observe the order given vnto them. Therewith hee went in, who seemed to bee the Mafter of ceremonies, making a figne that they should follow after him, and doe that which hee willed them to doe. At the entring in at the doore, they flayed a little, and then kneeled downe right ouer against there whereas the Vice-roy sate, in a Chayre very high like vnto a Throne, with a Table before him, and was in fo darke a place that almost they could not see his sace very 60 well. On the one fide of him, there were fome like vnto Heralds of Armes, with Scepters in their hands, and on the other fide, two men of a gallant comlinesse armed with Corslets, made of scales of Gold downe to the calfe of their legges, with Bowes in their hands of gold, and Quiuers at their backs of the same. Both the one and the other were vpon their knees. There was

But the Vice-roy did cut them off before they could make an to be the Kings To end, and asked if they had brought any Letter from their King, vinto the King his Lord, whom Armer, which

And therewith hee tooke the Letter, and the memoriall of the prefent, and commanded in his prefence, to put about the neckes of the Friare in manner of a scarfe, to either of them fixe pieces of Silke, and vnto the Soldiers their companions, and vnto Omoncon, and Sinfay, each of them foure pieces, and to every one of their fernants 20 two a piece, and to give voto the two Friars and the Souldiers, Omoncon, and Sinfay, every one of them two branches of Siluer.

With the Silke about their neckes, and with the branches in their hands, they returned out of the Hall and downe the flayres the way they came, and fo through the court into the ftreets. from whence they law them that the Court gate with fo great a noyle, as when they did open it. From thence at the request of Omoneon, and Sinfay, they went vnto the house of Totoc, who Totoc. is the Captayne generall of all the men of Warre, and vnto the house of Cagnitoe, who is the chiefe Standard-bearer: their boufes were nigh the one the other, very faire and great. They found them with as great Maiestie as the Vice-roy, and in the same order, with a Table before them, and had on each tide of them armed Souldiers, kneeling on their knees. Yet did they not

20 vieour men with the courtefie that the Vice-toy vied, to caule them to stand vp, which was the occasion, that firaight-wayes they made a flow that they would depart and bee gone, complaining of Omoneon, and Smfay, for that they did carrie them tinther, and told them with anger, that the Gouernour of Manilla, did intreat them in a different fort, who was there refident for the mightiest Prince in all the world, and they but easie Merchants, neither was their going thither to bee equalled, vnto the benefite that they came thither for. This discontent the which they received, was the occasion that they would not goe to make any more visitations, although the fayd Omoncon, and Sinfay, for their owne interest, would have carryed them to the houses of other Officers, and Gentlemen of the Court.

At their comming thither, they found all their stuffe in good order, and their dinner marvei-Olous well prouided, and the whole house hanged and trimmed, as though it had beene for the Kings owne person, with many wayting men and Souldiers, those which did guard them both day and night, and hanging at the doore two tables or boards (commanded by the Vice-roy) whereon was written who they were, that were there lodged, and from whence they came, and wherefore, and that none wholoeuer, should bee so hardie as to offer them any wrong or diflurbance, vpon payne to bee for the same offence sewerely punished. In this house they were more in quiet, then in any other place, whereas they had beene, neither did the people give Reports of Pethem so much trouble, by reason of the great care which the Iudges had in putting order for the quin, called fame, by the commandement of the Vice-roy, yet was it the greatest Towne and most populed, of all that Province (although in other Provinces there bee that be much bigger) and is affirmed Suntiem.

This wall is all conered oner with tyles to defend the rayne-water for hurting of it, which could not to the contrarie but receine damage, for that there is no lyme vied in the whole wall. They have not one Cattle in all this Citie, neither is there any vied in all that Kingdome, for all their force and strength is in their Gates, the which bee made very firing, with a double wall, within very broad, betwixt the which are continually many Souldiers, luch as doe keepe watch and ward both day and 60 night. This mightie Citie is fi uated in a great playne, and compaffed round about with mightie Rockes and Mountaines, which is the occasion that it is not so healthfull, and the Inhibitants say, that it is Immostions

The next day after that our people came into the Citie, the Vice-roy did fend to invite them todinner to his owne house, whereas he made them a great hanquet in the forme following. At their comming vnto the Palace there came forth a great number of Gentlemen, feruants vnto the Vice-roy, to bid them welcome, with great flore of muficke and tokens of mirth. Being sptred into the first Court, they brought them into a mightie Hall that was maruellously well trimmed, wherein was a great number of Tables fet in fuch order, as they were in the banquet that was made them by the Gouernour of Chuncheo, (as hath beene told you) although the number and formiture did farre excell the other. But before they did fit downe, there came vnto them two Captaynes principall men, vnto whom the Vice-roy had committed the charge of the banquet, to doe all things in his name, for that it is a custome in that Kingdome, that Noble men an must not be present in their banquits they make. So the charge was given vnto them, to make them be merrie, & to bid his gheits welcome. When they came vinto them they vied great courtefie, and passed away the time in gallant discourses, till it was time to go to dinner, and that they began to bring in their victuals. Then before they did fit downe, the Captaynes did take each of them a cup in his hand, in manner of a Sorlue, as they doe vie, and being full of Wine, they went together whereas they might discouer the Heauen and offered it vnto the Sunne, and vnto the Saints of heaven, adding thereunto many words of prayers : but principally they did requelt that the comming of their new ghests might be profitable visto them all, and that the friendship which they did pretend to establish, might be for good both vnto the one and to the other. This their prayer being done, they did spill out the Wine making a great courtesse, then were they to straight-wayes filled againe, and making reference vnto their ghests enery one by himselfe, they let the Cups downe upon the Tables whereas the Fathers should dine, whereas they were fet & uerie one by himselie. This being done, the first service was set vpon the boards, and the Captaynes were fet at other Tables. The time which the banquet indured (which was very late) there was great store of mulicke of diners Instruments, as of Vials, Gitterns, and Rebuckes, and with them many lefters did make them merrie at their dinner. The which being done, the fayd Captayris did beare their ghests companie out of the Palace, whereas they did anew invite them to dinner for the next day, in the same Hall : they obeying their request did come, whereas was made unto them a banquet more notable than the first. This day at the banquet was present the Totoc. In this second barquet they had as the day before, very much mulicke, and a Comedic to that indured long, with many prettie and merrie iests : there was also a Tumbler, who did his feates very artificially, as well in vauting in the ayre, as vpon a staffe that two men did hold on their shoulders. Before the Comedie did begin, by their Interpreter the lignification thereof was

Then after a time our people feeing, that their being in that Citie feemed to be long and like to be longer, they did procure to drive away the time in the best manner they could, and went abroad into the Citie, and did by either of them that which they thought best. Whereof they found great abundance, and of to small price, that they bought it almost for nothing. They bought 60 many Bookes that did intreat of divers matters, which they brought with them to the Ilanis. The next day they went to fee the Gates of the Citie, and all such curious things as were to bee feene, fofarre as they could learne or understand, which were many. But amongst them all, they oneChappell. Law a jumptuous Temple of their Idols, in whose chiefe Chappell they counted, one hundred

Of all the reft some had foure armes, and some had fixe, and other eight, and other some maruellous deformed monsters. Before them they had burning Lamps, and many sweet perfumes and finels, but in especiall, before the three about specified.

But when that the Vice-roy did understand, that our people did goe viewing the Citie gates Vice royes and Temples (and perceiveth that they that gave him the notice did suspect it, that it was to icalouse. fome ill intent) therewith hee straight-wayes commanded, that they should not goe forth of their lodging, without his licence : and likewife commanded the Captayne that was their guard not to confent thereunto, as he had done, and likewife that none should carrie them any thing for to fell for he that did it should be punished with whipping. Yet notwishflanding, they had euery day very fufficient necoffaries for their personages in such ample wise, that there did always remayne, and not lacke. In this closenesse and keeping in, they suffered many dayes with much fadnesse, and oppressed with melancholicke humours, to see that their purpose wherefore they went thither feemed to be long, and enery day was worfe and worfe. Yet notwithstanding they did paffe it ouer in the best wife they could, in committing it with heartie zeale vnto God, for whose honour and glory they did attempt that voyage, and prayed vnto him for to moone their hearts to consent, that the religious Fathers might remayne in that Countrey, for to learne the language (as they had begun many dayes before) by which meanes their foules might be faued, and clearely deliuered from the tyrannie of the Deul, who of truth had them in possession. So after many dayes, that they had remayned in that close estate, as aforesayd, they determined for to goe and talke with the Vice-roy, and to bee fully refolued, either to tarrie or returns from whence they came, but were not permitted.

In this order they remayned in the Citie certayne dayes, and for to conclude, either to flay there, or depart the Kingdome, they were resolute, and determined to write a Letter vnto the the Vice-roy. They could finde none that would write this letter for them, although they would

20 haue payed them very well for their paines. Till in the end, by great request and prayings, the naue payer them very write it for them, and straight-wayes departed vnto the Citie of Ampin, Ampin, Ampin, that was not farre off, to put away the suspition they might conceiue, that hee did write the letthat was not rarreous, or put away to the same and the same and the same and the same are the sa found great difficultie in fending the fame, for that there was none that would carrie it, neither subjection would they consent, that our men should enter into the Palace to deliver it. But in conclusion, what with requests and gifts, they perswaded their Captayne of their guard to carrie it, who did deliuer the same vnto the Vice-roy, in name of the Castilles, saying, that he tooke it of them to bring it vnto him, for that they did certifie him, that it was a thing that did import very much. Hauing read the letter, he answered that he would give the King to vinderstand thereof, An ashee faid at the first time. And in that, touching the Friars remaining in that Countrey to preach, at that time he could make them no antiwer, for that in such matters, it was first requisite to haue the good-will of the Royall Countell. Yet would hee make answer viito the Letter they brought from the Gouernour of Manilla, and that they might depart, and returne againe at such time as they brought Limation prisoner or dead, the which being done, then shall the friendship be concluded which they doe pretend, and to remayne and preach at their will. With this anfwer they remayned without all hope to remaine there, and did incontinent prepare themselies for to depart from Manilla, and bought many bookes to carrie with them, wherein was comprehended all the secrets of that Kingdome. By reason whereof, they might give large notice vinto the royall Maiestie of King Philip. The which being understood by the Vice-roy, who had let 30 spyes to watch their doings, he did fend them word that they should not trouble themselves in the buying of bookes, for that he would give them freely, all fuch bookes as they would define to haue : the which afterwards hee did not accomplish.

In the meane time that they stayed in this Citie, amongst all other things that they understood, to drive away the time was one, it was given them to understand that in one of the Prifons, there was a Portugall prisoner, who was taken in a ship of the Iapones, with others of his Nation, who were all dead in the Prison, and none left alive but hee alone. Our people being very definous for to fee him, and to learne of him some secrets of that Country, for that hee had A Paragas pribeene there a great while, they did procure to talke with him, asking licence of the suprezime soner. ludge and Lieutement vinto the Vice-roy, who did not onely refuie to grant it them, but

6c did make diligent inquirie who they were, that did give them to understand thereof, for to Vpon a fodaine there came newes vnto the Citie, that the Rouet Limabon, was vpon the coast of Chinebee, vining his old accustomed cruelties, and how that he had spoyled and robbed a Towne . You the fea coalt. This newes was throughout all the Citie, and appeared to bee true, touching

Taoca) another the effect of the deed : yet falle touching the person, for that the Rouer was called Taoca, an Pirat, (aken to enemie, and contrarie vato Limahon : but a friend vato Vintoquian, of whom wee have spoken of. But thereupon the Vice-roy, and all of the Citie, were comformable in the fulpition that they had received, which was that our people were come into that Kingdome vpon fome euill pretence, and to fee the fecrets thereof, to some euill end, which was the occasion that from that time forwards, they shewed them not so good countenance as they did before. These newes was not so soone come, but straight-wayes the Vice-roy did send for Omoncon, (who was then returned from his vifiting) and Sinfay, vnto whom he had done courtefie, and given them the tytle of Logias and Captaynes, and hee did reprehend them very sharpely for that they had brought ouer people thither, and fayd, that they had told him alve, in faying that Limaton was belieged, 10 in fuch fort that hee could not escape, neither had the Castillos burnt his Ships, and that all was but a made matter amongst themselues, and how that the Captines which they brought, and fayd that they had taken from Limabon, they had robbed from other places, and fayd that the Spaniards, were spyes that came to discouer the secrets, and strength of the Kingdome, and that they had brought them thither, by force of gifts that they had given them. They answered him with great humilitie, in faying, that in all that which they had fayd they did speake the truth, and that it should appeare at such time, as the newes of the Rouer should bee better knowne, the which if it shall appeare to be contrarie, they were there readie for to suffer whatfoeuer punishment that should bee given them. The Vice-roy being somewhat satisfied with this their iushification, bad them to depart, remitting all things vnto time for the true declarati-20 on thereof. Then Omoneon, and Sinfay, came thraight-wayes to give the Spaniards to understand of all that had passed with the Vice-roy, and what they understood of him, which caused in them so great teare, that for the time which it indured (which was till such time as they vnderflood the truth as aforefayd) they payed very well for their feafts and banquets the which they had made them. All this happened in the time that Omoncon, and Sinfay, were at variance, and spake many iniurious words the one of the other, discouering their intents and deuises, whereby it plainely appeared, that in all that which they had told vnto the Vice-roy, they lyed, but in especiall Omoncon. Sinsay did diffemble, for hee sayd and told vnto all people, that by his order and industrie, our people did fire the Ships of Limabon, and befieged him, with other speeches in the like fort, yet twentie dayes before his comming thither, all was ended and done 30 as appeared. The occasion of their enmitte and falling out, was for that the Vice-roy had given vnto Omoncon, a tytle and charge of more honour, then vnto Sinfay, having made betwixt them a confort, that the reward or dignitie should bee equally divided betwixt them, and that the one should speake of the other the best they could, because the Vice-roy should doe them friendship. This condition and confort (as appeareth) was cuill performed by Omoncon, being addicted vnto felfe-loue, and feemed vnto him that Sinfay, did not deferue fo much as hee did, for that he was a bale man, and of the Sea, and hee of the more nobilitie, and had the office of a Captavne.

Ith this griefe and care remayned the Spaniards certaine dayes kept close in their lod- 40 gings, and were not visited so often as they were when they first came thither, which did augment very much their feare, till fuch time as they vnderstood, that the Vice-roy either of his owne good-will, or elfe by fome particular order from the King and his Counfell, had called together all the Gouernours of that Prouince of Aucheo, to intreat of matters touching Limahon, as also in particular, why and wherefore the Spaniards came thither, and to resolue themfelues wholly in all things require for the fame. So when that they were all come together, Generall con- which was in a short time, and amongst them the Gouernour of Chincheo, who by another name was called Infuanto, they had particular meetings together with the Vice-roy, in the which they were all agreed to have a generall meeting, whereunto should bee called the Castillos, and to demand of them in publike audience, the cause of their comming and being heard, to give 50 them their answer according as they had determined: for the which vpon a day appointed they met all together (but not the Vice-roy) in the house of the Cagontoc, and commanded to come before the Castillos, who did accomplish their request with a great good-will, for that they vnderstood that they were called to entreat of their matter, either to tarrie or depart. So when they came thither, they were commanded to enter into a mightie Hall, whereas they were all fet in verie rich Chayres with great grauitie and maiestie. The Insuanto seemed to bee the chiefest among ft them, but whether it was for that hee was the principallest next viro the Vice-roy (or as it was told them) for that it was hee that fent Omoncon, in the chase of the Roser Limabon, they knew not, but so soone as they were entred into the Hall, they were commanded to draw nigh, there, whereas they were all placed, without bidding them to fit downe, neither did 60 they vie any particular circumstances or courtelie. The Infuanto tooke vpon him the charge, and demanded of the Spaniards (by meanes of the Interpreters) what was the occasion of their comming into that Countrey. The Spaniards answered as they thought : and supposed, that at that time it could not bee, but that Limahon was either taken prisoner or flaine. Then did the Infuanto conclude his speech, in faying vnto them that they should returne vnto their owne Countrey to the Hands, and at fuch time as they did bring Limaton, they would conclude all things touching the friendship they requested, and also for the Preaching of the Gospell.

So from that day forwards, they did procure with all hafte for to depart, and gaue the Viceroy to vinderstand thereof, who answered them and fayd, that they should comfort themselves and receive joy and pleasure, and that hee would dispatch them, so soone as the Visitor of that Province was come to Aucheo, which would bee within ten dayes, for that hee had written vnto him. that he should not dispatch them vntill his comming, for that he would see them. From that day forwards, he commanded that fometimes they should let them goe foorth abroad New moone.

to recreate themselues, and that they should shew vnto them some particular pleasure or friend. Musters. thip. So one of them was carryed to fee the Multering of their men of warre, which they have in a common cuftome throughout all she Kingdome, to doe it the first day of the Newsmoone. and is fure a thing to bee feene : and they doe it in the field which is joyning vnto the walls of the Citie, in this manner following. There were joyned together little more or leffe then twen- Their activities tie thousand Souldiers, Pike-men and Harquebusse shot, who were so expert, that at the sound their Pices, & of the Drum or Trumpet, they straight-wayes put themselues in battle aray, and at another to be paught to be paught found in a fquadron, and at another the fhot doe divide themselves from the rest, and discharge their Pieces with very gallant and good order, and with a trice put themselves againe into their places or flandings : this being done, the Pike-men came foorth and gaue the affault all together, with fo good order and confort, that it feemed vnto the Spaniards, that they did exceed all ther, with 10 good order and country the world : and if it were 10, that their stomacks and hardinesse were equall vnto their dexteritie, and number of people, it were an easie thing for them to conquer the dominion of all the world. If it so chance, that any Souldier should lacke in his Office, Souldiers are and not repayre to his place appointed, hee is straight-wayes punished very cruelly, which is the punished, occasion, that every one of them hath a care vnto his charge. This their Muster indured foure houres, and it was certified vnto the Spaniards, that the same day and houre it is dorfe in all Cities and Townes, throughout the whole Kingdome, although they are without suspection

Fine and twentie dayes after that the Infuanto had given the resolute answer vnto the Spanto 30 ands, came the Visitor thither: and the whole Citie went foorth to receive him, who entred in with fo great Maiestie, that if they had not knowne who hee was, they could not have beene perfuvaded, but that he had beene the King. The next day following, the Spaniards went to vi-lite him, for duties sake, as also for that hee had a desire to see them. They tound him in his lodging, where he began to make visitation of the Citie. In their Courts were an infinite number Manner of his of people, which came thither with Petitions and complayats, but in the Halls within, there Courts. was none but his Seruants and Sergeants. When that any came for to prefent his Petition, the Porter that was at the entrie made a great noyle, in manner of an O. est, for that it was a good way from the place whereas the Visitor did fit, then commeth foorth straight-wayes one of his Pages, and taketh the Petition, and carryeth it vnto him. At this time it was told him how 40 that the Castillas were there : hee commanded that they should enter, and talked with them a few words, but with great courtefie, and all was touching the Imprisonment of Limaton, without making any mention of their departure or tarrying. So after a while that hee had beheld them and their apparell, he tooke his leave of them, faying that by reason of the great businesses hee had in that visitation, he could not shew them any courtese, neither to vinderstand of them what their request and defire was, but gaue them great thankes for their courtefie inewed, in that they would come to vilite him.

Three dayes after the Visitor was come thither, the Infuanto departed for his owne house, with order that with all speed possible, hee should ordayne Ships wherein the Castillas should returne vnto the Philippinas. Likewise the same day, all those that were there assembled by the 30 order of the Vice-roy, departed vnto their owne houses. And the Spaniards were commanded for to flay vntill the full of the Moone, which should bee the twentieth of August, and that day they should take their leave of them: for on that day amongst them, it is holden for good to begin any thing what soeuer. The day before the departure of the Spaniards, there came some in behalfe of the Vice-roy to Parting cominuite them, and made them banquet in the order and fashion as at the first : alchough this (for plement, that it was at their departure) was more sumpruous, wherein was represented a Comedie, which was very excellent and good, whose argument was first declared vnto them. All the which they did represent so naturally, and with so good apparell and personages, that it seemed a thing to 6c passe in Act. There was not in this banquet the Vice-roy, but those Captaynes which were there the first time : and another Captayne, vnto whom was given the charge to bring the Spaniar de vnto Manilla, who was called Chantalay, a principall Captayne of that Prounce. When the banquet was ended, they were carryed with great companie from the Hall whereas the banquet was made, vnto the house of the Cogontoc, who was the Kings Treaturer, & dwelt there hard by Treature.

of whom they were maruelloufly well received with louing words and great courtefie: in faring that he hoped very shortly to see them againe, at such timeas they shall returne with Limabon, and that as then their friendship should be fully concluded, and would intreat with them in particular of other matters. This being done, he gaue vnto them a Prefent for to carrie vnto the Gouernour of Manilla in recompence of that which was fent vnto the Vice-roy: the Prefent was forty pieces of Silke and twentie pieces of Burate, a Litter Chaire and gilt, and two Qui. tassles of Silke, and a Horse. Likewise hee sent the like Present unto the Generall of the field, and to either of them a Letter in particular; these things were put in Chists which were very faire and gilt. Besides this he gaue other forty pieces of Silke of all colours for to bee parted a mongst the Captaines and other Officers that were at the siege of Limabon, with three hundred blacke Mantles and as many Quitafoles to be parted among ft the Souldiers. Besides all these, he gaue vnto the Friers each of them eight pieces of Silke, and vnto the Souldiers their compani-

This being done the Cogorroe tooke his leave of them, and willed them to goe and take leave and licence of the Vice-roy and the Viftor, that they might depart, for that all things were in a readineffe for their Voyage: the which commandement they did straight-wayes accomplish, being very well content and satisfied of the great sauours and courtefies, the which they received both of the one and the other: Likewise of the Torce. is Captaine Generall, whom they also did visit and tooke their leave.

Looke so many men as was to carrie them, there went fo many more to helpe them when they waxed wearie, befides foure and twentie that carried their Stuffe. There went alwayes before them a Harbinger for to prouide their Lodgings, and with him went a Pay-master, whose charge was to ordaine and proude men for to carrie their Litter Chaires , and to give them for their trauell that which is accustomed, and to pay all costs and charges spent by the Spaniard.

After that they departed from Anches, they made of two dayes lourney one, which was the 30 occasion that they came to Chinches in foure dayes. At their entring into the Citie they found a Seruant of the Infuanto, with order and commandement, that they should proceed followerds on their Journey, and not to flay in the Citie, but to goe vnto the Port of Tanjujo, whither he will come the next day following. They obeyed his commandement, and made so much haste that in two dayes they came vnto the Village of Tangon, whereas they had beene before, and particular mention made thereof. In the same Village they were lodged, well entertayned and had great good cheere : from thence they went in one day to Tanfufo, which was the first Port wheras they did dif-imbarke chemiclus, when as they came from the Ilands vnto that firme Land: the Iuitice of the Towne did lodge them in the same House whereas they were first lodged, and 40 did prouide for them of all things necessary and needfull, and that in abundance, till the comming of the Infuanto, which was within foure dayes after, for that hee could not come any fooner (although his defire was) for that it was very foule weather.

The third of September, the Infuanto fent and commanded the Spaniards that they should imbark themselues, for that it was that day the conjunction of the Moone (although at that time the thips were not fully in a readineffe.) They obeyed his commandement, and the Infuanto himfelfe went to the water fide, in whose presence came thither certaine Religious men of their manner, and after their fashion they made Sacrifice with certaine Prayers, in the which they craued of the Heauens to give good and faire weather, and a fure Voyage and favourable Seas vnto all those that faile in those ships. This Ceremony being done (which is a thing very much vsed in that Countrey) the Spaniards went vnto the Infuanto, who was there with great company and Maiestie: he entertayned them very friendly and with cheerefull words making an outward shew that he bare them great loue, and that their departure was vnto him a great griefe. Then he requested them to give him a remembrance of such things as was necessary and needfull for their

He then commanded to be brought thither Cates to eate and drinke, and gaue it them with his owne hands, as well the one as the other : he himfelfe did eate and drinke with them, which is the greatest fauour that can be shewed amongst them. The Banket being ended, he commanded them in his prefence to goe aboard their fhips, because that was a buckle day, and allo to 60 accomplish that which the Vice-roy had comanded, which was that heshould not depart from thence, vntill they had first seene them imbarked. The Spaniards obeyed the commandement, and tooke their leane of the Infuance, with great courtefie and reperence, and with outward shewes that they remained indebted for the great courteste & good will that they had received:

and therwith they departed to the waters fide, towards the Boat which was tarrying for them. As they passed by the Religious men (that before we spake of) they saw a great Table let and voon it a whole Oxe with his throat cut, and hard by the fame a Hogge and a Goate, and other things to be eaten: the which they had ordained for to make Sacrifice, which they doe vie in the

They being imbarked in the Boate, they were carried aboard the Admirall, which was the thip appointed for them to goe in : then presently they beganne to ftirre the thip, from one place vnto another with certaine Boats and Cables which they had there readie for the same purpose. The ship did not so soone begin to mooue, but the Religious men ashoare did beginne their Sato crifice, the which did indure vntill night, ending their Feafts and Triumphs in putting forth of the Citie, and upon their Gates many Cresses and Lights. The Souldiers shot off all their Harquabuffes, and the shippes that were in the Port shot off all their Artillerie, and on the shoare

a great novie of Drummes and Bels : all the which being ended and done, the Spaniardi went ashoare againe unto their Lodging but first the Infuanto was departed unto his owne House, with all the company that he brought with him. The next day the faid Infuente did inuite them vnto a Banket, which was as famous as any Infuentes fare-

which had beene made them unto that time. He was at the Banket himselfe, and the Captaine well Feast. Generall of all that Prouince. There was abundance of meates and many pretie deuises to passe away the time, which made the Banket to indure more then foure houres: the which being done. 20 there was brought forth the Present which the Infuanto did fend vnto the Governour of Manilla in returne of that which was fent to him. The Prefent was fourteene pieces of fike for the Gouernour of Manilla, and ten pieces for the Generall of the field : he also commanded to be given vnto the Friers each of them foure pieces, and vnto the Souldiers each of them two pieces, and unto their Seruants and Slaves certaine painted Mantels, and therewith hee tooke his leave of them very friendly, and gaue vnto them Letters, the which he had wrote vnto the Gouernout. and vnto the Generall of the field, answere vnto those, the which they had wrote vnto him. and faid that all things necessary for their departure was in a readinesse, with victuals for tenne Tenmoneths

Also that if in their Voyage it should so fall out, that any of the Chinose that went in their ships, an should doe vnto them any cuill; either abroad or at the llands : that the Gouernour thereof should punish them at his pleasure, and how that the Vice-roy will thinke well thereof : In conclusion, he said vnto them, that he hoped to see them there againe very shortly, and to returne

againe with Limaton, and shen he would supply the wants which now they lacked. The Spamiards did kiffe his hands, and faid; that they had received in courtefie more then they deferued, and that in all things, there did abound and not lack, that they remained greatly indebted vnto him for their friendship, and would give their King notice thereof, that whensoever occasion should be offered, to repay them with the like : and therewith the Infranto departed to his owne House, leaving in the company of the Spaniards five Captains, those which should go with them in their company to Sea, and also Omoncon and Sinfay who were that day in the Banket, with 40 the Habit and Enfigne of Loyting, for that the day before it was given vnto them by the Infinante.

Vpon Wednesday which was the fourteenth of September, the wind came faire, wherewith they hoyfed up their Sayles and went to Sea : at their departure there was at the waters fide the Influence and the Inflice of Chinches to fee them fayle, they fayled forwards directing their course towards a small Iland that was not farre off, with determination there to take water for their ships, for that it had in it many Rivers of very sweet water. Within a small space they arrived there, and it had a very faire and fure Port, wherein might ride in securitie a great Nauy of ships. All Thursday they were there recreating and sporting themselues, for that it was a pleasant Hand, and full of fresh Rivers. Vpon Friday being the sixteenth of September, the day being somewhat spent, they made saile and tooke Port source leagues from that place in another 50 Iland called Laule, for to put themselves in a new course, different and contrary vnto that which Laule. they tooke when they came vnto that Kingdome, for that the Chinoic had by experience proued, that in those monethes the winds were more favourable then in other monethes, and for Monsons. the most part North and North-east winds: all that night they remained in that Iland, and the next day following they fayled unto another Hand which was called Chantubo, not farre diffant chantubo. from that of Laulo. This Iland was full of little Townes, one of them was called Gantin, which Gantin. had fine Forts of Towers made of Lime and stone, very thicke and strongly wrought: they were all four f quare, and fixe fathome high, and were made of purpose for to receive into them all the people of those little Townes, to detend themselves from Rovers and Theeves that daily come on that Coast. They very much noted, that although this lland were rockie and fandie, yet was it tilled and fowed full of Rice, Wheate, and other Seeds and Graine. There was in it great store of Kine Kine and fowed full of Rice, Wheate, and other Seeds and Graine. There was in it great note or Aine Horie, and Horie, and they viderifood that they were gouerned, not by one particular man, to whom Common-Common the Common Commo they were subiect, neither by any other amongst themselues, nor of China, but in common:yet wealth. notwithstanding they lived in great peace and quietnesse, for that every one did content himselfe conjuration of those Spanish Fathers, which they carried with them in their ship. So presently when the night was come, God was so pleased that the storme ceased, and became in few houres very calme, although it endured but a while, for as they began to fet favle to nauigate towards the Port, and almost at the point to enter into the same, a new storme feized on them, and with fogreat force, that they were constrayned to returne vnto the Sea , for In feare to bee broken in pieces upon the shoare. The Chinos began anew to innocate the Deuils Innocation by

by writing, which is a way that they neuer let but doe answere them, as they did at this in- writing, flant, and were not diffurbed by the conjurations of the Fathers, yet notwithflanding they lyed in their answer, for that they faid, that within three dayes they should be within the Citie of Manilla, and after it was more then foure dayes.

In conclusion, having by the fauour of almightie God overcome all their travels by the Sea. and the necessitie of the lacke of water and victuals, they arrived at the defired Port the second day of February, Anno 1580. whereas they were received by the Governour, and of all the rest with great iov. &c.

And therefore I befought the King, that he would punish this decemer Tioneg, that the good instice that is vied in China might be knowne. In the time of the former Vice-roy, and Capado, Tiones and his companion Yanlion delinered this untruth. I afterward befought the King , that hee would cause all 40 the Papers of the cause of Tiones to be coppied out, and that be would send for the said Tiones with his processes before himselfe: And I my selfe saw the said Papers, and caused it to appeare that all was but lyes which the faid Tioneg had faid. Vpon Sunday in the afternoone they departed from this Iland, and fayled their course all that night, at the next morning they arrived at another Iland, called Corchu. which was twentie leagues from the Port of Tanfuso, from whence they departed. The Spaniards feeing what leiture they tooke in this their Voyage, they requested the Captaines to command the Mariners that they should not enter into so many Ports or Harbours. The Captaines anfwered and requested them to have patience, for that in making their Iournies as they did they doe accomplish and follow the order set downe by the Vice-roy and Insuanto, the Chingie are very fearefull of the Sea, and men that are not accustomed to ingulfe themselves too farre.

Neere vnto this Iland there was another formewhat bigger, which is called Anem, wholly to dispeopled and without any dwellers, yet a better Countrey and more profitable for to few and reape then that of Corchu. The Spaniards being at an Anchor there, vnderstood by the Chinese that in times past it was very well inhabited, vnto the which arrived a great Fleet belonging to the King of China, and by a great florme were all cast away vpon the same: the which lose and the Aing of Commy anderstood by another Generall that had the Guard of that Coast, suspecting that the dwellers thereof had done that flaughter, hee came to the shoare and flue many of the Inhabitants, and carried all the rest in their ships vnto the sirme Land, who afterwards would neuer returne thither againe, although they gave them licence after that they vinderstood the truth of that successe: so that vnto that time it remained dispeopled, and full of wilde Swine. of the brood that remained there at fuch time as they were slaine and carried away as you have 20

This lland and the rest adjoyning thereunto (which are very many) haue very excellent and fure Ports and Hauens, with great store of fish. These Ilands endured vntill they came vnto a little Gulfe, which is fine and fortie leagues ouer, and is fayled in one day, and at the end thereof is the Port of Cabite, which is neere vnto Manilla. So when that winde and weather ferued their turne, they departed from the lland of Ancon, and failed till they came vnto another lland called Plon, where they vinderstood by a ship that was there a fishing, how that the Rouer Limabon was escaped in certaine Barkes, which he caused to bee made very secretly within his Fort. of fuch Timber and Boards as remained of his ships that were burnt, the which was brought in by night by his Souldiers, on that fide of the Fort which was next vnto the River, and were 20 not discourred by the Castilla, which were put there with all care and diligence to keepe the mouth that come in to helpe them. And towards the Land there whereas he might escape, they were without all suspection (they were so strong) and did not mistrust that any such thing should be put in vre, as afterwards did fail out, the which was executed with fo great policie and craft. that when they came to viderstand it, the Rouer was cleane gone, and in safeguard, calking his Barkes at the Iland of Tocaotican, the better for to escape and saue himselfe, and they said, that it was but eight dayes past that he fled. With this newes they all received great alteration, but in especiall Omoncon and Sinfay. After they had remained three weeks in that Harbour detayned with a mighty North-wind, that neuer calmed night nor day in all that time. The eleventh day of October two hours before 40 day, they fet tayle and went to Sea. Sixteene leagues from the Port, failing towards the South. they discourred a mightie Iland very high Land, which was called Tangarruan, and was of three fcore leagues about, all inhabited with people like vnto those of the Ilands Philippinas, Vpon Sunday in the morning being the feuenteenth day of October, they discouered the Iland of Ma-From the Phi. mila, of them greatly defired, they fayled towards the Hand that they follong defired to fee, and ippinas to the came thither the twentie eight day of October, as aforefaid. So that from the Port of Tanfofo, which is the first Port of Chima, till they came vnto the lland of Manilla, they were fine and fortie dayes, and is not in all tul two hundred leagues, which may be made with reasonable wea-

I could have here added two other Voyages of Franciscans, to China, the one by Peter de Alfaro, 10 and other three of his Order, 1579. the other 1582. by Ignatio, &c. both written at large by Mendo-Za. But I haften to our Iesuites exacter Relations. Only I will conclude thu Storie with Alfaros returne from China to the Philippinas; and his Relation of their Wich-crafts vied in a Tempeft then happening : after that two Letters mentioning English Ships on that Coast.

But it so fell out, as they were going alongst the Coast of the lland for to enter into the Port of Manilla, and being within fine leagues of the entry thereof, vpon a sudden there arose the North-wind with so great furie, and caused so great a Sea, that they found themselues in a great deale more danger then in the other storme past, in such fort that they sponed before the winde with their fore fayle halte Mast high, shaking it selfe all to pieces, and in every minute of an houre readie to be drowned. The Chinos for that they are Superfittious and Witches, beganne 69 to innocate and call upon the Deuill, for to bring them out of that trouble (which is a thing commonly vied among it them, at all times when they find themselues in the like perplexitie) also they doe request of him to thew them what they should do to bring themselves out of trouble. But when the Spaniards understood their dealings, they did disturbe them that they should Xatai thirteene yeeres, in Xambalu the chiefe Citie; that the King thereof 69 was mighty, and had in his Empire one thousand and fiftie Cities, some very populous; that he had often feene the King, with whom no man speakes but by a Supplication, nor is answered but by an Eunuch. And asked how hee had accesse thither, he faid, he being a Merchant initayned also the person of the Embassadour of the King of Cargar.

and being detained in the first Citie by the Magistrate, he shewed his Commission, and Poste was prefently fent to the King, who returned in a moneth, riding ninety or an hundred courtes a A Courte or day, with change of Hories; bringing him Letters of admission. They had (he faid to the lefaite in another conference) many Temples, and Images painted and grauen, and Crucifixes which they with great denotion worshipped: many Priests, much reuerenced, each hauing his owne Church; to whom they offer their gifts. built and repaired; they ware blacke clothes, and on holidayes red; with Caps like the lessites;

Xauerius addeth, that in Caximir he heard of many Christians in Rebat, a Kingdome adioyning to Catai, with Churches, Priefts, and Bishops. These reports Clayth Trigantius) the Saracens made, either of purpose to deceive, after their wont; or were deceived by like show of Holies in Images, Lamps, Altars, Priests vestments, Processions, Singings, and the like, which the Deuill hath imitated among the Chinois like to our (Romillo) Rites.

Thele reports caused the lefuites in India to thinke of fending one of their Society into those parts. Pimenta the Father Vilitour fent notice thereof to the Pope, and to the King of Spaine. who tooke Order with the Vice-roy to be aduifed herein by Pimenta. Benedictus Goez 2 brother of that Society and Coadjutor to Xauerins, was thought hit for that deligne, having the Persian tongue. In the yeere therefore 1602, he Ind. 1.36.24. went to Agra, where Echebar applauded his purpose, and gaue him foure hundred Crownes for his iourney, besides a thousand Rupias hee had already spent. He changed his habite, and dis-

30 guised himselfe like an Armenian Merchant, and so went to Labor, calling himselfe Branda Abe. dula, whither he came on the eight of December. He went to the house of Iohn Galisco a Venetian, and there provided himselfe of necessaries, wearing his haire and beard long, and Leo Grimone a Greeke, well skilled in Turkish and Persian, undertaking to be his companion, with Demetrius another Greeke, and Isaac an Armenian. Furnished with divers writings and a Catalogue ot moueable Feasts till An. 1610. he set forth An. 1603, the fixth of Ianuarie from his Superiour, and in Lent after from Labor, with the companie of Metchants which got from the Mbools to Cafcar, almost fine hundred men, with many Camels and carriages,

In a moneths journey they came to a Citie called Ather; in the Province of Lahor; and after Ather. fitteene dayes, passed a River a slight shot broad, where they slayed sine dayes, being told of 40 theeues in great number at hand. Two moneths after they came to another Citie called Pallann, Pallann, where they rested twentie dayes. Thence they going to another small Towne, met with a certaine Anchorite a stranger, by whom they understood that thirtie dayes off was a Citie named Capherstam, into which the Saracens are not permitted entrance, and if they enter are put to Carberstam. death. But Ethnike Merchants are admitted their Citie, yet not their Temples. Hee faid, that the Inhabitants of that Region goe to Church all of them in blacke; their Countrey fertile, and plentifull of Grapes. Hereby Goes supposed that they were Christians. In the place where they found this stranger, they stayed other twentie dayes. And because the way was infested with Theeues they received of the Lord of the place a Conuoy of foure hundred Souldiers. In five and twentie dayes they came from hence to a place called Ghideli, all which way their carriages Ghideli, 50 went at the foot of a Hill. The Merchants with Armes on the tops of the Hill made fearth for Theeues, which vie to throw itones from thence on the Paffengers, except thus preuented. In this place the Merchants pay Tribute. Being affaulted by Theeues many were wounded, and they had much adoe to faue their lives and goods. Benedict escaped by flight into the Woods. At night they came againe together, and anoyded the Theenes. Atter other twentie dayes iourney they came to Cabul, a Citic and Mart frequent, not yet having paffed the Morels Do- Cabul, minions. Here they stayed eight dayes : for some of the Merchants would goe no further, and others durft not, being fo few. In this Mart the Sifter of the King of Cafcar, by whose Domimon they were to palle to Catay, happened on the Carauan. The Kings name was Maffamet Can; this his Sifter was Mother to the King of Cotan , and called Agehanem (Age is a title gi-60 uen by the Suraceus to those which have beene on Pilgrimage at Mecca, whence she now returned.) Being destitute of prouision for her journey, shee demanded aide of the Merchants, promifing to reffore all faithfully with encrease when they were comne to her Kingdome. Goes thought it ant occasion to procure the friendship of another King, his Mogoll Patents now wearing out. Hee lent her therefore on fale of fome goods fixe hundred Crownes, refuing

Leo Grimane the Priest, wearied with the Mirole much visua disconfined of the lourney, went no further, and Demetrius stayed in this Citie on merchandia. fing affaires. Goes held on with Ifaac the Armenian , in the companie of other Merchants, which gaus likelihood of better fecuritie. The first Citie they came at was called Ciaracar, in which place is great flore of Iron. Here Goes was not a little troubled, the Mogels Seale in these his borders being neglected, which all this way hitherto had freed him from payment Paramethe ex- of Cultomes. The people of this Region hath vellow haite on head and beard like the Low-Country-men, and dwell in divers Villages. Ten daves after, they came to a place called Gialalabath, where the Bramanes exact Customes granted them by the King Bruarate. After other fifteene dayes they came to Talban, where Civil broiles detayned them a moneth; the Calcians rebelling and endangering the wayes. Hence they passed to Cheman. Vnder Abdulaban King of Samarban, Burgania, and Bacharate, and of other neighbouring Kingdomes, is a small Towne, the Captaine whereof sent to the Merchante to containe themselues within the walls, the Calcians insessing all without. They answered that they would pay their Cultomes, and pursue their iourney by night. But hee forbad them. faying, that the Rebels had no Hories as yet, which if they could take from the Carauan, they 26 would proue more mischieuous: much better it were, if they would ioyne with him to repell them. Scarcely were they comne to the walls, when the rumour came of the Calcians comming: at which newes the Captaine and his ranne away. The Merchants erected a sudden fortification of their packes, and carried into the same great store of stones to serue their turnes if Arrowes failed. The Calcians perceiuing that, fent a meffage to the Merchants, that they should feare nothing, for they would accompanie and defend them. They durft not trust them. but resolued to flee to the next Wood, the Theenes taking out of the packes what they pleafed, and then calling them forth, and permitting them with their emptied packes to enter the emptie walls. Benedict loft nothing but a Horse, for which also hee after received Cotton clothes. They lived within the walls in great feare. But at that time a great Captaine, named to Olobet Ebadascan, fent his Brother out of the Bucharate Region to the Rebels, which caused them to permit the Merchants to goe freely: in all which journey the Rere was vexed with Pilferers. Foure of them fet vpon Goes, to escape whom hee threw amongst them his Person Turbant, whereof they making a foot-ball, hee meane while fet spurres to his Horse and ouertooke his companie. Eight dayes after with a tedious passage they came to Badascian, called Tengi, which signi-

great River. The Inhabitants with a companie of Souldiers set vpon the Merchants, and tooke from Goes three Horses, which he after redeemed with gifts. Here they stayed ten dayes, and open field, and were besides affaulted by Theeues. Ten dayes after they arrived at Serpanil, a place quite forfaken. They climbed into a high Hill, called Sacrobma, whither the ftrongest

Horses were only able to passe, the rest going about. Two of Goes his Horses halted, and had much adoe to ourtake their fellowes. In twentie dayes journey comming to the Province

Sarcil, they there found many neighbouring Villages. After two dayes flay for refreshing, they in two dayes more came to the foot of a Hill, termed Ciccialith, which they alcended, thicke co-

uered with Snow, wherewith many were frozen, and Goes was in great danger. For the Snow held them fixe dayes; after which they came to Tangetar, which belongs to the Kingdome of Cascar. There Isaac the Armenian fell from the banke of a great River into the water , and

Hiarchan the Seat Royall of the Kingdome of Cafcar, hath great refort of Merchants, and is also well flored with variety of merchandise. The Carauan of Cabul here ends their Voyage: Catay-Carauan and from thence to Catay is a new one furnished, the Captainship whereof the King sellethat a great price, and conferreth on the Captaine Regall power over the Merchants thorow all that way. It was a yeeres space before they could all bee ready to so long and dangerous a journey, which required many persons. Neither is it performed enery yeere, but by them onely which know they shall be admitted into Catay. There is no better merchandise (as before is faid) then 60 a certaine shining Marble, which wee are wont to call Iasper, for want of a fitter word; which the King of Catay buyeth at a great price; and what hee leaueth they may fell to others at exceeding rates. Of it they make divers ornaments for Veffels, Garments, Girdles, with leaves and flowers artificially engrauen. The Chinois call it Tufee; and of it are two kinds, one more precious which is taken out of the River Cotan, not farre from the Citie Royall, in manner as the Diners fish for Pearles, and is brought out like thicke flints; the other meaner is digged out of Hils, and is fawed into broad stones aboue two Ells wide, after fitted to the Voyage. This Hill is twentie dayes Iourney from that Citie Royall, and is stiled Cansangui Cascio, that is, The stonie Mountayne. They are thence taken with incredible labour, both for the desertnesse of the place, and the inexorable hardnesse of the Marble, which they say is forced with fire made thereon to yeeld: the license also to take it, is deere fold by the King to some one Merchant, who purchafeth the Monopoly; and when they goe thither they carrie a yeares prouision for the Labourers, which in that foace returne not.

Goez visited the King, whose name is Mahamethin, and presented him with a Watch, a Glasse Mahamet Con and other European Commodities, which made him very welcome. Hee would not at first tell King of Cascare him of going to Catay, but only spake of the Kingdome of Cialis East-ward from thence, and Cialis, procured his grant thereto, affitted by the Sonne of his Sifter the Pilgrime Queene before metitioned. Sixe moneths pailed, and Demetrin one of his old Societie which stand at Cabul, came thither. At that time by the Kings License one of the Merchants was stilled Emperour as in ieft, to whom the other Merchants after the cultome gaue Presents, which Demetrita refusing; was in danger to be imprisoned and beaten (for so large is his power) had not Benedict interceded and by a gift compounded the businesse. Theenes also brake into the House and setting a Sword to the Armenians breit terrified him from crying; but our Brother Demetrius hearing, 20 cried out and fearred them away. Benedict was gone to the King of Quotans Mother for payment of his Debt : his Residence was ten dayes Journey thence, so that he spent a moneth therein before his returne. In this space the Saracens raised a report that he was dead, slaine by their Priefts for refuling their holies. Now because he dyed intestate, they sought to seize on his goods, which was very troublesome to Isaac and Demetrius, both for defence of the goods, and loffe of their Friend, which redoubled their joy at his returne with plentie of that Marble, and hee in thankfulneffe gaue much Almes.

On a day as he was eating with other Saracens, one came in armed, and fetting his Sword to his breft, charged him to muoke * Mahomet. Meane-whiles one Agrafi of that Countrey was named Captaine of the future Carauan, who inuited our Brother to his House (having heard well of him) to a Feast, wherein they had Muficke after their manner. At the end, hee defired his company to Cate, which lie much defired, 60 but had learned by experience how to deale with the Saracens, and would be intreated, that he might seeme to doe, rather then receiue, a Fauour. The Captaine vseth the Kings mediation, who defired him to accompany the Carasan Baffa, which he accepted vpon condition of his Carasan Baffa, Letters Patents for all that way. His Cabul companions were herewith offended, as loth to lofe. They faid that thele people were perfidious, and would denoure him and his: nor was fameplaces, their feare caussesse, for many of the Natiues had told them, that those three Armenians (lo they called all these three Christians) as soone as they were out of the walles would be flaine. This terrified Demetrins from going further, who also diffwaled Goee but in vaine, saying, he 30 would not disappoint the hopes of so many, the Archbishop of Goa, and the Vice-roy to lose his expences, but would adventure his life in the Defigne.

Hee prouided ten Horles for his Carriages, and for his fellow, having another at home. The Baffa was gone to his houle five dayes lourney thence to make all readie, and thence fent to

Caracathai, the first place of the Tartars Conquest. F. Bacon, Rub

In this way the Defert is passed called Caracathai, that is, The blacke Land of the Cathayan; in which they fay the Catayans stayed long. In this Towne they stayed fifteene dayes for other Merchants, and then departing went to Oitograch Gazo, to Cafciani, to Dellai, to Saregabedall to Voan, and after to Cucia, a small Towne where they stayed a whole moneth to retresh their bealts, which by the irkiomnesse of the wayes, and weight of the Marble, and want of Barley 10 were almost spent. Here the Priests demanded of Goez, why in their Solemne Fast (Lent) he fasted not, and almost forced him in hope of some Largeste or Fine. After they were gone hence in fine and twentie dayes they came to the Citie Cialie, which was little, but well fortified. This Countrey was gouerned by a bale Sonne of the King of Cafeer, who hearing that Goez professed Country was gouerned by a one-some or the Anigot Coper, who nearing that Orec proteins another Religious, began to terrifie him, faying, it was a bold part for a man of another profel, from the profel from the profession of the read his Letters Patents he was pacified, and with a Present was made also a friend. One night disputing about their Law, with the Priests and Learned men, he sent for Benedict into the Palace (whereupon suspition arose of some ill intent being at so vnseasonable a time) hee went and being commanded to dispute, with force of Argumeurs silenced the Aduersaries. The Vice-roy 20 alway protected him, approuing his Sayings, and concluding that the Christians were the true Misermans, saying, that his Progenitors had professed the same Law. After the Disputation hee made him a Banquet, and caused him to lye that night in the Palace, so that Isaac was weeping at his returne, and almost in despaire to see him. In this Citie they stayed three moneths. For the Caranan Baffa would not depart without a great company (it being so much more gaine to him) nor fuffer any man to goe before. Goez wearied with this tedious stay and chargeable expence, with a Gift obtayned leaue of the Viceroy, the Carauan and Captaine being against it. He then intended to proceed from Cialis, when the Merchants of the former Caravan returned from Casp. Thele faining an Emballage (after their wont) had pierced into the Royall 30 Seat of Casp, and hauing converted in the same Palace of Strangers with our (Isluites) repor-

After this they were admitted entrance within the walles, and in one day came to Societa Citie, where they heard much of Pequin, and other names knowne; fo that now hee was out of all doubt that Catay and China differed only in name. All the way from Cialis to the borders of China, is infamous with incurfions of the Tartars: and therefore Merchants paffe these places with great feare, fearthing by day from the Neighbour Hils whether there bee any out-rode of Tariars, and if they judge the wayes secure they travell by night with silence. In the way they found many Saracens milerably flaine, having adventured to goe alone : although the 60 Tarters seldome kill the Natiues, saying, they are their Slaues and Herdsmen, from whom they take away their flocks of Sheepe, and Herds of Bullocks. They eate no Wheate, Barley, nor Pulle, faying, it is food for beafts, not men. They feed only on flesh, not sparing Horses, Mules, Camels, and yet are faid to live one hundred yeares.

The Saracen Nations bordering on these parts of China, might easily by the Chinais bee subdued, as being not warlike men, if the Chinois cared to enlarge their Dominions. 40 to Father Matthew to Pequin, to acquaint him with his comming, and gaue the Letters to certaine Chinais: but because he knew not the China name wherewith Ours were called, and the Region where they reided, and writin European Chatacters, thole Chinois could not deliver them. The next yeare at Easter, he sent againe by a Saracen Fugitive (for they may neither goe in nor out without the Magistrates leque) and writ to them of his Voyage and state, defining them to take some course to tree him from that Prilon, that he might returne by Sea into Indut. . the Portugall way. The Kather had long before learned by Letters from India, of this intended Journey, and yeerely expected him, and made much enquirie of those counterfeit Embashadors, but could not till now heare of him. They were now therefore much joyed to read his Letters, which in November following came to their hands, and one was prefently fent, to bring him by Novem 1606

50 fome meanes to Pequin, not one of the Societie left one stranger should hinder another, but a Papill which lately admitted, had not yet entred his probation, named Iohn Fernandus a wife young man, with a companion, a new Conuert, skilled in those parts. And if hee could not bring him thence by the Magistrates leave or by other $oldsymbol{A}$ rts, he should stay there with him, and write to the Company, who by their friends would procure him passage.

This fourney was vnreasonable in the hardest of Winter, being almost four emoneths Journey from Pequin. Yet would not Father Matthew deferre any longer, which if he had done, Goez would have beene dead before his comming. Hee and two others of the Societie writ to him. and his Servant ranne from him at Singhan, the Mother Citie of the Province of Scianficarrying away halfe their prouision. At the end of March, 1607, he yet made shift to get to Socen, and found Goez lying on his Death-bed, who had dreamed that one of our company would come thither the next day, and fent I face into the Market who brought Ferdmandes to him. Having re-ceiued the Letters, he brak into a Nune dimittis, as seeming to have ended his Pilgrimage. Eleuen daves after Goez dyeth, not without inspition of Poylon from the Saracens. They had perpetual Spies to watch and catch what he left, which they did most barbarously execute, and amongst the rest his Journall was lost which he had written in very small Letters. They sought for it to preuent payment of Debts there entred. They would have buried him like a Saracen, but Have and Ferdinand excluded them and butied him, with a recitall of the Rofarie, in defect of other to Bookes. Thus died Benedict Goez, a man of great parts, which had after his admission done great fernice to the Societie (howfoeuer he was not a Prieft) much esteamed by the Great Mosell whom he auerted from the Warre of India. He diffwaded before his death that Ours should not trust the Saracens, nor adventure this way, as vnprofitable and dangerous. And although hee dved without Confession in so many yeeres, yet he was cheerefull in the mercie of God, and professed that his confeience did not accuse him of matters of any moment. By a Tartarian custome they divide the goods of the deceased among st them all, and therefore bound Isaac threatning to kill him if he turned not Mahametan; but Ferdinand put vp a Supplication to the Vice-roy at Cancen, who subscribed that the Gouernour of Sosen should examine the businesse. He first was fauourable, but corrupted by bribes threatned to whip him, and held a him in Prison three dayes. But he fold his Garments for want of Money, and continued the Suit fine moneths, not being able at first to conferre with I face for want of Language, I face only vttered a few Portugall words , and the Indge had thought they had spoken in the Canton Tongue. At last, Ferdinand learned to speake Persian, and was able to conferre with him. The Saracens pleaded that Ferdinand was a Chinese by his countenance, the other a Saracen . hee apfwered that his Mother was a Chinese, whom he resembled. But nothing moued the Judge more Tweeter that his armeter was a committee, and then that he was an enemy to their Religion, and pulling a piece of Porke out of his fleeue, they both did eate it; whereupon with laughter of the Astembly, the Saracess abhomina ted both, spitting at the Armenian, and leaving the Suit, faying, that the Armenian was deluded by the Massieurney. China-coozener. For in all the way to prevent offence, Benedict and Iface had abstayned from 20 Porke. And thus all was by the Indges sentence restored to Ferdinand which had beene Bene-dett: but nothing was found, save Marble pieces which had beene hidden in the ground, which was fold, and yeelded to pay their Debts and prouision for their Journey to Pegnin, whither both of them came. They brought a faire gilded Croffe-Picture and the Charters of three Kines. Cascar, Quotas and Cialis, which are referred at Pequin for a memoriall. Isaac related all this Storie to Father Matthew youn credit of his memorie, and having flayed a moneth, was fent the wonted way to Amacae; where being well entertayned, hee in layling thence to India, was taken by Hollanders, and loft both goods and libertie. But the Portugals of Malaca redeemed him, and he held on his course to India, and hearing of his Wiues death, went not to the Mogols Countrey, but flaid at Chant, and is now at the writing hereof aline.

Orafmuch as we have failed so lately from the Philippinas to China, and backeagaine with our Friers, and have given you a lefuits Land Iourney, we thought it worthy our labour alfo to launch into the deepe of their Nauigations, and to honour the Iefuits, (to whom in the following parts of this Hiltorie we are so in-63 debted) with observing their Observations of Iapon, and the intercourse thereof with China; and from it (as the greatest and most glorious Easterne Jesuiticall

Letter of Xani-

Wee came by Gods grace in August to Iapon, on the Feast day of the Assumption of the Virgin Matie. hauing let forth from Malaca on Midsommer day, The Master of the Ship was a Chinese, which had Baung set porto from reasona or requirements, and creative of the whole a contice, motioned vaderation that office to the Capaque of Malaca, and layled professorship till the Mafter altered by minde (at those Batharians are vsauly inconstant) and layered one amongst the Ilands in the may, 20 This troubled vs in two respects principally, but for the last of the season which God offered, and which Deuillno. being pass, were were compelled to winter on the Coasit of China; and againe, because in the same this procedy the was carried an idoll of the Denill, to which the Martners in sight and spine for safety the same carried an idoll of the Denill, to which the Martners in sight and spine for safety the same carried an idoll of the Denill, to which the Martners in sight and spine for safety the same carried an idoll of the Denill, to which the Martners in sight and spine for safety the same carried an idoll of the Denill, to which the Martners in sight and spine for safety the same carried an idoll of the Denill, to which the Martners in sight and spine safety the same carried an idoll of the same carried and the same carried and the same carried and same manner of their Countrey. They also by lots demanded answers thereof, touching their Voyage; which (as they fard and beleened) were sometimes good, sometimes bad. A hundred leagues from Malaca, holding our course to China, wee stayed at an Iland, where after many Ceremonies the Deuill was consulted what fortune wee should have, who answered, very prosperous: Whereupon with great alacritic wee set [ayle: they worsbrpped the Idoll placed in the poope, with Candles burning and incense of sweet Wood; wee trusted in God the Creator of Heauen and Earth, and in his Sonne our Lord Ielus Christ, desiring to carrie his Religion into those parts. When wee were under sayle, they demanded of the Deuill, whether 30 this Ship Should returne from lapon to Malaca : the answer was made by the lot-casters, that it Should goe to lapon, but not returne to Malaca; which made them alter their mindes, thinking it better to winter in China, and to deferre the voyage to Iapon till the next yeere. You may well thinke bow it griened vs, that the Denill must bee consulted touching our course. After this we came to Cauchinchina, where two aduer le things bappened, Emanuel Sina our companion, by the rolling of the Ship in the troubled Sea fell into the fine, almost dead with the bruise and water, but in few dayes reconcred : which before it was ended, the Masslers Daughter with the tile rolling of the Ship fell into the Sea, and in all our sights was drowned, and much lamentation followed. The Barbarians presently sugar to pacific the Denill, and without rest all the day and night, tooke paines to kill Birds to the Idoll, and to fet diffices (of meate before it,) and by lots consulted to know the cause of that missortune. The answer was, that if Emanuel 40 which first fell in, had dyed, the Girle had not fallen into the Sea. Ton fee in what danger the Denill hereby badcast us, if our Lord bad not restrained his race, orc.

they purposed to Winter, notwithstanding all our intreaties and exposmulations : but I know not how on a sudden they would goe to Chincheo, on the fine Coast. And when wee were almost there, the Master Lapon Paul had was certified by some which sayled by, that there was flore of Pirats at Chincheo; whereupon the winde beene in India, being faire for Iapon, and croffe for Canton, they brought ws to Cangoxuma, the Country of our and was Baptis friend Paul, whose friends wied we winkindly. There wee frent fortee dayes in learning the Elements of the Iaponian tongue with great labour, and began to publish the Decalogue, and other beads of Christian learning, which Paul bad accurately connerted into bis owne Language; and wee purposed peedily to 50 Print them, whereby the knowledge of Christ is further and more easily founded, oc. The occasion of his journey thither, heesheweth in another Letter, that some Portugals being lodged in a House possessed by Deuils, compassed the sayd bouse with Crosses, and that there was great hope of good to bee done in those parts: whereupon, notwithstanding those Seas are very tempestnow, and much insested with Pirats, hee resolved to one shither.

The tempest being asswaged, wee came in few dayes to the Port of Canton in China. And there

The Portugals of those times, were very desirous of Trade with the Chinois, who on the other ", oc. fide were very suspitious of them, both by that which they saw of their Ships and Ordnance,

That course continued divers yeeres, till the Chinois growing lesse fearesu's, granted resolutes, them in the greater lland a little Peninsula to dwell in. In that place was an Idoll, which still remayneth to bee seene, called Ama, whence the Peninsula was called Amacao, that is, Amac APeninsulan Bay. This Rocke indeed rather then Peninsula, began to bee inhabited not onely of Portugals, compasted

And as gayne brought Merchants thither, so the care to keepe and to get soules, brought thither Priests and Religious men, and the Portugall Kings priviledged the place with the tytle of a Citie, and made it a Bishops See. There the lesistes fixed a residence, and first ere-Red a Church to our Ladie, and after that divers others. For it seemed convenient to their defignes, the world of China lying to the North, the Molaceas to the South, Iapon, and the Philip-

They came in July to Sancian an Iland, thirtie leagues from Canton, being much indangered by the Rockes in the way, and there hee fayd Maffe ouer the place where Xauier had beene buryed; and easily obtayined admission into Canton. Michael Ruegerius, an Italian of the Kingdome of Naples, was sent, and came to Amacao, in Iuly, Anno 1579, and applyed himselfe to learne the language which the Courtiers in China vie. and is common thorow all China, (the Provinces having otherwise peculiar languages) also to learne to reade and write their Characters, which are as many as words. That language was verie hard both in it felfe, and for the want of teachers. For thole Christian Chinois which lived at Amacao, in habit of Europeans, & those which came thither in Merchandise, were almost as ignorant of the Court tongue, as of the Portugall : and though they vnderstood it, yet they could not well pronounce it. And for the Characters, they know those which belonged to their Merchandifing and common vie. Labor improbus omnia vincit. With pictures his teacher was often for-Portugall trade ced to supply characters. And whereas the Portugals twice a yeere in the Mart feafon have acceffe to Canton, about I anuarie and I une, he went with them thither. These Marts continue two moneths each of them, or longer, and have beene the onely meane Rugg,firft enof admitting the lefastes into China, by the industrie and pietie of other Peringals. Ruggerius therefore with his merchandile also adventured with them, and found an impediment at firft. Another lesiste which before had gone thither had converted a youth, Disciple to a Priest, and closely conu yed him to Amacao. His Master made complaint and procured the Magistrate to fetch him backe by force, to the great trouble of Ours, and feeming difcredit as if by ill arts they had feduced Children from their Parents, which is a thing at Canton, both vivall and Capi-Ruggerium freed tall. By this meanes many of those which came to Amacao, began to 40 shake off their Ethnike darknesse, and the deuout Portugals erected a House for the Catechumen (new Converts to bee instructed in Christian mysteries before Baptisme) where hee instructed them, and more freely followed his China studies, by helpe of Interpreters. And to that purpose hee instituted the Fraternitte or fellowship of lesus in our House, with lawes fitting to New Converts; forbidding any Portugals to bee therein admitted, but onely

The Vice-roy of Canton Province is one of the chiefe Vice-royes, because his Province is farre Vice-roy of from Pequin, and coasting on the Sea; infested therefore with often Piracies, especially Iaponian, Conton Hereupon the Canton Vice-roy exercifeth iurifdiction also in the adioyning Province Quantifi, Quantifi if occasion require to leuie more Souldiers, although Quamfi hath also a Vice-roy of her owne. For this cause the Canton Vice-roy resident not at Canton, but at Scianquin, a Citie bordering Scianaile. on both Prounces. At this time Cinfui borne in the Prounce of Fuquien, was Vice-roy, a co-

10 uetous man, who to get money of the Amachons fent thither his Writ for the Bishop and Captaine to come to his Gourt, vaderstanding that they commanded all there. They thought it not agreeing to the Portugall honour to goe, nor to their fafety to neglect his fummons, and therefore by Valignanus his aduife, Ruggerius was fent in the name of the Bishop, to see if hee could get a perpetuall Station in that Kingdome, and Penella the Auditor, in place of the Captaine. And to obtaine his fauour, that he should not disturbe their merchandising, a Present was feet him at publike charge, of fuch things as the Chinois most regard, as waved garments of filke Dat maske (which the Chinois then knew not how to make) Crystall Glaffes, and other things valued at 1000. Duckets. The Vice-roy received them in great pompe, more to terrifie then henour them; but at the fight of the Presents (the scope of his purpose) hee became gentle and courteous, and decreed that shey might love in his Port in manner as hitherto they had done, obeying courteous, and occess that Magistrates: which words seeme formall, the Portugals living there after their owne Lawes ; and other Nations, yea the Chinois themselues which are Christians in habite and religion, being fubiect to them. The other Chmois are fubiect to common Officers fent thither from Canton. The Vice-roy would have nothing, but hee would pay for it, which heedid because bribes and gifts are there sewerely punished : but privily hee sent to them , that Bribe wickes.

Ruggeriss desired that which he came for, saying, he learned the China Tongue and read their Bookes, which he seemed much to like, and gave him hopes at his next returne to obtayine it. And having given them weight of Silver; with provision, great attendance of Magistrates and Souldiers, much Musicke of Hoybuckes and other Instruments, hee sent them pompously thorow the publike streets of the Citie to their hipping. So weighty is hope of gaine. In August had comne (as they vie) Portugall thips to Amacas, in them of our Society not a few, and an mongst others, Father Matthew Ricins, woo brought with him an artificiall Watch from the Mat. Ricins, Provinciall for the advancing this China businesse. About that time the Captaine of Amacao having made readie thole things which the Vice-roy prescribed, sent backe the Auditor to Seiauguin, but Ruggerius vnfeafonably (or feafonably rather as the event manifested) fell ficke; yet fent word to the Vice-roy that he could not come to him as he had promifed : and withall, that he had a Clocke-watch which did without any striker found the houres, a thing euen still of Clocke-watch much wonder to the Chinois. Hearing of his sicknesse, hee seemed forrowfull , but this Watch

40 awaked him, and caused him to make his Secretarie presently write a Licence for the Father to come to him with that admirable worke, as foone as he should bee able. When this Chatter was read at Amacao, it contayned more; for the Fathers were musted by publike Authoritie to erect a publike and private house in that Citie, which caused great 10y. But the Visitor was afraid as vet to fend Ruggerius, as not furnished fully for that deligne; the beginning of a thing being the greatest part. The other lesuites perswaded, and Father Francis Passus bound for lagen, a man well qualified for gouerning was fent, and Ruggerim adioyning his Colleague. Ricim was made Governour of the Colledge of the Catechament, and appointed to follow the other two, if occafion ferued. And if the bulinesse proceeded not, Passas was to proceed to Iapon, and the other two to attend better opportunitie in their China bulineffe.

Those two lesuites went to Sciauquin, and offered their Watch with a triangle Glasse pre- lesuites siste Thole two legities went to occasions, and offered their voteth with a triangle chain piece distillation, fenting variety of colours, a thing admired of the Chinais as a precious lewell: both which thing comments of the com were exceeding welcome to the Vice-roy, who affigned them a contenient flation in a Suburbian Temple, called Thien-min-zn, whither he often fent them divers viands, and often admitted them in Vifitation to his Palace. There they abode foure or fine moneths, often visited in that Temple by principall men and Magistrates of the Citie, and were in hope of their perpetuall continuance, hauing obtayned licence of the Secretarie also for Ricins to come, who was preparing for the Voyage, when all was diffurbed on a fudden, the Vice-roy being I know not for what fault, deprined of his place. He fearing least in the chiefe Citie the presence of Strangers might furcher hurt him, dismissed the lesnies fo, as hee permitted etem to stay at Canton, 6c commanding the Magistrate there to provide them a house and ground. The Chinois call that Citie Quam-chen which the Portugals (by the name of the Prounce deluded) call Camen. They Quam-chen the well knew that his commission was of no force, yet they went, and the Haitan, to whom the true name of Charter was directed was absent, and no regard being had thereof, they were not permitted to Cantas. aftend the bankes, and therefore with griefe returned to Amacao. Iapmian Embaffage to the Ed dit Hen.

Auing mentioned that Embaffage of Isponian Kings fent to the Pope by procurement of the lesuies, out of their writings I have heere added for further illustration, the acts of the publike Confistorie in this forme of words.

Pope Gregorie the thirteenth, fitting in the Halldefigned for entertaynment of Kings, and their Embaffages on the three and twencieth of March, 1,88, in the morning, in a most ample Session of the Cardinals of the Holy Romane Church, and in a great assembly of Princes and Prelates with greatest industry, and most frequent attendance of all Orders: Man- 10 tim and Michael (who was also of the Prince of Omar) two Legates of Iaponian Kings, were brought in, and one of the two laponian companions of the same Embassage, of principall Nobilitie, to wit, Martine, for Iulian the other of them was withholden by licknesse.) After folemne adoration of the Pope, and the kisses of his blessed feet, received of him with great demonstration of beneuolence and charitie, they went aside into a place appointed them with great modeffie. Afterwards, the Letters of the Kings which they had brought are publikely read, being translated out of the Iaponian Tongue into the Italian, and thence into the Latine, First, that King of Bunges of Francis King of Bunge, who therein professeth the Disine bountie in Sending the lesisites foure and therite perset person into the parts, who see seed had taken some rooting in his breast, which hee a scribes to the Popes prayers and merits.
